The Department of Grain Science and Industry will be offering baked goods to visitors, including doughnuts, breads and cheese puffs, Riley said.

The college is also giving away irradiated strawberries for the guests to sample, and the Throckmorton greenhouses will be open to the public, which is a rarity, he said.

Agnes Elzinga, student services specialist for the College of Education, said the carnival theme is quite evident in her college's activities.

Elzinga said the college is offering a variety of games and prizes, as well as a math contest designed for different age levels.

Children's stories will be read, and there will be a computer demonstration on gifted-education activities.

One of the highlights, Elzinga said, will be Amanda's Jumping Pandas, where children from the Amanda Arnold Elementary School will perform gymnastics in costume.

The College of Human Ecology will also offer contests, such as the egg-slipping competition, "which is just fun," said Virginia Moxley, associate dean of academic affairs.

Participants in the contest break eggs into a skillet, fry them, then throw them into the air and try to catch them without breaking the yolk, Moxley said.

In addition, the college will distribute "fat bucks," play money which visitors can exchange for food, with the amount depending on the fat content of the food.

An automobile roll-over demonstration will take place every 15 minutes, where a car will be rolled over to show the safety advantages of seat belts.

Visitors can win "business bucks" from the College of Business Administration by playing putt-putt or "Business Jeopardy."

The college is also raffling off season football tickets.

Representatives of various area businesses will be on hand to inform students of career opportunities, said Dann Fisher, assistant professor of accounting.

The College of Arts and Sciences is offering a great variety of activities, from a tour of the KSDB-FM 91.9 radio station to tightrope-walking rats.

Student art will be on display; the chemistry department will put on a magic show, and the military science department will be offering weapons firing and rappelling demonstrations.

K-State-Salina is giving presentations on electronic mapping, airplanes of the future, and visitors can purchase raffle tickets and win a chance to take a 30-minute flight for three with one of the college's pilots, said Kim Dahlsten, coordinator of the Salina open house.

Programs of the day's events are available in the K-State Union, throughout Manhattan campus and at the Salina campus, as well.

Open house boosts local business

"We just try to put on a good face and give everyone a good welcome when they come in."

DEAN TAYLOR
OWNER OF THE PALACE

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

This weekend, Manhattan will be invaded by visitors from across the Midwest.

K-State's All-University Open House is an opportunity for the University to show future students and their parents what it has to offer. It not only benefits the students and the University, but it also helps local businesses.

Dean Taylor, owner of the Palace, said Aggieville fills up during Open House weekend.

The Palace does not do anything in particular to attract K-State visitors to their business, Taylor said.

"We just try to put on a good face and give everyone a good welcome when they come in," he said.

Taylor's building has been in Aggieville since 1929. It was originally a drugstore. Students used to meet here to socialize, he said.

During Open House weekend, many alumni just stop in the store to reminisce about the old times, he said.

"Open House is as good of an alumni event as Homecoming weekend," Taylor said.

Other businesses in Aggieville see increased traffic flow in their stores, but not necessarily more business.

Jon Levin, manager of Varney's Book Store, said that during Open House weekend, there is not much difference in their business volume.

"Business-wise, it's typical of other Saturdays in March or April," Levin said.

"It's kind of a trade-off," he said. "We miss out on students because they're so involved in Open House activities, but we do get in the people from out of town."

Other businesses in Manhattan that expect to be busy during the weekend are the restaurants.

Derek Christensen, kitchen manager of Applebee's Grill & Bar, said they will be packed from open to close.

"We opened about two weeks after last year's Open House," he said.

But whenever there are many people in town, such as for Parents Weekend or game days, the restaurant is packed, Christensen said.

Local hotels are also full for the weekend.

Ronnie McDaniel, executive assistant manager for Ramada Inn, said the hotel is usually booked a year in advance for Open House.

"Since we're right across the street, our location is a natural draw," she said. "We certainly appreciate the presence of the University."

K-State representatives encourage student visits

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

This weekend, K-State will be strutting its stuff to impress students visiting for All-University Open House.

Many of the visiting students come here because of encouragement from the University's admissions representatives.

Throughout the year, these representatives travel across Kansas to visit high schools. They meet directly with students to inform them of opportunities at K-State, and they keep in contact with those who are considering attending the University.

"We encourage students to come to campus," Todd Huck, admissions representative, said. "Open House is a good time to come."

Jan Puls, admissions representative, said she agrees that Open House is a good time to visit the University.

"The biggest impact of Open House is that it gives some students a chance to see the campus for the first time," she said. "It's a real positive look at K-State."

Students who visit Open House are at various stages in deciding on where to go to college.

Some are sophomores or juniors who are just beginning to look at colleges, while some are seniors finalizing their decision about what to major in, Puls said.

Admissions representatives will be available to students during Open House. They have arranged a reception from 7:30-9 a.m. for out-of-state visitors.

"A lot of out-of-state students are not familiar with the K-State campus," Huck said.

The reception will give students a chance to meet with current students from out of state, who identify with the challenges of going to school far from home, he said.

Admissions representatives will also set up a booth at the K-State Union during Open House.

Campus tours will start at their booth, and the representatives will be accessible to answer questions about admissions and other concerns.

One advantage of visiting K-State during Open House is that the entire University is open, Puls said.

"Students are excited to come up and spend time at K-State," she said.

A weekend of jalapenos, golf and beer

Two-day party will be kicked off by golf tournament

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

A torch-lighting ceremony and party tonight will welcome all guests to the fifth annual Scott Carter Celebrity Pro-Am Golf Tournament April 3 at Cedar Hills Country Club. The festivities kick off Manhattan's annual Jalapeno Fest.

This is the second year Andy Wurtenberger, junior in electrical engineering, has organized the fest.

"I took part in it the first three years, and I have planned the last two. Maybe we can get someone to carry it on after I graduate," he said.

The Jalapeno Fest is a two-day party that includes a jalapeno-eating contest, beer olympics and a nine-hole golf tournament.

"My roommate is Todd Carter, and the golf tournament is named after his brother for some reason," Wurtenberger said.

Eighty-five to 90 invitations were mailed, with the farthest one going to Florida. He said he estimated 150-200 people will show up for the festivities.

There will be 54 golfers participating in the beer golf tournament, he said.

This is the second year that the fest organizers requested sponsorship from local merchants.

This year's sponsors are Dean's Liquor and a Miller beer distributor, Miller High Life.

Dean's Liquor has sponsored the party the last two years. Dean's Liquor supplies a large carbon dioxide system to hook up to the beer kegs, which eliminates the use of taps and keeps the beer free flowing.

"They learn each year how to better the next year and to make it run smoothly. They learn how not to get in trouble and to plan activities that everyone will enjoy," Kent Dean, owner of Dean's Liquor, said.

Children learn to copilot aircraft

"It may take two or three flights, but they'll all get to go."

TECHNOLOGY

Young Eagles program teaches the basics of flight

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Children, 9 to 15 years old, will have an opportunity to copilot an airplane today as part of the All-University Open House at the K-State-Salina campus.

Ken Barnard, head of aeronautical technology, said K-State-Salina has received approval to offer the Experimental Aircraft Association's Young Eagles program.

Barnard said K-State is the first

University in the nation to be allowed to participate in the program as a non-member.

The Young Eagles program is intended to give children a positive experience with flight and get them excited about a career in aviation, Barnard said.

The association hopes to eventually put 1 million young people in the air through the program, he said.

Barnard said 20 children first will receive a briefing on the controls and how to operate the aircraft. To complete their ground training, they must then pass a safety inspection.

Finally, the youths get to help a K-State-Salina pilot fly one of four single- or twin-engine, four-passenger planes for 30 minutes.

To commemorate the experience, he said, the children will receive certificates and photographs of themselves standing beside the planes they flew in.

Barnard said the original plan was to offer the flight opportunity to 20 children, but those openings were snatched up less than one hour after the program was announced.

More youths will be taken into the air at a later time, he said.

"We'll get everyone who's interested up," he said. "It may take two or three flights, but they'll all get to go."

Architecture alumni honored for success

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Four alumni of the College of Architecture and Design were honored Thursday in Kansas City, Mo.

Joan Cannon, Linda Cleland, Tom Phillips and Annette Shaver have been named as the college's 1993 Alumni Honorees. They will be in town today and Saturday to take part in the Open House activities.

Diane Potts, director of business and administrative services, said the college has named the honorees annually since 1986. They are selected from the class that graduated 10 years previous to the award.

"We strive to achieve some diversity among the honorees," Potts said.

She said the program has several purposes.

"One of the purposes is to have the honorees serve as role models for the students," she said.

"The success of the honorees reinforces our faculty and strengthens ties between alumni and the college."

She said another purpose is to recognize outstanding alumni from various degree programs in the college.

All four Alumni Honorees have been active in architecture and design since they graduated in 1983.

Cannon is currently senior designer and project manager with Crosby, Helmich, Frye and Drake of San Francisco.

Cleland is now associate planning manager for Nolte and Associates Inc. of Sacramento, Calif.

Phillips is currently teaching part-time in the College of Human Ecology and the Department of Regional and Community Planning.

Shaver is now employed as an architect by William Turnbull Associates of San Francisco.

The honorees were recognized at a reception Thursday by alumni and friends at the College of Epperson House on the University of Missouri-Kansas City campus.

They will be meeting with students and faculty today and Saturday.

"We're very excited to have these honorees with us for the next few days," Potts said.

HOUSING

Looking for a place to live

"Last year, we had parents and a lot of kids that benefited from the information we handed out."

HEATHER BRADEN
RESIDENT

NICOLLE FOLSOM

Collegian

If prospective K-State students are coming to Open House to find a place to live, they are in luck.

All of K-State's housing options will be represented, and all of them will be offering tours.

"We're going to have a scrap book that will show pictures and activities of the hall throughout the year," Heather Braden, sophomore in chemistry, said.

Braden, a Moore Hall resident, said Open House gives students and parents a chance to ask a variety of questions.

Living arrangements in coed dorms was one of the biggest questions that was asked last year, she said.

Brochures are also a good way of relaying information to potential residents. They cover all aspects of on-campus housing, Braden said.

"Last year, we had parents and a lot of kids that benefited from the information we handed out," she said.

All of the residence halls and Jardine Terrace Apartments will share three tables at open house, where students representing each facility are present throughout the day to answer questions, said Alex Delgadillo, coordinator of leadership development for the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

"I think it's a way to get a student's perspective," he said.

In addition to the activities in the K-State Union, the residence halls are providing a shuttle that makes a trip around campus and then stops at the halls where tours are offered, Delgadillo said.

To measure the success of the Open House projects, surveys are done so the residence halls can gain feedback, he said.

Greek housing is heavily involved in Open House as well.

"We'll have a Greek Affairs booth, and every sorority and fraternity will be open," Barb Robel, advisor for Greek Affairs, said.

Brochures about chapters, rush processes, financial information and rush applications will be the table's main feature. All of the houses will also be welcoming tours, she said.

Although greek housing is represented by Greek Affairs, some sororities and fraternities sponsor their own tables, Robel said.

Kappa Delta sorority is sponsoring a table in the union complete with balloons and a display of KD paraphernalia, including sweatshirts and brochures with background information, said Lisa Johnson, junior in accounting and KD member.

"With the decreasing numbers of women going through rush, we wanted to increase awareness of sororities and especially our house," she said.

Glenn Herrmann, sophomore in animal science and member of Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity, said the AGR house will not have a specific booth, but they will be offering tours.

"We mainly show people around the house, tell them what it's about, what leadership roles we take on campus," he said.

Scholarship houses and housing cooperatives are getting ready to host prospective members as well.

Smurthwaite Scholarship House is sponsoring a table and tours.

"It's to give them a general idea about what Smurthwaite is about," said Amy Teagarden, junior in pre-veterinary medicine and Smurthwaite cultural chairwoman.

Clovie 4-H House and Smith Scholarship House are both sponsoring tables and offering tours as well.

Michael Armatys, junior in electrical engineering and recruiting chairman of Smith, said the members of the house would do anything they could to help out potential recruits.

"We'll have brochures, applications, and we might have a few of our scrapbooks," he said.

Exhibition features art work of professors

DAVE OLSON

Collegian

Two K-State professors will have their work on display in Manhattan's Strecker Gallery throughout April.

Judy Love, assistant professor of art, James Jones, associate professor of architecture, and Dean Mitchell, an Overland Park artist, will be at the gallery to discuss their work at a reception tonight from 5 to 7.

The exhibition is titled "Small Works" because all the paintings measure fewer than 100 square inches.

Julie Strecker, owner of the gallery, said Love's work is done in pastels and features abstract Kansas landscapes.

"My main emphasis is on color — the feeling of the piece," Love said.

Jones also paints Kansas landscapes. However, he works in watercolor, and his work is more realistic, Strecker said.

She said she believes Mitchell's watercolors are also very realistic, and his subjects are mostly houses and buildings.

Jones and Love both said they are looking forward to the exhibition.

"I'm pleased to exhibit with Dean Mitchell," Love said.

"He does excellent work."

Jones said he expects the exhibition to be a success.

"I think it's going to be a good show," he said.

Strecker said because the paintings are all small, they are relatively inexpensive to purchase. She stressed, however, that the reception is not only for those interested in buying the art.

"I have no objection to people buying the art, but it's an informal social occasion," she said.

"You can mingle with the artists, have a glass of wine or a piece of cheese — people pretty much come and go as they please."

The small works will be on display through May 1 at the Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave.

Iowa brings us Candy

MEGANNE MOORE

Collegian

Iowa doesn't normally come to mind as having a rocking, live alternative scene. That is, until Head Candy.

Head Candy brings a plethora of images and ideas of sex, drugs and screaming guitars for the mind and ears.

The Iowa City quartet's sound has been compared to that of Soul Asylum and Hüsker Dü. The band is famous for a guitar-altering sound, adding to their uniquely twisted approach to music.

Head Candy's aggressive presence is not new to the past love for the popularized bands in the "grunge" movement.

Formerly of Iowa City's Hollowmen, Mike Sangster, lead vocalist and founder of the band, linked up with Dangtrippers guitarist Doug Roberson, forming the need for their kind of candy, Head Candy.

Not long after the band's 1989 formation, they won the University of Iowa's 1990 Riverfest Battle of the Bands. This landed them $5,000 and free studio time. After their first compact disc was produced, Link snatched them up to inhabit their present record label.

"Starcaster," their first compact disc, released in the summer of 1991, brought this small city band into the spotlight for their distinct, ear-wrenching, trippy sound.

Blending mellow wailings with adrenalin-rushed guitar chords, this CD drips with heavy sounds on tunes like "In the Night Kitchen" and "Soul Grinder."

These jagged melody makers are among the leaders in a refreshing edge to today's quest for a new direction in guitar experimentation. An intertwining of thrashing guitars shoved aside by fuzzy vocals, Head

SHOW TIME

■ Head Candy will play Saturday night at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar.

Candy keeps the punches coming on "Starcaster."

Their first disc has incurred rave reviews and airplay across the country's college campuses. This put them at number nine on Billboard's Top Ten Critics' Choice list in December of 1991 — a list filled with the likes of Nirvana, Hoodoo Gurus and Soundgarden.

In addition to these attributions, Head Candy's video version of "At the Controls" has shown on MTV's alternative rock show, "120 Minutes."

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

"And here we have the enormous gumball machine. Neato, huh?"

Whilst in the K-State Union during spring break (and trying to figure out what to do with the $3.10 in nickels and dimes in change we received from that damn convenient postage stamp machine), we noticed a student evidently giving his family a tour of the facility.

What marvelous aspects of our Union will he show off first, we asked ourselves. The Union Station? The SGA office? The bookstore?

All these establishments were recognized as being obviously much too touristy. Instead, the student made a beeline for the true pride of the Union — the postal weighing machine.

"Look," said the student. "See, this'll tell you how much postage you need and everything. You just punch in the ZIP code."

And there the family unit all stood, jaws agape in amazement, now completely confident that every penny they poured into Junior's education was being spent wisely toward the goal of easier mailing procedures.

God bless America, ladies and gentlemen.

You might as well start passing out the overalls.

Once upon a time, there were some very disillusioned people roaming this state of ours who suddenly got the inspiration to build a theme park.

"But what kind of theme?" they pondered. A World Wrestling Federation theme? No, too intellectual.

Then somebody, way in the back of the room, yelled, "Hey, why don't we build a Wizard of Oz theme park!"

And the disillusioned people said, "Hey, that's a good idea! Hardly anyone from out of state associates Dorothy, Toto and Oz with Kansas!"

And thus, the seed of mass humiliation was born.

The funding drive is now underway for the imminent construction of a $350-million Wizard of Oz theme park to be located in Kansas City, Kan.

"It's the kind of thing Kansas should be promoting," Kansas Senate President Bud Burke said.

Actually, it's the kind of thing we should be avoiding like a knife-wielding rabid skunk. A great book and movie and all, but to cut to the chase, we take enough Oz crap as it is. We don't need a 300-foot Good Witch Of The East Carpet Slide or the Munchkin Ring Toss to feed the fire.

By the way, after that infamous meeting, it was noticed that the person in the back of the room who came up with the idea left in a car with Missouri plates — and was laughing uncontrollably.

Of course, we're not afraid of a little free advertising.

Just a tiny note here to all four of you who bother to read this column. Because we don't trust that flighty event box over the Weekend flag up there, we decided we'd do something we really don't like to do, but we feel it's important.

What we do want you to do is go see the band Head Candy play this Saturday night at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar. We're not getting paid to say this, but these boys from Iowa City are just swell, and it'd be a shame for you to miss 'em because you stayed home to watch a "Get Smart" rerun.

Before you go out and try to track down their current LP "Starcaster," check out what the Gavin Report (the people who provide Rolling Stone with their back page music charts) have to say about Head Candy:

"Listening to Head Candy, I sort of understand why they say Jack Daniels goes down smooth when, in reality, it hits you like a hammer."

Remember, I want to see all four of you out there.

Recipe of the Month. Enjoy.

On those days when the mercury drops to around 15 degrees, the wind is neatly slicing you into equal quarters and the sleet is driving down from the gray heavens and freezing instantly on your face, there's nothing like laying face down in the mud with a cold glass of lemonade.

Try our recipe:
1 cup of sugar
9 squeezed lemons
1 pitcher of warm water
Mix well and think happy thoughts.

Dear Diary,

Layout by Deanna Adams

May 11, 1915 — I must admit that it was only when I began to keep a diary that my ideas began to take shape and pour forth. To whom could I have confided all the thoughts that fill my mind if not to a diary? Confidant that I have, do you intend to keep the heart that I have given you a list of thoughts that I have expressed only to you?

— Anna Nin, poet and author

The secrets of millions rest inside battered wire notebooks, immaculately bound volumes, and adoringly three-ring binders, all tucked away in closets, locked drawers and hidden alcoves, beyond matriarchal eyes.

For centuries, diaries and journals (two words for essentially the same thing) have served as confidants to people of all ages, from all people of the social fabric. For the most part, these books are jealously guarded, and for good reason — it is within these pages that the souls of the writers are laid bare.

Christina Baldwin started keeping a journal in 1960 and, after 33 years and countless filled notebooks, she has become one of the foremost authorities on the art of journal writing, one long journal writing as one of the most basic forms of self-help.

"I believe the mind is trying to have a reason for us with us and help us grow in our own lives. Most of the time, when we're not using introspection, we're like the mind isn't saying anything," Baldwin said from her home in Minneapolis, Minn.

"That's what a journal is — you start to think in the mind and say 'What's going on there?' It gets to be a time to talk to yourself."

In the course of two books — "How to Use Self-Understanding Through Journal Writing" (1977) and "Life's Companion: Journal Writing as a Spiritual Quest" (1991) — and to numerous other books throughout the nation, Baldwin encourages people to use their journals in ways that will help them the most.

A journal is often such an intensely private item that to ask someone you hardly know if they keep one is only second to the outrage of asking them if you can read it.

"I never, ever, ever like to let people read my journal," Tanya Morfoni, a senior at Manhattan High School, said.

Her first journal began in the fifth grade and soon came to a screeching halt, after her mother read it. It is an episode like that that Baldwin would read the premature death of many a journal.

Baldwin noted that outsiders can't easily contribute the utter honesty of a journal, particularly if there is always a chance of such honesty being violated.

"I would say that it takes a lot of courage to be introspective," she said, adding that in the society we live in doesn't value introspection.

Jerry Doocy, junior in social science, agreed, allowing people to read one's diary is a violation. "It'd be like me having a diary and you reading it," she said.

And is not a journal simply that, a journal? Baldwin "take Doocy, who follows an introverted path, as the perspective in which she journals. Rather than a simple log of daily activities, hers is a record of her emotional life and a stream of consciousness character she calls Catherine.

"I will never ever write in my journal the words 'Jerry did this' or 'Jerry did that,'" she said, admitting that this could be a good thing, and the antithesis of journal writing.

"It becomes kind of a crutch. I say, 'Jerry did this' and 'Jerry did that,'" she said.

"I'm not free with my emotions. I'm not free with my mind, my heart, my soul. I'm not free with my mind, my heart, my soul."

Yet Doocy's journal is her place where she can be free. It looks the part — a handwritten journal, a simple log of daily activities, a record of her emotional life and a stream of consciousness character she calls Catherine.

Spike Lee, Denzel Washington mark the spot with 'X'

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

If you can get past the almost three-hour length, "Malcolm X" is worth seeing just to experience the powerful performance Denzel Washington brings to the title character.

Malcolm X's life is thoroughly explored, from the beginning as a hustler, junkie and burglar — from hitting bottom when thrown in jail — to becoming a leader to his people.

It is in jail that he undergoes his conversion to Islam, and his life changes forever. Along with this conversion he begins to rethink his views about himself and how white society has influenced his actions and beliefs.

After he is released from jail, he becomes a ferocious fighter, through Islamic teachings, against whites and their oppression of blacks.

He further discovers that he is the only person among his old friends who survived the traps of crime. He tries to save his old pal, Shorty, who doesn't understand what Malcolm believes.

As Malcolm X's experience grows with the Islamic religion, he continues to fervently oppose whites, especially during long and impassioned speeches to his followers. But his passion pushes too far until he realizes the faults in Nation of Islam's leaders and possible betrayal from some of its members.

He decides to break away from the Nation of Islam so he can, again, rethink his beliefs. This follows a pilgrimage to Mecca in which he realizes the value of humanity outweighs that of racial separation.

Washington's performance impressively follows each extreme change in Malcolm X's life. Malcolm X evolved from a cocky young hustler to an emphatic leader of the Nation of Islam. In the end he becomes less anti-white and more pro-black.

Washington keeps interest alive through all these changes and shows that he deserved that Oscar nomination, if not the Oscar itself.

Of course, director Spike Lee should be commended for his vast research and detail on Malcolm X's life, which helps this exceptional movie. Lee performs just as well as Washington, but on both sides of the camera as director and as Washington's sidekick, Shorty.

Go see this movie, not only to enjoy Washington and Lee's incredible performances, but to understand more about Malcolm X — his life and his passion for human equality.

Journals serve as confidants to many apparent.

"I cannot ever write in my journal when I'm happy, because I have nothing to admit," she said.

Baldwin has seen this scenario before in her seminars.

"A lot of times people tell me they write a lot in pain and crisis but after it is over they don't know what to write," she said, adding that journal writing by no means must be a strict daily ritual.

"When I feel pent up and ready to write, I'll sit and do it," she said. "I follow the creative tension."

For some, it is the availability of time or the significance of events that dictates an entry.

"In the summer, I write a lot more, almost every day," Monforte said.

"More recently, since I've been really busy, only three or four times a month, just if something important happens."

The pressures of the clock are what Baldwin blames for a lull in journal writing among college students.

"Those years, 18-22, are not the most introspective years of your life," she said.

"In college, you're too busy studying what everyone else says. The idea of spending 15 minutes writing one more thing can sound not that appealing."

As an example, Baldwin noted that in her four undergraduate years at Macalester University in St. Paul, Minn., she filled only one notebook, the same amount of writing she covered during only one year in Europe.

Baldwin said she realizes journal writing is not for everyone.

"There are some people who just don't like writing," she said.

"If you can tolerate the idea of writing, I would recommend it. It's the most adaptable form of therapy."

Both Monforte and Doocy recognize this value in their writing.

"Journals make you come to your own conclusions about problems, and that's what writing does," Monforte said.

"I don't talk about my problems—I write about it just so I don't bring anyone else down," Doocy said.

"You just have got to write whatever. I can get pages and pages out of one thought."

Baldwin said she feels journal writing is often unseen or unspoken of, yet prevalent among much of society.

"It is an act that cuts through educational levels, genders, age groups," she said.

"I am constantly amazed at how many people are writing."

ECM SUNDAY FORUM THIS WEEK—APRIL 4 6:30 p.m.

A MURDER. A MYSTERY.
A MOCKERY OF JUSTICE.

What Are The Facts? And What Is The Truth?

In 1975, armed FBI agents legally entered the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Gunfire erupted—a Native American and two FBI agents fell dead. After the largest manhunt in FBI history, three men were apprehended—only one, Leonard Peltier, was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison. This is his story.

From the very beginning, Peltier's case has been dogged with controversy. Were the charges trumped up, was the evidence falsified, were witnesses pressured to change their testimony? Many people, among them some of today's greatest legal minds, believe that Peltier is an innocent man.

Twelve years ago, Robert Redford visited Leonard Peltier in prison. Today, after years of struggle with the FBI and the prison system, he and director Michael Apted ("Gorillas in the Mist," "Coal Miner's Daughter") are able to present INCIDENT AT OGILALA—a riveting examination of the case and the real story of what may be one of the most outrageous abuses of justice in American history.

Candidates remain in race after elections review

SHAWN BRUCE

Student body presidential and vice presidential hopefuls Ed Skoog, Eric Henry, Scott Truhlar and Scott Wissman are still in the race.

But not without a little debate on the part of the 1993 Student Governing Association Elections Committee.

The committee met Wednesday to decide whether Truhlar and Wissman meet the requirements to be listed on the election ballot.

Both of the candidates have applied to graduate in May, with Truhlar accepting a scholarship to enroll at the London School of Economics this coming fall.

Wissman also said he was unsure of his future plans.

Committee Chairperson Mary Farmer, arts and sciences senator and sophomore in history, said several students had expressed concern to her about Truhlar not being at K-State to serve if elected.

"The question we're concerned with is that it's public knowledge you have accepted to go to school in London," Farmer said.

Truhlar refused to give a definite answer on what his plans would be should he win the election.

"It'll have a hell of a lot of impact on my decision (should we win)," he said.

When pressed by committee members for a "yes or no" answer on whether he would be around to serve, Truhlar insisted he was not being flippant but could not give a definite response.

"I can truly not predict where I'll be next year," he said.

Truhlar insisted to the committee that his and Wissman's candidacy is legitimate and that both have the best interests of students in mind.

He also read from the John Stuart Mill book "On Liberty" to those in attendance, drawing their attention to Mill's belief that individuals have a right to do anything without fear of consequences as long as it does not cause harm to others.

When asked by Farmer if his being elected and then not serving would harm students, Truhlar said if they win, the needs of students will be met.

"Scott and I are pre-med majors and the first part of the Hippocratic Oath is, 'Do no harm,'" he said. "Do no harm" is an appropriate credo for our campaign."

The election committee agreed and voted to let Truhlar and Wissman remain on the ballot.

Afterwards, Truhlar and Wissman said if they put up any campaign material, they will list information on it stating that there is a possibility neither would be here to serve.

In other business, the committee decided that Skoog and Henry did not violate the policy against distributing campaign material at residence halls.

rebounding problem made worse by the absence of Davis was compounded when Walters and Jordan went cold and hit bottom in an 80-77 loss to Oklahoma. They were 8-for-26 between them as Kansas saw its streak of 20 straight Big Eight home victories crash to a stop.

Then, despite Ostertag's encouraging 16 points and seven rebounds, Kansas lost 75-71 at Iowa State and ended its 13-game ESPN winning streak.

Temper grew short. Williams had complained the Allen Fieldhouse crowd was not being loud and supportive enough. The next home game was the miserable Oklahoma loss and a contrite coach said, "they cheered a lot better than the players played or the coaches coached."

Not until the final two regular season games did Kansas seem to come out of its swoon.

"We've won 24 games, and we've won the Big Eight championship by three games," said Williams, a smile on his face and an edge in his voice. "And yet, a lot of people think we're having a disappointing year."

"There's a lot of interest in Kansas basketball. Unfortunately, with all that interest comes a lot of expectation."

If you ask for advice, you get it

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have never written a letter to the Collegian, but when I read your response to "Porno Dan" in the April 1 issue, I felt compelled to comment.

If by some chance this "bellyaching fool's" letter is for real, as few in your column are, you have probably done more harm than good.

So, this gentleman's NATURAL urges are a bit misdirected. Is that any reason to kick him in the teeth? He obviously is suffering from low self-esteem. You have only added to it.

I myself didn't "get laid" until I was nearly 19, and it had nothing to do with a "change in my views." Up to that very day, I was still jealous of the other guys, and I was still using pornography and fantasizing about women. So what? I was sexually and emotionally immature at age 18—big surprise.

I have grown a lot since then, and my attitudes toward sex and women are much healthier thanks simply to the aging process. I am also now involved with an intelligent, mature and caring woman. However, I don't believe I could make these claims if, four years ago, I had asked the advice of someone so predisposed to pass judgment rather than lend a hand as you.

Therefore, if you still feel the need to spew your venom, take credit for your insults, for that is what they are, and face your victims in the "free-speech zone." At least then they will have a fighting chance.

Change your ways Cassandra, or stop hiding behind that ridiculous nom de plume and the false pretense that what you write is an "advice" column.

Former Bellyaching Fool

DEAR BELLYACHER,

Porno Dan asked for advice, and he got it. He obviously has a misdirected view about what sex really is. I stick to my advice.

If you had written in for advice when you were an immature, porno-watching 19-year-old, I would have given you the same "venomous" advice.

I wasn't berating him because I was the "first person to come along." Porno Dan asked for my advice and got it. Hopefully, he'll grow up like you did and realize that having good sex with another person entails learning to love and respect them, not watching videos or drooling over every person you see.

Sorry you didn't agree with my advice, but thanks for writing.

funds for anonymous AIDS and pregnancy testing at no charge.

These tests should be included as part of the student health fee, the candidates said.

Increasing the number of bike racks on campus is the third issue on the "Two Tims" platform.

"We want to put more bike racks where you can drive on the street, but put them where you can park your bike without hitting someone on campus," Madden said.

Orindgreff said a permit system could be instituted for bicycles if necessary.

The last issue addressed in the "Two Tims" platform is the on-campus parking situation.

"We feel with the parking problem right now, we don't need to get in deeper," Madden said. "We think the shuttle from Bramlage is a really good idea."

Orindgreff and Madden said they think expanding the shuttle service would be more feasible than creating parking lots.

"The Two Tims" extemporaneously outlined additional changes they would like to see on campus.

"I'd like to see girls in cages," Orindgreff said, laughing.

"And mandatory leather skirts," Madden said.

Orindgreff also unleashed his plan to take away part of President Wefald's lawn.

"We think Wefald has entirely too much grass," Orindgreff said. "We want to make part of his lawn into a car parking lot, or maybe a mud wrestling pit."

"It'd be great. Mud wrestling at Wefald's at 9," he said.

The "Two Tims" said they will spend as much time as possible listening to their constituents in Aggieville.

"We are going to come down to campaign headquarters (Aggieville), lose brain cells and cover our main issues," Madden said.

STEVE HALL FOR CITY COMMISSION

I have spent the last five months talking with many of you about your concerns. What you've told me is that our City debt is too high, our City Commission and City Staff need to be more responsive to your needs, and we need to reduce spending before we increase taxes.

I believe the citizens have a right to know the candidates positions on issues that impact on their quality of life and tax dollars prior to the election on April 6, 1993.

I Believe:

- ✓ The rent abatement to the owners of the Town Center Mall was not beneficial to our community. If allowed to continue, this will take away over $2 million in revenue from Manhattan. I will oppose future abatements.
- ✓ We have a serious youth problem in our City which can no longer be ignored. I believe we should concentrate our interests and money on our youth and reduce our spending in vehicles and competition with private enterprise in the areas of dance, gymnastics and ceramics.
- ✓ Any major expenditure which directly leads to increased tax rates must be put to a public vote. Public programs only work with public support and approval.
- ✓ Before future growth places more demands on our Fire and Police Departments, we must insure that they are properly staffed, paid and equipped with a First Responder Unit.

I ask for your vote on Tuesday, April 6, 1993 so that I may work for you. "You" pay the bills - and you deserve the best representation possible. If you have any questions of myself or my program, please call me at work - 776-6864 or at home 537-8787

In a debate at Goodnow Hall Wednesday night, Skoog gave two campaign fliers out. One went to fellow candidate Fred Wingert while the other went to Collegian reporter Bryan Larson.

Skoog said both parties had requested the flier.

"I don't think it's a violation," he said.

Farmer said a student who had attended the debate had asked her to investigate.

Larson told the committee he had indeed asked Skoog for the information.

"I didn't see him hand it to anybody else," he said.

Farmer also said she had talked to Wingert's running mate, Jeff Peterson, who also attended Wednesday night's debate.

Peterson told Farmer he had not seen any distribution of campaign materials.

With that information, the committee voted unanimously that Skoog and Henry did not violate campaign policy and would remain on the ballot.

Hearings postponed until fall

"It seems like a good idea to take a step back,"

Speech-pathology supporters hire law firm to ensure fairness

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

Discontinuance hearings scheduled to determine the fate of the K-State speech-pathology program have been postponed until the fall.

The hearings, originally scheduled to begin today, were postponed for a number of reasons, said Peter Nicholls, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Nicholls said the College Committee on Planning (CCOP) met last week and decided it was uncomfortable about taking on the discontinuance hearings right now.

"It seems like a good idea to take a step back," he said.

Concern was also raised about the membership of the CCOP, Nicholls said.

Seven of the nine members who serve on the CCOP committee also served on the group that made the recommendations for discontinuance of programs.

"There has been some question on whether the CCOP as presently constructed is the appropriate group to sit as the hearing panel for the discontinuance," Ann Smit, associate professor of speech, said.

In order to make sure they receive a fair hearing, supporters of the speech-pathology program have hired the Topeka law firm of Goodell, Stratton, Edmonds and Palmer, Smit said.

"It's solely for the purpose of helping us through the discontinuance hearings," she said. "We want the University to make a fully informed decision."

Smit said the speech-pathology department is currently soliciting donations to pay for the lawyers.

Nicholls said the postponement of the hearings was not related to any legal action.

The Kansas Board of Regents mandated last fall that the on-campus part of discontinuance hearings be completed by November of this year.

The delay in hearings assures that the deadline will not be met.

Nicholls, however, said he perceived that the regents would understand the delay.

"I'm sure the regents are more concerned that we have a procedure that the campus is happy to work under rather than any rigid deadlines," he said.

Smit said the K-State admissions office has enrolled people into the speech-pathology program for the fall.

She also said that, despite perceptions, the elimination of the speech-pathology program is not yet a fact.

"We think it's important enough to fight for a long time to get a fair hearing," she said.

Actors entice audience into action

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

Despite the cold, wet weather and an NCAA semifinal game Saturday evening, Manhattan residents and K-State students and faculty turned out for Chicago City Limits National Touring Company.

For more than two hours, Chicago City Limits performed for and played with the audience.

The opening of the show started with a name-that-tune session of TV-show themes with Doug Nervik on a grand piano. Nervik provided the music for the musical skits and background music.

After that, the troupe only picked up speed and didn't leave anyone behind.

Chicago City Limits explained the plan to the audience at the beginning of the show — there was no plan. When an idea was needed, the actors would pause and audience members filled in the blanks.

The element of audience participation kept the show going in different directions, and the actors used it without skidding off track.

About 25 percent of the show was planned and rehearsed. There were short skits, such as the chess match of the century, pitting Bobby Fisher against Amy Fisher.

Small musical skits were done on topics such as Officer Stacy Koon of the Rodney King beating trial and the LAPD riot squad. Billy Joel's "The Longest Time" was used in a piece about the Democrats in the White House again.

Perhaps the funniest skit was a play on the Jeopardy game show. The audience picked three occupations for the contestants and four categories for the contestants.

The audience provided the answers for the topics of cows, Madonna, giblets and dead presidents. The three contestants — a podiatrist, a sheep herder and an elementary school teacher — tried to keep up with answers such as udders, leather, Rocky Mountain Oysters and Ronald Reagan.

For the curious who didn't make it, "what is a synonym for mumbles?", what is not a sheep by-product?, what is the original title for John Denver's hit song?

and who is the only president who qualifies for this category from the neck up?" are the correct questions for the above answers.

Chicago City Limits didn't completely depend on audience participation but worked with and encouraged it. The audience

Heavy overcast conditions and continuous drizzle did not prevent Manhattan residents from attending African Night Saturday at Manhattan Middle School.

"The attendance was marvelous," said Sandy Mothee, junior in business and vice president of the African Student Union.

The crowd feasted on dishes from various countries across the continent of Africa before attending the cultural show.

Dishes included dumplings, which are common to the continent of Africa, mandazi from Tanzania, which is coconut milk mixed with flour, fried Samosas from East Africa, which is meat-mixed flour paste, chicken stew with pounded yam and sweet potato com-

INTERNATIONAL WEEK OPENS WITH AFRICAN DRUMMING

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

International students at K-State will celebrate International Week starting Monday.

The purpose of the week is to familiarize the campus community with different cultures of international students, Joan Parker, office assistant at the International Student Center, said.

The opening event will be African drumming and dance by African Student Union at noon Monday in the K-State Union Courtyard.

Highlights of the week include cultural exhibits, a martial arts demonstration by Chinese students and an international fashion show.

Parker said although all international week celebrations are special, added features to this year's celebration include the poetry competition and international night.

"We had these years ago but suspended them for a while," she said.

"We decided to bring them back this year."

The final event of the week will be international night, coordinated by international club, from 6 to 11:30 p.m. Saturday, at Manhattan City Auditorium.

An international dinner will begin the evening, followed by entertainment activities including cultural shows and dancing.

The high point of the evening is expected to be the presentation of awards to the poetry contest winners. The final hour will be dancing, with the audience invited to share the dance floor.

Parker said it is important to understand the world is home to everybody, and the more people learn about one another, the less afraid of one another they will be.

AMERICAN INDIAN ACTIVIST SPEAKS TO PACKED HOUSE

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Audience members sat on the floor and in the aisles as 260 people packed into the Union Little Theater to hear Russell Means, co-founder of the American Indian Movement, speak on Friday.

Means, a member of the Oglala Nation and resident of the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota, touched on several issues that face American Indians.

American Indians have been expendable since 1492, when Columbus said they would make good slaves because of their kindness, Means said.

"We are still in the way — ask the Navajo," he said.

Navajo Indians who are self-sufficient are being relocated by the Federal government because they live on a bed of coal, Means said.

Lies about American Indians, still taught by educational institutions, do not help the struggle, he said.

American Indians know how to build civilizations because they listen to the environment, Means said, yet they are still stereotyped as savages.

"It amazes me how European-Americans can treat Native Americans," Andy Price, sophomore in pre-nursing, said.

Price said what happened to American Indians is a holocaust, comparable to that of Nazi Germany.

Job search month to target freshmen

April has been designated Job Search Awareness Month at the Career Planning and Placement Center in Holtz Hall.

"The job search should begin when a student is a freshman, instead of waiting until the senior year," Sara Doornbos, career adviser at the center, said. "Job search should encompass all four years."

A Dress for Success Workshop will be presented by Taco Bell from 3:30-5 p.m. Tuesday in the Union Big 8 Room. Models will show clothing provided by Woody's Ladies Shop and Lowman's, Manhattan, she said.

"This workshop gives suggestions on dressing for success all of the time, and how to do that with limited funds," Doornbos said.

Clothing for the job and social events of the job will be featured, with less emphasis on typical interview suggestions, she said.

Anyone may attend the workshop.

Three other workshops, each an hour long, will be presented during the week. They are Resume Building at 6 p.m. Tuesday in Union 207, Securing Federal Employment at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in Union 207, and Job Search Strategies at 7 p.m. Thursday in Holtz Hall.

Little American Royal gives arena for showmen

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

A four-ring circus took place in the Weber Arena Saturday afternoon when the 65th annual Little American Royal was held in conjunction with the All-University Open House.

Five species of animals were shown in four arenas. The species were swine, beef, horses, sheep and dairy animals.

Participation in this year's LAR was up from last year. Kate Reilly, senior in agricultural business and LAR secretary, said this year's 114 entries were about 30 more than last year.

"This year we publicized it more and publicized it earlier. We started talking to the freshman classes last semester," she said.

Rex Hendrickson, senior in animal science, served as president of the 1993 Little American Royal.

"The LAR is a way for students to interact with each other. It is for student showmen who use University animals," Hendrickson said. "They must fit and train the animal to lead. Because University animals are used, the competition is not based on conformation."

Many of the participants have shown animals for several years and enjoy the LAR because it gives them the chance to show again.

Rob Ames, junior in animal science, showed a Hereford heifer in the beef competition this year.

"In the past I've been involved in the LAR committee with planning and coordinating the event, so I haven't been able to show. Showing is something I enjoyed doing in 4-H. I haven't shown since I was in high school," Ames said.

Nelson Hager, junior in animal science, won grand champion in the sheep division at the LAR this year.

"I have shown all of my life through 4-H. This is the first year I have been at K-State. I thought the LAR would be a good learning experience and a lot of fun because I love competition," Hager said.

The LAR takes hours of work to prepare the animals for competition. To prepare, Ames worked with his heifer six different times for about three hours each time. Ames said competitors had a choice between showing a heifer or a bull in the beef division, but either required work.

"A bull is bigger and more used to getting his way. Heifers tend to be more stubborn," Ames said.

To prepare for competition, Hager spent every day for the last two weeks with his ewe.

"How much time I spent each day depended on my time available and my attitude — our attitudes. We had our good days, and we had our bad days," he said.

After working with the animal, the competitor must know how to show it for the judge.

"The judge is looking for you to set her up and walking the animal, making her look her best. In the showman, the judge is looking for poise, confidence and intensity," Ames said.

"It is easy to be too intense, too nervous. You just need to be relaxed and bring out the best in the animal."

The LAR also had a team competition this year. Teams consisted of four or five people. At least three of the species had to have been shown by the team members.

The top four competitors on each team were scored, with points given for placement in each class. Additional points were awarded to team members who won reserve or grand champion in their species. The Fab Five II composed of Hager, Matt Schweer, sophomore in animal science, Jason Larison, freshman in agricultural education, Jodi Jamieson, junior in animal science, and Kristin Hodgson, sophomore in biology, won the team competition.

Awards were given to every competitor in the individual competition. Additional honors were given in categories other than showmanship.

"Everybody gets a ribbon, no matter how they place," Hendrickson said.

Your Q. & A. about Student Financial Assistance

Q. I've heard there are changes in financial aid eligibility for the Fall - 1993 and Spring - 1994 award year. What does this mean to me as a financial aid applicant?

A. Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 took place in July, 1992 and will regulate all financial aid programs until 1997. The maximum Pell Grant for 1993-94 is funded at $2300 and the minimum at $400. Overall, a decreased level of eligibility for grants will be the norm replaced by a higher level of eligibility for low interest loans.

Q. What type of low interest loans are available to financial aid applicants?

A. In addition to the regular Stafford Loan, a new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan is available to all students regardless of income levels. The annual limits under the Stafford Loan program have also changed:

$2625 for first year students $3500 for second year students

$8500 for graduate/professional students after 10/1/93

If you do not borrow the annual limits under the Subsidized Stafford Loan, you may be eligible to borrow these amounts under the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program. If you have a question regarding your eligibility, you are encouraged to make an appointment with a financial aid counselor by calling 532-6420.

Q. What if my parents want to borrow for me?

A. You must be a dependent student for financial aid purposes in order for your parents to borrow through the PLUS Loan. The parent loan allows one of your parents to borrow up to the cost of your education minus any other financial aid you may receive. Previously, parents were limited by a $4,000 cap for each student attending college. Your parents may call or write the financial aid office to inquire about the PLUS loan. The address is: Student Financial Assistance, 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. How do I know if I will receive the Pell Grant or loans?

A. Your 1993-94 Award Letter will show your eligibility for grants and loans. It is possible for all students both dependent and independent to receive low-interest loans once your Free Application for Federal Student Aid is received by the financial aid office. Congress has made changes to help students regardless of income levels; however, the shift to personal responsibility for educational expenses is a direct impact of the Higher Education Amendments for 1992, and will be reflected in students' awards for 1993-94.

Buying security for Russia

THE ISSUE

The chance for democracy to take hold in Russia is fading quickly.

WE SUGGEST

The United States should carry through with its proposed aid package.

As Boris Yeltsin struggles to maintain power, one thing becomes abundantly clear.

The United States must do everything in its power to make sure he does.

Yeltsin is facing the biggest crisis of his presidency, so far. Hardline communists left over from days not so far gone are considering impeachment and are attempting to slow down Yeltsin's reform plan.

To be certain, hardliners still retain a fair amount of power. However, it's a power based on the idea that the past is less scary than the future. When you're facing runaway inflation, poor medical care and in some cases, hunger, the good days of communism may look better and better.

That's where the United States needs to step in.

By providing the proposed $1.6 billion in loans and grants to the former Soviet Union, the United States goes a long way towards giving Yeltsin the power to stabilize the Russian economy.

By providing medical supplies and food, the United States gives Yeltsin the tools to care for his own people.

A $215-million piece of the aid goes to dismantling Russian nuclear submarines, bombers and missiles and other nuclear safety programs.

The message of democracy rings a lot louder when your belly is full and your children are healthy.

It will be expensive, and there are no guarantees Yeltsin will succeed, even with massive U.S. aid. But his odds of success will improve significantly if the United States makes the sacrifice.

We can't afford the alternative.

JOHN HAWKS

"The waiting game" can easily become "the crying game" as students fail to find a space in time for class."

Parking schmarking

There is no doubt that there is a parking problem on this campus. The problem is not, however, in the number of spaces available but in the minds of us, the students.

During the years, as students valued automobiles more and more, the powers that control parking made it easier for students to use them. They made it possible for students to park on campus, and eventually they allowed freshmen to have cars. These changes were, in my opinion, a mistake.

It seems odd to me that we live on a campus where a student would move out of the residence halls so that he or she could park closer to campus. Yet, this is the case.

It also seems odd to me that hundreds of students are willing to play roulette each morning, braving possible accidents, to find a parking space on campus. "The waiting game" can easily become "the crying game" as students fail to find a space in time for class.

It seems odd to me that there are only three bike lanes on campus. There are only two ways for me to legally cross campus on my bike, and if crows flew in patterns like those, they would quickly go extinct.

It seems odd to me that people are willing to pay $50 or more a year for a space that is not guaranteed to be there.

It seems to me the solution to these problems is not to make more parking spaces available on campus. People are by nature lazy, and making parking easier will inevitably encourage more people to drive. There is an upper limit to the number of parking spaces we can have on campus. So, if we make more spaces available, eventually we will face the same problem. For this reason, a parking garage, adding a fraction to the total number of spaces, is only a temporary solution.

Likewise, a shuttle system will not help much with the current situation. As long as there are spaces on campus, people will cruise around trying to get those spaces. Students think they deserve their money's worth, and that is the closest space to their classes. Students will assume everyone else will use the shuttle, and they can have the parking spaces left on campus.

To make any permanent solution work, we must eliminate on-campus parking. I fear students will reject this alternative out of hand, because everyone wants to be as lazy as possible. But I feel the best solution, for a number of reasons, is to get rid of cars on campus. My reasons are as follows:

1) Opportunity — Mid-campus Drive will be closed next year for the Farrell Library addition. Living without it will give us a great opportunity to plow it up, along with other unnecessary roads. Access should be left only for services and for disabled students.

2) Aesthetics — Cars on campus are ugly and cause pollution. We can replace the concrete and blacktop with green areas, bike paths and space for new buildings.

3) More spaces — There is plenty of space for thousands of cars just north of campus in the Bramlage Coliseum lot and in Lot B-3. Most of this space is unused. Students and faculty — yes, faculty can hoof it, too — will be guaranteed a spot. A shuttle system can then work, because there won't be pressure not to use it.

4) You Have Feet, You Know — I don't know how many times I have seen people jogging in the morning, only to drive to class later. Give me a break. The same goes to those who are dropped off to class by their boyfriend or girlfriend, blocking traffic. We can all walk or bike to class, except for some disabled students, and there is already a shuttle system for them.

Finally, when we make this change, we should reduce the price of a parking permit significantly — perhaps to $5. We have been scalped for permits, without being guaranteed a space, and have been ticketed relentlessly for years. It is time for that to stop.

This is the best solution to the parking problem I can think of. If you disagree, then I challenge you to go on campus at night, when there aren't any cars, and see how beautiful it is. Imagine it without the parking lots, and I am sure you will be convinced.

And perhaps we can spend more time as students and less time as commuters.

READERS WRITE

TEACH VS. RESEARCH

Good scholars abound here at KSU

Editor,
In his three columns titled "Sink or sink," which appeared in the March 29-31 Collegian, Professor David MacFarland makes two erroneous assumptions in claiming that the College of Arts and Sciences at K-State rewards good researchers, but not good teachers.

MacFarland assumes that scholars who contribute in the arts, sciences, humanities and other professions are not effective teachers. I believe they are often among the very best.

Indeed, every one of the University Outstanding Undergraduate Teaching Award winners I personally know is an outstanding scholar as well.

MacFarland also assumes that the College of Arts and Sciences only considers research in decisions regarding both tenure and promotion. He has it wrong. Excellence in teaching and research is expected for approval in all cases. The standards are clearly set out in the Faculty Handbook.

It is true the one cannot reach the top rank of full professor at K-State without being a nationally recognized scholar. But who would have it any other way?

David Kromm

Christian Scientists have faith in healing

Editor,
It is unfortunate Kelly Klawonn's column, "Putting the world on trial," in the March 3 Collegian attempted to link two unrelated, highly-charged emotional issues — spiritual treatment in lieu of medical care for children and the withholding from society of vital information about AIDS prevention.

Sadly, the first portion of the article misstates the teachings of the Christian Science religion.

Christian Scientists accept the Biblical assurance that God is love, and find evidence of that love throughout the Bible in the healing of the illnesses and injuries of big and little children, and in Christ Jesus' compassion for the little ones. He even admonished adults to become more childlike if they would find heaven. This leads to the conclusion that God's will could not include harm to or death of a child.

Some Christian Science families have been relying only on God for their care for five generations. Their success has resulted in thousands of published testimonies, many with medical documentation, attesting to the healing power of prayer.

It is because of these experiences, not blind faith in a religious doctrine, that Christian Scientists continue to trust the welfare of their loved ones to God.

RESPONSE

Foster families distorted by columnist

Editor,
I'm not sure what the point of Tom Lister's April 2 column was, but his disgusting caricature of a foster family is a distortion that begs for a rebuttal and an appeal.

Most foster parents I know are conscientious folks whose first priority is helping kids who need care. Most foster children receive more time and attention than do the natural children in a household, because the foster kids come with lots of problems. Problems we don't even like to hear about.

Certainly not all foster homes are perfect refuges, and one can no doubt find examples of foster parents who are not properly suited for the job. But the chances of unfit people becoming foster parents is not great. Foster parents are screened, interviewed and scrutinized to see that they offer a better choice than what a child has been dealing with in his/her natural home.

I would strongly urge anyone who is concerned about the welfare of children who must be taken out of their natural homes to call or visit the Kansas Children's Service League. They have an office in Manhattan, which offers ongoing training and support for foster parents, in addition to coordinating placements.

If more caring people would volunteer their homes for foster care, then the social services people could be more selective in their placement of children. Encourage good people you know to consider being foster parents.

Don't cure the darkness, as they say. Light a candle.

TOWARD SOME ULTIMATE DOG GOAL

J.A.K. GLADNEY

Monday, and the classes are done.

Rain has fallen for consecutive days, exhausting her patience with peace and grace.

These students she sees, scurrying from space to space, from a study session that lasted late, or to an informational meeting on a lost cause, to these few she says Hello. It is her place to be kind and generous, brimming with life. She is the University president's wife and is walking her dogs, two bleached-white curs that are trained not to yip or bite the visiting dignitaries or distinguished alums, or rip to pieces any visitor's furs.

These are the good dogs, the genteel hounds, bred down from wolves, so that in a way, she is walking with wolves, two white beasts on the college-on-the-hill.

The campus buildings are burning with electric light.

She walks by, how dark her shadow's grown, since she stepped out of the residence graciously provided by the state. It's late and nearly dark. The wind is Canadian-blown.

The poodles pull the chain like German Panzers toward some ultimate dog goal, while nearby the cars run sweetly along Mid-Campus Drive.

Wolves, the sheep-eaters that raised Mowgli in Indian jungles, and that are shot from helicopters, and which are bought for biology departments and zoo exhibitions. The president's wife's expeditions with these carriers of wolfen DNA come and go without much fanfare. The poodles are cute and are not prey or predator, they do not ferret for rats or bring down deer or turkeys, although the season for turkeys is coming.

She has seen them scurry along shoulders, she has heard of the giant flocks, back in the hills, gobbling winter wheat. She will not be hunting, will never see a shot turkey. The dogs will not tear into the throat of a gobbler, nor bring one down.

They look like storybook gypsies, she thinks, absconding with children clutched to chest, capes flapping behind until out of sight, banding together for safety, not like these kids lonely shuffling from Union to Gym, from the building with professor's offices to the hollow lecture halls, the bars with gin, to the dorms which are stacked like luggage at the corners of the campus, forgotten.

They do not live in flocks. Their apartments grow dim at twilight, dirty kitchens falling dark.

They become distant from their roommates with each passing semester, the telephone their exclusive conduit to their freshman year.

Their hearts are being broken. Our carillon won't help, she thinks, as the taped bells play.

They are a flock, tended by no one. The shepherds left, lost, unpaid. The University chaplain retired, his seat unfilled, appointment delayed.

And the president's wife stands still at the gate to her back yard. A University custodian, with keys wheels a trashcan down her steps, hard. Such harshness at her home, from a state employee, seems wrong. But here, wrong is a mere idea, a subject to be argued and taught, of no more heft than any other song, of no more weight than a reputation, which like a poodle, is small, tense and mean.

REVIEW

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Mike Sangster, guitarist and lead singer for Head Candy, belts out a song Saturday night at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar. Head Candy hails from Iowa City, Iowa.

Heading straight for the stars

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

Head Candy gave Manhattan listeners a taste of its sweetness Saturday night at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar.

Hailing from Iowa City's musical mecca, Head Candy poured its strong emotion down every guitar chord and lyric.

The band overcame some sound difficulties with the microphones and played to its fullest potential.

Dr. Zeus opened for Head Candy's one-hour, uninterrupted, enthusiastic set.

I'll have to admit I wasn't very excited to review another band, but once into the first song, my attention was immediately captured and kept for the remainder of the evening.

Originally, I had compared Head Candy to Soul Asylum and Hüsker Dü, but the group has a mellower live sound and deserves more praise for its outstanding originality.

The quartet doesn't have a local-band sound listeners have grown bored with in the alternative scene. Head Candy is obviously striving to do something different, to be something different.

Their latest compact disc, "Starcaster," has put the group in the ranks of Nirvana and Soundgarden, not an easy task for most bands in existence for only a few years.

In addition to these credentials, the band has appeared in the Gavin Report as one of the best new alternative bands.

Mike Sangster's fuzzy vocals, combined with the practiced guitar hands of Doug Roberson and Jim Vallet, created an interesting mix.

Although the bar wasn't crowded, those who missed these four guys missed one of the better up-and-coming, local Midwestern bands Manhattan will be graced with hearing for a while.

There are so many great bands out there caught up in the alternative hoopla, and they are sadly overlooked.

Head Candy's performance was an excellent example of a honest intensity to please the eager ears of its audience.

The performance was also another example of a good band missed by too many people — the same people who complain about no live scene in Manhattan.

Head Candy may not be a household name — yet. This doesn't mean it won't hit the height of its career very soon.

STEVE HALL FOR CITY COMMISSION

I have spent the last five months talking with many of you about your concerns. What you've told me is that our City debt is too high, our City Commission and City Staff need to be more responsive to your needs, and we need to reduce spending before we increase taxes.

I believe the citizens have a right to know the candidates positions on issues that impact on their quality of life and tax dollars prior to the election on April 6, 1993.

I Believe:

- ✓ The rent abatement to the owners of the Town Center Mall was not beneficial to our community. If allowed to continue, this will take away over $2 million in revenue from Manhattan. I will oppose future abatements.
 - ✓ We have a serious youth problem in our City which can no longer be ignored. I believe we should concentrate our interests and money on our youth and reduce our spending in vehicles and competition with private enterprise in the areas of dance, gymnastics and ceramics.
 - ✓ Any major expenditure which directly leads to increased tax rates must be put to a public vote. Public programs only work with public support and approval.
 - ✓ Before future growth places more demands on our Fire and Police Departments, we must insure that they are properly staffed, paid and equipped with a First Responder Unit.
- I ask for your vote on Tuesday, April 6, 1993 so that I may work for you. "You" pay the bills — and you deserve the best representation possible. If you have any questions of myself or my program, please call me at work — 776-6864 or at home 537-8787*

NEW ORLEANS — It's the pinstripe suits against the warmups, IBM versus L.L. Cool J, the star program meeting the program of stars.

All these matchups will be under one roof — one very big dome — Monday night when North Carolina and Michigan meet for the national championship at the Superdome in New Orleans. It should be a great game played by two groups of players as different on every level as can be, except talent.

Sunday's Final Four news conferences were perfect examples.

North Carolina went first, and Coach Dean Smith went beyond the rules and brought eight players with him instead of the requested five starters.

"We have eight starters but the rules say three have to be on the bench," Smith said. That was about it for laughs, as Smith and the players tended to business, always talking the team line or straying from the form answers.

Then came Michigan.

Coach Steve Fisher started the 45-minute mass interview alone because the five sophomore starters arrived late.

As Fisher was answering his third question, the five sophomores walked into the large ballroom yelling hello and waving to their coach. The rest of the interview was as relaxed as a team has been on the eve of the NCAA title game since Duke in 1986.

The topics ranged from Fisher's personality away from the court to shaved heads to imaginary conversations. The laughs were plenty and the answers off the cuff.

"Coach Fisher said he would shave his head if we win the national championship," said Chris Webber, drawing a quick spin of the coach's head.

"Yeah, right," Jalen Rose said. "He's already bald."

The style difference is shown before the game as well, when Michigan arrives with plain dark blue warmup shirts while the Tar Heels start to get ready wearing an entire uniform set designed by Alexander Julian.

Even off the court, Michigan players the tie knot pulled tight and the top button buttoned.

"I think I'll get in trouble for anything I say about this, you know, the squeaky clean against the bad guys, if you want to call it that," North Carolina's Eric Montross said after the mass interview.

"At Carolina, a lot of people have thought that we've always done just the right thing at the right time, and we're perfect, and we do everything just right."

"I think that Coach

Smith is just that type of person that he doesn't settle for anything but the image that he has.

"He always makes us shave. We're always clean-shaven. We're always dressed in a suit and tie wherever we go, whether it's going to the airport, on a bus, going out to eat. I think it's just an image that he has because he's a very classy not saying that at all. I think it's just different personalities that a team has and different things they allow them to do."

This game is loaded with talent on both sides, and we've seen it before. Michigan beat North Carolina 79-78 in Hawaii in late December on a last-second rebound basket by Rose.

Webber had 27 points, eight rebounds and five blocked shots in that game, three of the rejections against Montross. Rose had 22 points, and Montross finished with 14 points and 10 rebounds.

For both coaches, this is a shot at national championship No. 2. Smith is in his 32nd season at Chapel Hill and his only title came in 1982 on the same Superdome court being used Monday.

Fisher started his career with a championship, winning it all in 1989 after taking over for Bill Frieder as the NCAA tournament began.

"I am amazed at what they have done," Smith said of Michigan's Class of '95. "They are a year older but to get to two Final Fours, that's a lifetime for most players. I'm pleased our seniors have been able to get to two."

Wildcat lacrosse roughs up Cowboys

K-State tops Oklahoma State 12-1 in steady rain

STEVEN ROCK

The weekend rain didn't stop the Wildcat lacrosse team from having a good time.

K-State beat the Oklahoma State Cowboys 12-1 in a rain-soaked muck bowl Saturday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

"It was really bad out there," team president Curt Thurman said. "It was really sloppy and muddy."

Thurman said that he tried to contact the Oklahoma State team before the game to inform them of the weather conditions, but the Cowboys had already left town.

"It was a disaster out there."

The Wildcats improved their record to 4-2 overall and a perfect 3-0 in league play. The Cowboys dropped to 0-3 in the Great Plains Lacrosse League.

"I knew we were going to kill them," Thurman said. "There wasn't any doubt in my mind. They're not a very experienced team, and they just couldn't compete against us."

"Most of our starters were sitting by the middle of the third quarter," he said. "We had our third-stringers in after halftime. The score could have been a lot worse."

The source of Thurman's knowledge of the Cowboys' futility was a member of the Wichita State lacrosse team who told him Oklahoma State wasn't very good. The Shockers beat the Cowboys 17-1, and K-State beat Wichita State 7-6.

"We were just screwing around out there at the end of the game," Thurman said. "Heck, we were screwing around some in the beginning of the game."

The Wildcats scored early and often Saturday afternoon, posting a 5-0 lead after just one quarter of play. Three of those goals were scored by attacker Tondo Waldron.

"The victory was inevitable," Waldron said.

Waldron, a starter and one of the team's leading scorers, played sparingly in the second half. He said the cold and wet weather may have been worse off the field than on it.

"It's cold when you fall on your face," he said. "And as soon as you get on the sideline, you're freezing to death because you're soaking wet."

But the blowout win gave the Cats a chance to play some of the rookies who don't normally get in.

In an average game, Thurman said, no more than 20 get in the game for K-State. Saturday, all 31 of the players who showed up got to play.

"There haven't been many games here lately where we've been able to throw them in there," Thurman said. "It's always good when you can get some of the rookies in to play some games."

One of the Wildcats who may have snapped a season-long slump is starting attacker Sean Carroll.

Carroll entered the game with no goals and, by his own estimation, 10-12 assists.

"I'd hit the pole about 50 times," Carroll said. "And I'd hit the goalie more than that."

He did more than hit the goalie Saturday, scoring back-to-back goals in the fourth quarter after the Wildcats made a conscious effort to see him score.

"Everyone was just waiting and waiting," Carroll said. "But those two goals were really like the ice-breakers. Now I'm really ready to go."

Carroll said that the poor conditions prevented the Wildcats from having a better game, scoring wise.

"I think that if it had been a better day," he said, "that we really would have put on a clinic."

But not everybody found the conditions unpleasant.

"I thought it was awesome," midfielder Eric Olson said. "We were knocking them all over the field."

"We just went out there and had a really good time."

The game for K-State was the first since the Wildcats spring break trip to Colorado, where K-State posted a 1-2 record against non-conference opponents.

The win over Oklahoma State gave the Cats a chance to tune up for what might be a crucial stretch in conference play.

K-State plays Tulsa at 1:30 Saturday afternoon at Memorial Stadium, then plays host to rival Kansas on April 18.

Tracksters succeed in spite of weather

TONYA FOSTER

The K-State men's and women's track teams had to compete with the weather, as well as other athletes, during the Arkansas/Tyson Invitational track meet this weekend.

Assistant track coach Todd Trask said the weather was a factor in the teams' results.

"It was not a pretty day for a track meet," he said. "We were real happy with the results, and now all we ask is for them to make improvements."

The teams had three members post first places. Francis O'Neill, placed first in the 1,500-meter run with a time of 3:30.67.

Trask said O'Neill ran against good competition.

"He led the field from start to finish and raced with a couple of all-Americans," Trask said.

Paulette Staats placed first in the women's 1,500-meter run with a time of 4:30.75.

Trask said Staats, like O'Neill, ran against all-Americans.

Staats said the meet was a good one for her.

"I was surprised — I didn't think about winning," she said. "I saw the opportunity and went for it. I ran eight seconds faster than the first time this season, so I was happy."

Julie Jackson also posted a first place in the javelin with a throw of 139 feet, 57 inches.

Trask said Jackson did well considering the weather conditions.

"Jackson threw at the worst time," Trask said. "She threw in the morning when the wind chill was 23 degrees and still threw 139 feet against a cross wind, which is difficult."

Nikki Green placed second in the 200 meters with a time of 24.76.

Andre Gillette placed second in the discus with a toss of 170' 6", and Aaron Larson placed third in the javelin with a throw of 198' 11".

Trask said Gillette had a challenging day.

"Andre Gillette had a good throw," he said. "We're real happy because he has a bad ankle, and conditions were really bad."

Randy Helling also placed third in the 800-meter run with a time of 1:51.86.

Trask said he was happy with Helling's performance, and that time is not important yet in the season.

"A 1:51 is good because we're working on endurance, not time," Trask said. "We hope to qualify him for nationals at the KU Relays."

Helling said he, as well as the team, did well in the meet, considering the opposition presented by both the weather and the other teams.

"It rained in the morning and dried up in the afternoon, then rained again towards the end of competition," Helling said. "We did well considering the conditions and the competition — Nebraska, Arkansas and Barton County (Kan.) are good."

Netters beat Cyclones for 2nd conference win

The members of K-State's tennis team were smiling as they departed Cyclone country Sunday night — smiling because they had just won four of their six matches.

Not only did the singles matches swing in the Wildcats' direction, but the three doubles teams went 3-0.

K-State improved its overall record to 5-9, including a perfect 2-0 in Big Eight play.

No. 4 player Amelia Van Der Merwe said she was happy with the overall level of play.

"I think we really did a good job as a team — we played together and there was lots of team spirit," she said.

Van Der Merwe and her partner, Susana Labrador, posted a 6-1, 6-2 win over the Cyclones' No. 1 and No. 4 players in the doubles competition.

"I think it was the best Susana and I have ever played together," Van Der Merwe said. "It was only a matter of time before we started playing better."

K-State's No. 2 player, Suzanne Sim, had a tough day on the court. She fell to Iowa State's Lesley Lewis, 6-1, 7-5.

"I didn't play well at first," Sim said. "Then in the second set, I started to play better, but it was too late."

"The last eight games, I had won five, and she had won three."

"If I would've played like that in the beginning, I could've beaten her."

Sim said she simply needed to concentrate on her game.

"I was down 6-1, 4-1. I started to play how I needed to play to win," she said. "At that point, I needed to work on my game and look forward to the next match tomorrow."

The Wildcats' No. 1 seed, Labrador, beat Iowa State's Kristin Becker, 4-6, 6-2, 6-0.

"She hits the ball very hard, and I couldn't read her at first," Labrador said.

"I got a lot of support from my teammates, and in the end she went down. I had to find myself, then I found my game, and she was in trouble," Labrador said.

Head coach Steve Bietau said he was pleased with the team's performance.

"The start was good," he said. "Everybody was real focused in the beginning. We didn't have any surprises from them today."

"We ended up winning convincingly."

Weather frustrating baseball team

Canceled games could keep Cats out of Big 8 tourney

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Another weekend series for the K-State baseball team meant another washout, as the Wildcats canceled a three-game home series with Iowa State, frustrating both head coach Mike Clark and the players.

"I've never been in this situation," pitcher Dan Driskill said. "I've never seen it rain so much in my life."

The constant downpour on Saturday forced the Wildcats to cancel the first game against the Cyclones, and its muddy aftermath wiped out a rescheduled doubleheader yesterday.

K-State is 8-14 overall and 1-2 in the conference but is tied with Iowa State for the Big Eight lead in washed-out games, with five. This season K-State has had 11 games canceled because of inclement weather.

K-State last played March 28 against Missouri, and one day of outdoor practice since then has left the team frustrated.

"We haven't been able to get in a groove yet," Driskill said. "Every time we start playing well, we get rained out."

Clark said the cancellations have become a concern for his team.

"Baseball is a game that needs to be played a lot," he said. "You need to play day after day to get consistency. The major leagues play a 162-game season. It's real difficult for us to get consistent when you're sitting inside."

Besides lack of playing time, the cancellations are beginning to hurt the team competitively.

The Wildcats must play 20 of their 30 conference games to qualify for the Big Eight tournament in May.

With five conference games already rained out in the past couple of weeks and more rain expected this week, the weather is quickly threatening to cripple K-State's season.

"Some rain-outs are good, especially on the road," Bock said. "But when you lose games at home, that can really hurt."

All five of the canceled conference games were scheduled to be played at Frank Myers Field, and the conference's academic guidelines do not allow them to be rescheduled.

The team went to the field at 8 a.m. Sunday morning to try to repair it before yesterday's rescheduled doubleheader.

"If I had a dollar for every time I had to grab a rake or pound a nail to get the field ready this season..." Clark said.

"It seems I spend more time working on the field than coaching sometimes."

The Cats ended up napalming the infield with gasoline to burn off enough of the water to play.

"This is my second major scorching this season, and I'm proud to say that no one has been burnt yet," joked Brett Bock, a relief pitcher.

"We watch out for each other — there's no pouring gasoline on an open flame, for example. It does work, believe it or not, after a while."

The bonfire dried the infield, but the outfield was still completely soaked by the weekend downpour, and the games were canceled by noon.

Besides the weather, the Cats said that lack of reliable equipment — such as a good rain tarp for the field — is another big obstacle.

"We would have played today if we had a decent tarp to cover the field, but it's 25 years old," Clark said. "Hopefully, the tarp is something that we can address for next year, but right now we've got to work with the material that we have."

Right now, that boils down to the efforts of the team and the groundskeepers.

Clark said the solution to all the cancellations is simple — delay the start of baseball season three weeks.

"It's awfully tough to play a summer sport in winter," he said. "The perfect answer is just to move it back."

But a motion to change the season's starting date recently died in an NCAA rules-making committee, so the weather will likely remain a big facet of K-State baseball in the near future.

The Wildcats travel next to play nationally ranked Oklahoma State Tuesday and Wednesday, but more rain is in the forecast.

"I don't know what to expect," Bock said. "But I'm sure that they won't have to torch the field to get it ready."

AL West gives KC slim chance at title

The wild, wild West — it's the only thing that gives the Royals a chance this season.

The American League West is so wide open, in fact, that the only things you can bank on are that Lou Pinella will bolster his Seattle Mariner club from seventh place all the way to sixth; Bo Jackson will make national headlines for doing relatively nothing, and the California Angels will finish the season with 20-some-odd wins.

And one more thing — the Royals will struggle.

It's fortunate for the Royals that they get to start the season with three games against the Boston Red Sox — a team that might give the Florida Marlins a good game.

The Red Sox are rolling all the offensive dice on 38-year-old Andre Dawson and offer the Royals a chance to pick up more wins in three games than KC did in nearly a month last season.

That's important, because the Royals could never come back from the dismal 1-16 start last season.

But three wins only go so far.

The Royals, the most successful expansion team in major-league history that once had a rich tradition of minor-league wealth, banked on the beautiful free-agency system for the third year in a row.

Don't get me wrong — the Royals needed to spend money. When the best your minor-league clubs can do is the likes of career AAA'er David Howard — whose average is in the .067 range — you need to go outside of your system.

The downside of that, however, is that the club enters each new season with a group of guys who know very little about each other.

It's not as bad as the Colorado Rockies' system, mind you — at the beginning of spring training, the players wore name tags on their jerseys so they knew who they were talking to — but the Royals haven't had time to gel.

And that's why KC is lucky to be playing in the West.

It was only two years ago that the West was considered the strongest division in baseball with all seven teams finishing above .500.

Two long years.

The brunt of the West's struggles focuses on the pitching or lack thereof. In the past two seasons, the West has lost such big-name pitchers as Bret Saberhagen, Jack Morris, Jose Guzman, John Smiley, Jim Abbott and Brian Harvey.

True enough, Kansas City has done its part to bolster the pitching squad, and the Royals have the potential to have the best pitching staff in the division. David Cone and Kevin Appier make as good a 1-2 punch as there is in baseball, save the Atlanta Braves, and as soon as Hipolito Pichardo learns English, the Royals will be set.

But the offensive end is another story.

Not even the acquisition of Felix Jose will keep Kansas City from having one of the worst run-producing teams in the division, if not the entire AL.

The defense is unspeakably better — with Greg Gagne and Jose Lind solidifying the infield — and it's safe to say that both Kevin McReynolds and Wally Joyner will improve on career-worst seasons from last year.

But potential, a word that runs rampant in Kansas City Royal media guides, only goes so far.

Kansas City has set a solid foundation for a competitive team. And the AL West is so wide open that anything can happen.

The Royals continue to be the only team in major-league history never to have finished in the cellar. That worthy note won't be broken this season.

But to think that Kansas City — with a second-year manager, a .220 leadoff hitter, a 40-year-old No. 3 hitter and a Heinz 57 infield — will finish in the upper echelon of the division is, unfortunately, awfully optimistic.

The Royals will follow both Chicago and Minnesota, in that order, in the division.

A year ago, I predicted the Royals to be "scraping the bottom of the AL West." Kansas City finished with a 72-90 mark, in sixth place and 24 games out of first.

Pardon me while I gloat.

Royals enter season with emphasis on pitching, defense

Acquisitions of Cone, Lind, Gagne solidify Kansas City

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — They say pitching and defense lead to pennants. The Kansas City Royals hope for just that.

In their third makeover in as many seasons, Kansas City went for defense this year. In past seasons, the Royals tried hiring a dominant closer who flopped — and tried trading for hitters who produced all of 610 runs — the third-worst total in the American League last year.

"It's a time in our career where we're having a downtime," said general manager Herk Robinson, who starts his third season in charge after another winter of big free-agent signings and other significant acquisitions.

"Every club goes through that at one time or another," he said. "We have worked aggressively to minimize that downtime."

The Royals spent their money on pitcher David Cone (17 victories and 261 strikeouts for the New York Mets and Toronto) and shortstop Greg Gagne. Kansas City also picked up Jose Lind, a Gold Glover at second for Pittsburgh last year.

Just before spring training, the Royals figured they completed their puzzle by sending third baseman Gregg Jefferies, their best hitter last year (his .285 batting average tied George Brett for the team-high) to St. Louis for power-hitting outfielder Felix Jose.

"It's too early to tell," Cone said.

"The key indicators are there," he said. "We have good defense. We know we have some depth in the pitching staff. We think we can score some runs."

"The front office did a great job of restructuring this team. Now it's up to us."

A year ago, Hal McRae, beginning his first full season as manager, took the nonchalant approach to spring training, believing a major-league ballplayer should know what he has to do to get ready for the season.

The 1-16 start that ended the Royals' season early has changed McRae's mind.

Kansas City was expected to win exhibition games this year. McRae had his longtime friend and new third-base coach Steve Boros working with two groups of players each day before regular workouts on baserunning and bunting.

"I'm happy with the way things are going," McRae said. "You don't relax. Last year was my first time around, and I didn't have a good understanding of what had to be done. This time, I understand what has to be done."

Kansas City got good news from the start when Mark Gubicza and Kevin Appier, a 15-game winner last year who has been named the opening-day starter, pitched without evidence of the injuries they sustained last year.

Gubicza in particular was watched closely after he sat out the second half of the season with a shoulder injury.

The rotation figures to be Appier, Cone, Gubicza and Hipolito Pichardo, a surprise nine-game winner in 24 starts last year after making the jump from Double-A Memphis.

The pitchers will throw to a platoon of catchers, Brent Mayne and Mike Macfarlane.

Macfarlane has been the regular for three seasons, but Mayne is better defensively. Macfarlane, a right-handed hitter, will play against left-handers.

The bad news came when Lind, Gagne and third baseman Keith Miller missed large parts of the spring by injuries.

The Royals had counted in particular on Lind and Gagne, a double-play combination coming together from different leagues, getting a lot of work together so they could get comfortable with each other.

But the infield should be solid with slick-fielding Wally Joyner joining the threesome.

Jose has a strong and accurate arm in right field, and Brian McRae has the speed to play spacious center field in Royals Stadium, although his manager-dad will insist he hit better than the .223 average of last year — less than ideal for a leadoff hitter.

The Royals insist left fielder Kevin McReynolds is better defensively than he appears and are hopeful he can stay in the lineup after playing a career-low 109 games last year because of two second-half injuries.

Brett, playing a 20th and likely last year in a Royals uniform, had a hot spring.

He stayed home in Kansas City this winter and took batting practice five days a week at Royals Stadium. He never had hit that much in the offseason, preferring to head home to the golf courses in California.

Hal McRae worked with Brett all spring, hoping for more power from him. Brett had just seven home runs and drove in 61 runs last year.

Closer Jeff Montgomery is fresh off a 39-save season.

Robinson and McRae insist there is enough offense to go with that pitching and defense.

They will find out soon enough — today's opening day match-up with Boston finds their hitters matched up against Boston's Roger Clemens. The game will be at Royals' Stadium.

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Cue ball doesn't want the weight

DEAR CASSANDRA, I have been reading your column faithfully since it began. I find your advice both enlightening and witty, but until now, I had no use for it.

My problem is my girlfriend of about five months. She had a cute figure when I met her, but she has recently become full-figured. She is fully aware that I am crazy in love with her, but I feel that she no longer cares about her appearance because she has me hooked.

I have trouble faulting her because she never makes fun of my unusually skinny body or balding head. We will be apart for the entire summer, and I fear I won't be able to afford her eating habits when we get back together.

Any advice you give me will be welcome if it keeps my girlfriend from becoming more than a handful.

Anonymous

DEAR ANON,

You're skinny and balding and but yet you're concerned about your girlfriend's weight gain? You're only dating, but it is somehow your responsibility to purchase her food? I sure hope she doesn't starve to death during the summer when you are apart — you won't be around to feed her.

I'm sure your girlfriend is aware of the change in her appearance and is equally upset. No one really wants to get fat.

If you are serious (which I doubt), I would recommend starting a mutual exercise program. Don't tell her "Hey, fatso, let's exercise together so you can look the way I think you should." She would probably reply, "Hey, crome-dome, let's both join Hair Club for Men — it will be fun."

The last thing I would recommend is that you broaden your mind to accommodate your broadening broad. I trust you love her for her mind and heart first and her body second. She will have to do the same for you — she can always lose weight, but you'll most likely look like a cue ball one of these days.

tries. So, some of the dishes were not truly African. But during preparation, an attempt was made to Africanize them as much as possible.

After dinner, the crowd proceeded to the entertainment segment, which began with a fashion show.

This featured different styles of clothing from different countries.

The crowd cheered as participants walked across the stage in various outfits to the sound of rhythmic African music, which punctuated the entire section of entertainment.

A traditional Muslim outfit from Benin called Iro and Buba was notable. Iro is composed of three parts. The top, which is the Buba, is made of two pieces of cloth. The Iro is wrapped around the waist on the Buba, and another small Iro is used to wrap the head.

A two-piece pant suit, which is worn in Botswana, also was modeled in the fashion show. This is worn in Botswana by young women going to parties.

An outfit called Aso Oke from Nigeria, which is worn by men to weddings, evoked laughter when the model walked on stage. Aso Oke is a heavy outfit that can only be hand woven.

Aribel Leon-Lynn, graduate student in public administration, attended the event to show support for her African counterparts.

"It's very enlightening and entertaining," she said.

Leon-Lynn said she was dying to attend African night, even though most African foods and fashions were not strange to her because she associates with the African community a lot.

The audience participated in the final hour by dancing to the rhythmic African music.

The dance was an important part of the night because it allowed the audience to participate in an aspect of African culture, Mothee said.

King visited a different K-State

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Sunday was the 25th anniversary of Martin Luther King Jr.'s death. This is the first in a three-part series discussing King's visit to K-State and racism in Manhattan, then and now.

The time was 1968. The war in Vietnam had almost heated to the boiling point. Peace demonstrations, sit-ins and draft dodgers dominated the front page of the Collegian. Women were called coeds. Black people were called Negroes.

Then Martin Luther King Jr. came to K-State.

He came 2-1/2 months before he was assassinated, at a time when Manhattan was confronting its own racial problems. He came when black people weren't allowed to live in certain parts of Manhattan. He came at a time when black students couldn't pledge fraternities and sororities.

The path for racial equality at K-State started early that school year. On Sept. 19, 1967, three graduate student senators sponsored a resolution to urge the Manhattan City Commission to adopt a fair housing code.

It also urged all living groups, especially greek houses, to have one minority member by February 1968, and their ratio of minority to majority group members to be complementary to the student body ratio by Oct. 1, 1968.

The measure was soundly defeated 29-4, with one abstention. Debate continued on this issue for several months, one senator suggesting the possibility of black greek houses to solve the problem.

The Collegian questioned several members of the greek system, most of whom said they didn't want black people in the greek system at K-State.

Although the campus measure was defeated early that year, on Jan. 9, 1968, students, faculty and Manhattan residents marched in support of fair housing. More than 100 people appeared at the city commission meeting that evening.

On Feb. 7, a law was passed requiring non-discrimination in regard to housing. Subtle racism might also have been evident in the Collegian and the Manhattan Mercury. The announcement that King was going to give a convocation lecture titled, "The Future of Integration" was buried in the back pages of the Mercury and was delegated to Page 6 of the Collegian.

In contrast, Sen. Robert Kennedy's Landon Lecture announcement was on Page 1 of both publications. Perhaps it was because Kennedy had been the United States Attorney General and was a political contender in the 1968 presidential race. Or perhaps it was small town, 1968 racism.

On Jan. 19, 7,200 people packed into Ahearn Fieldhouse, 3,000 less than capacity. King spoke without notes or a prepared text and gave a 58-minute speech. K-State President James McCain gave the introduction.

"I consider him one of the rare persons in America today who, in response to a question for which he has no opportunity to prepare answers and cadences, reflects a brilliant grasp of the English language as well as the capacity for logical thinking at a very high level," McCain said.

"I present to you a distinguished American and a great citizen of the world."

King first spoke about the racial strides that had been made.

Credit union to relocate

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

An increase in membership and requests for more services have caused the Kansas State University Federal Credit Union to outgrow the space it has occupied in Anderson Hall for 12 years.

The credit union provides present and retired K-State employees, their families and some graduate students with checking and savings accounts and consumer loans. It is looking for a new, larger location, Loretta Whitney, credit union manager, said.

The credit union is owned by its members and is not corporately linked to the University.

National averages show that credit unions with the same size and membership as KSUFUCU should have 1,700 to 2,300 square feet of floor space, Whitney said.

KSUFUCU has only 692 square feet of space.

"It makes for a very stressful condition with people piled on top of one another," Whitney said.

"That's why there are people lined up out the door, and we can't provide labor-intensive services such as ATM cards and home loans."

The original lease on the space will be up at the end of 1993, but Whitney said the University administration has extended the lease for one more year.

Because there isn't enough space anywhere on campus, the credit union is looking to move off campus for the first time in 46 years, said Bill Sullins, president of the credit union's board of directors.

"We have an outstanding relationship with the University administration," Sullins said.

"Even if the University had chosen to renew our lease for a longer period, we would have had to find more space."

During the past 46 years, KSUFUCU has occupied space in the K-State Union, Fairchild and Leisure Halls, as well as Anderson.

"We have needed more space each time the credit union was relocated," Whitney said.

Because the credit union is owned by its members, Whitney said, they were asked for suggestions as to a possible new location.

Members have suggested moving to First Bank Center, Aggieville or to vacant office spaces to the south of campus.

Sullins said the board of directors is exploring the options and hopes to move some time this year.

The credit union is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. "The majority of the responses have been to stay adjacent to campus, provide adequate parking and open the office earlier and close later," Whitney said.

K-State soars on $7 million aviation grant

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

The Aviation Training Center at K-State-Salina will receive a $7.70-million grant from the U.S. Department of Defense, making it one of the best aviation programs in the country.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to President Jon Wefald and principal investigator for the grant, said the money is for equipment for professional pilot training, aviation maintenance technology and avionics.

U.S. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., announced the award on March 29, and said the funding will purchase state-of-the-art equipment for an advanced materials testing laboratory, computers, flight simulators and Beech Aircraft.

Reagan said the grant will provide training assistance to the military for national guard pilots, and transition courses for Air Force pilots to receive their civilian ratings and licenses.

The ATC will continue to have international airline pilot training.

"We have an agreement with McDonald Douglas training systems to train international airline pilots," he said.

It is unknown when ATC will actually receive the money.

"It is hard to tell," he said. "It depends on the contracting agency in the defense department and what their rules are. The agency may transfer the money to the University, we spend it, and send them a report on how it was spent. Or we may send them the bills and they pay them."

"This will catapult us right up into the top group of University aviation programs."

Closed admission fails; residency stalls nominee

Opponents cite penalty to poor, minority students

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Supporters failed for the second time Monday to win House approval of a proposal to set admissions standards at state universities.

The bill failed on a 59-65 vote. If representatives had approved the measure, it would have gone to Gov. Joan Finney. The House rejected a similar proposal 11 days ago on a 61-61 vote.

The proposal would take effect in the fall of 1997 and would end the state's 78-year-old policy of allowing all Kansas high-school graduates to attend the six Kansas Board of Regents universities. Republican legislative leaders included it in an education reform package.

Supporters argued passage of the proposal would force students to become better prepared for college. Opponents relied on populist arguments, saying the new

FAILED PROPOSAL

Under the proposal, all Kansas high-school students would have to pass a test in the 10th grade to show they mastered basic skills. Then, a student could do one of three things to get into a state university —

- Obtain a C average on a college preparatory curriculum.
- Score 23 or better on the American College Testing program.
- Graduate in the top third of his or her class.

However, each university would be allowed to waive the requirements for up to 10 percent of its freshman class.

COLLEGIAN

admissions standards would penalize disadvantaged students.

"You can spout all the platitudes you want, but it's going to be the poor kids and the minority kids who don't get in," Rep. Bill Reardon, D-Kansas City, said.

The House vote came only days after Finney appeared to soften her position on the issue. In February, she expressed outright opposition to the measure, but last week she indicated she would consider signing such a measure.

The regents have been pushing for enactment of such a proposal for several years, but it has never come so close to passage. The regents call the plan qualified admissions to reflect their belief that students would be qualified for college.

"I don't think you're going to see a lesser degree of enrollment in our regents universities," said Rep. Richard Reinhardt, D-Erie, a former regent. "We're going to see better prepared students."

The Senate has approved admissions bills twice. The first bill went to the House, and representatives rejected it on the 61-61 vote.

Porter can't live in Topeka as board member

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Senate committee Monday met with Gov. Joan Finney's nominee to the Kansas Board of Regents less than a week after another was rejected.

Maxine Porter, who had just returned from a 30-day trip to Turkey, addressed the issue of her residency during testimony before the Senate Education Committee.

Porter, a retired elementary school teacher, maintains two homes — one in Topeka and the other on a ranch near Reading in Lyons County.

State law prohibits two people from the same county to serve on the regents. Frank Sabatini of Topeka already is a member of the Board of Regents, which oversees six state universities.

If lawmakers decide Porter is a Topekan, it could derail her confirmation in the Senate.

"Our home will always be at the ranch, where our financial interests are," she said.

Last week, the nomination of former Sen. Jack Steineger, a Kansas City, Kan., Democrat, was rejected by the Senate on a 16-24 vote, the first time since 1979 that the Senate blocked a governor's appointment by vote. In March, Finney withdrew her nomination of Ruth Schrum of Manhattan, another retired teacher, because of opposition in the Senate.

The board presently has two vacancies. Porter was nominated for a seat that has been vacant since Jan. 1. Steineger had been nominated to replace Schrum after her name was withdrawn.

"The Senate, I'm sure, acted in the way they saw best," Porter said of the chamber's opposition to Steineger and Schrum. "I will go along with any decision they make."

Porter, who attended Emporia State University, taught first grade in Topeka for more than 30 years. She also studied at Stanford University and received a master's degree from K-State.

"She obviously believes she's from Reading," Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, said after the meeting.

"We would prefer to confirm someone rather than to not confirm someone," Kerr added. "It's never pleasant not to confirm someone."

Porter said she moved to the ranch when she married Walter Porter 10 years ago. The couple bought a house in Topeka because of the amount of time they spend there.

Engineers find
'taste of success'KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The College of Engineering will have a new assistant dean and a new director of minority engineering as of March 1.

The positions were filled by Thomas Roberts and Karen Martin, respectively.

Roberts replaced John Dollar, who retired recently after 26 years of service to K-State.

Roberts is a graduate of K-State with a degree in nuclear engineering. He received a Bachelor of Science in 1970 and a Master of Science in 1972.

After earning his degrees, he served as an officer in the U.S. Army Chemical Corps at the Aberdeen Proving Ground in Maryland.

Roberts later spent 16 years with Black and Veatch Engineers and Architects of Kansas City.

Roberts then applied for the position of assistant dean.

"I was very impressed with the interview cycle," Roberts said. "We went through an extensive process."

Roberts also spent a substantial amount of time living and growing up in Manhattan.

"I was pleased to find out I had gotten the job," Roberts said. "I'm an avid K-Stater, and I feel like this is my home."

Roberts received the key to Kansas City, Mo., in 1985 for the leadership he provided to the Heart of America Architects and Engineers Legislative Council.

He was presented the Order of Constantine in 1990 by Sigma Chi fraternity for 20 years of providing leadership training and organizational planning.

"I have a love for the environment here as well as the students," Roberts said. "I have a lot to learn as well as a lot of help to provide to the students."

Martin replaced Andy Cordero, who is pursuing a graduate degree in Florida.

Originally from New Orleans, Martin earned a Bachelor of Science in speech pathology from Xavier University in 1978. She also received a Master of Communication Disorders in audiology from Louisiana State University Medical Center in 1979.

"I am planning to graduate this May with a doctoral degree in counseling and student personal services," she said.

Martin was academic counselor and instructor for the College of Arts and Sciences for the past four years, prior to moving to the engineering college.

"This is a very multi-faceted job," Martin said. "I am responsible for the recruitment of minorities, monitoring academic progress, fundraising, and whatever else might come through the office."

Martin is also a member of the American College Personnel Association and the National Association of Black School Educators. Since 1988, she has been the recipient of a Patricia Roberts Harris Fellowship.

"I plan to stay at K-State as long as I am effective and can see the program being successful," she said. "Once you find success, you tend to like the taste of it."

Your Q. & A. about Student Financial Assistance

Q. I've heard there are changes in financial aid eligibility for the Fall - 1993 and Spring - 1994 award year. What does this mean to me as a financial aid applicant?

A. Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 took place in July, 1992 and will regulate all financial aid programs until 1997. The maximum Pell Grant for 1993-94 is funded at $2300 and the minimum at $400. Overall, a decreased level of eligibility for grants will be the norm replaced by a higher level of eligibility for low interest loans.

Q. What type of low interest loans are available to financial aid applicants?

A. In addition to the regular Stafford Loan, a new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan is available to all students regardless of income levels. The annual limits under the Stafford Loan program have also changed:

$2625 for first year students $3500 for second year students
$8500 for graduate/professional students after 10/1/93

If you do not borrow the annual limits under the Subsidized Stafford Loan, you may be eligible to borrow these amounts under the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program. If you have a question regarding your eligibility, you are encouraged to make an appointment with a financial aid counselor by calling 532-6420.

Q. What if my parents want to borrow for me?

A. You must be a dependent student for financial aid purposes in order for your parents to borrow through the PLUS Loan. The parent loan allows one of your parents to borrow up to the cost of your education minus any other financial aid you may receive. Previously, parents were limited by a $4,000 cap for each student attending college. Your parents may call or write the financial aid office to inquire about the PLUS loan. The address is: Student Financial Assistance, 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. How do I know if I will receive the Pell Grant or loans?

A. Your 1993-94 Award Letter will show your eligibility for grants and loans. It is possible for all students both dependent and independent to receive low-interest loans once your Free Application for Federal Student Aid is received by the financial aid office. Congress has made changes to help students regardless of income levels; however, the shift to personal responsibility for educational expenses is a direct impact of the Higher Education Amendments for 1992, and will be reflected in students' awards for 1993-94.

A night at the dances

Modern dance, ballet and dance with ethnic accents were part of Spring Dance '93, which ran April 1-2 in McCain Auditorium.

The program started with "Shards" by Luke Kahlich, professor of speech.

This piece used repetition in its various parts. It began with a somber mood then progressed to a more upbeat piece. The dancers were all in sync, which added a sense of professionalism to the concert.

"The Last Place," choreographed by Achmed Valk, assistant professor of speech, was a heavy piece. The colors used in the costumes were drab, making the piece seem all the more depressing. On the red backdrop were slides of surreal images and pictures that went well with the dance.

"The Last Place" left the audience with a sense of burden or depression as it concluded.

Suzanne Koucheravy, junior in theater, choreographed "When I Dance I Only See You." This piece allowed the audience to relax after Valk's piece.

Though this piece was a ballet, there were no point shoes or tutus here. The performers wore free-flowing costumes and danced barefoot. Koucheravy did an excellent job.

Kahlich choreographed "Dancing At ..." This piece had an African accent in the costumes, the music and the dancing. "Dancing At ..." offered the viewer a touch of humor in its composition. The dancers appeared to be at ease with the piece and performed the African dance amazingly well.

After intermission, guest choreographer Maria Ferguson's piece "Out of Order-Out of Touch" was performed. This was an excerpt from her master's of fine arts thesis concert. It was about two people who were pushing each other away, yet were trying to keep one another near.

Robert Bailey, graduate student in psychology, and Smruti Patel, graduate student in mathematics, danced the piece together, each with a solo part. They did an excellent job portraying a couple uncertain about what they wanted out of a relationship.

The final dance was another piece by Valk. It was accompanied by Joyas Musicales Duo, a musical group from Kansas City, Mo. This was a series of eight dances, all Spanish in nature. The costumes also had a Spanish flavor.

Michael Townsley, senior in dance, performed an excellent solo as a toreador. It was comical in nature and evoked laughter from the audience.

Also included in these eight dances were the tango, the cha-cha and a dance involving point ballet. The live accompaniment by Joyas Musicales Duo added an extra dimension to the piece.

Spring Dance '93 offered the audience a wide spectrum of dances to watch. The program flowed very smoothly from piece to piece, even though they were all so different in style.

A year devoid of all hope

THE ISSUE

One year later, the war in the former Yugoslavia rages on, all but forgotten by bored Americans.

Today marks the first anniversary of the war in a shattered Yugoslavia.

It has been one year since the the United Nations recognized the Republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

It has been one year since Serbs, who oppose the state's independence efforts, began military assaults.

It has been one year in which 200,000 people have died or are missing.

It has been one year in which 2,500 children have been killed.

It has been one year in which a soccer stadium has been converted, out of necessity, into a cemetery.

It has been one year of "ethnic cleansing," of horrendous mass rapes, of dodging sniper fire when you cross the threshold of your home.

It has been one year of widespread destruction. In Sarajevo alone 35,000 apartments have been damaged or destroyed, and 75 percent of the city's graceful architecture lies in ruins.

It has been one year in which the United Nations has bravely entered the demolished republic, only to continually fumble the situation with hesitant politics.

It has been one year in which President Clinton has begun the misguided attempt at airlifting humanitarian aid which, more often than not, falls into the wrong hands.

It is has been one year of war news so continuous that most Americans have grown numb and uncaring.

As the statistics get tallied daily, the United States and the United Nations need to realize the world can't afford another year of war in Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Candidates' views on women stirs debate

Editor,

I am writing in regards to an article printed Friday, April 2, titled "How many does that make it now?" This article outlined the platform for the "Two Tims" candidacy for student body president and vice president.

I felt that some of the changes they suggested on campus were appalling and demeaning to women.

I realize that Tim Orindgreff and Tim Madden were just joking around when they said, "I'd like to see girls in cages ... And [wearing] mandatory leather skirts," but this is not humorous. Whether they realize it or not, this "joking" mindset perpetuates the subordination, unequal and violent treatment of women.

What did they mean by "putting girls in cages"? That we are less than human and belong in cages? That we are likened to animals? That we are not free to do as we wish and should be locked up?

Would they like to be told what to wear? Should we also require men to wear tight leather pants? Would they like to be continually treated as an object rather than a human being? I don't think so, and I don't believe that women could be as unfair to men as men have been to women.

Some may think that this letter is too extreme and they were only joking, but I disagree. Joking about sexism, racism, classism, etc., only perpetuates the problem.

RESPONSE

Columnist depicts foster homes falsely

Editor,

What was the point of Tom Lister's editorial on April 2? I offer "The Tale of Jane" in contrast. "Jane" was 14 when we picked her up at the police station. We introduced ourselves and headed toward home with a very frightened young lady. This was her first encounter with social services. She needed protective custody until a trial could determine her fate and the fate of the stepfather who beat her silly a few nights before.

We had two foster children before Jane, and as they did, she immediately became part of the family. We shared everything with her and her with us. We listened to her tell of the terrors of the beating, the years of abuse, the fears of returning home, and we cried.

It wasn't long before she became attached. I was her "big sister," my parents her "real parents," our home her first "real home," and we were all more of a family than she'd ever known. These are quotes directly from the mouth of Jane and from the many notes and letters she wrote to us or shared with us during her stay.

I don't know what Tom Lister was trying to prove with his "Tale of Roy," but there are certainly many caring, concerned and loving foster homes that far outnumber the few like the "Larsons" that Lister represented.

TEACH VS. RESEARCH

How to spot a good teacher in his habitat

Editor,

Professor MacFarland's appeal to develop and implement reliable procedures that may be used to reward good teaching should be viewed as representing the beginnings of a very promising reform in the manner K-State faculty are evaluated.

The essence of his argument is fundamentally grounded in what should be a central tenet of academic equity: given that all faculty members possess differential resources, talents and interest in either doing research or imparting pedagogy, it would seem plausible that on the tenure evaluation forms an equitable number of merits or weight should be given for teaching as is for research. Apparently this credo is not esteemed with the culture of tenure review committees.

An obvious obstacle to implementing this proposal is: How should a review committee operationalize the concept of good teaching? Is it the number of students who pass or the number of courses taught?

In contrast, it is much simpler to operationalize research activity; one need only tally the number of articles published in the esoteric journals specific to the field of study. Beware, it is important to note that the volume of articles produced does not necessarily mean the research is good. This distinction is important because the utility of much academic inquiry is seldom relevant to the immediate livelihoods of most folk.

So, perhaps the relative goodness of research activity also should be evaluated with respect to its social utility?

TOLES

OTHER VIEWS

The Independent, London, on the new French government (March 30):

The big question — for Europe at least — raised by the installation of a center-right government in Paris is whether its electioneering rhetoric about reasserting French interests via-a-vis Brussels and Washington is transformed into political action.

A rebuff would be certain if the possibility of renegotiating last year's reforms of the (European Community's) Common Agricultural Policy, involving substantial cuts in the production of cereals, were to be raised within the (EC's) Council of Ministers. But it is clearly well within the new government's powers to hold up completion of the long-drawn-out General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade talks on the liberalization of world trade.

The impression at (the March 29) meeting in Brussels of U.S. and EC negotiators was that the Americans at least were anxious to avert the trade war which small measures and big threats on both sides have seemed to bring nearer. But politicians on the Gaullist right have threatened not just to defend French interests aggressively in any further negotiations, but to seek to unpick last year's crucial agreement on limits to the subsidized production of oilseeds within the EC, and notably in France.

Resurrection: dissected and re-assembled

Easter is the most significant Christian holiday because it celebrates the most miraculous and momentous event in human history — the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The resurrection is also at the center of the Christian faith. If it is true, Jesus was exactly who he said he was — the Son of God, sent to be a sacrifice for our sins, crucified and resurrected three days later — and Christianity is validated.

If it is false, Jesus was nothing more than a manipulative lunatic, not unlike David Koresh, and Christianity crumbles, only to be remembered as the greatest conspiracy the world has ever seen. There are no other options.

The biblical account goes something like this: After Christ died on the cross, his body was placed in a rock-hewn tomb, and a stone weighing approximately two tons was placed in front of its entrance. Next, a Roman guard of probably four soldiers was sent to protect the tomb. Once in place, they affixed the Roman seal on the tomb. Three days later, Christ rose from the dead.

During the centuries, skeptics have concocted numerous theories attempting to disprove the biblical account. One popular objection is that Jesus' followers stole his body while the Roman soldiers guarding the tomb were asleep. This theory, however, is high on imagination and low on credibility.

First of all, according to Roman military justice, a soldier who fell asleep on a night watch faced the death penalty — the soldiers obviously had a high incentive to stay wide awake. But let's say they did fall asleep.

That would mean several men would have to break the Roman seal, move a two-ton stone, walk into a tomb and leave with a corpse — all without waking one guard. Another problem is that Jesus' disciples, who had fled during his trial — including Peter, who denied he knew Jesus three times — lacked the resolve to attempt to steal Jesus' body.

Also, the disciples never understood Christ's prophecies about his resurrection. So, they had no expectation of it and, therefore, no reason to plot a conspiracy around a scenario their minds had not yet conceived. Another glaring problem is, how did the soldiers guarding the tomb know that Jesus' disciples stole his body if they were asleep?

Another skeptical theory, called the swoon theory, claims Christ never died but was revived in his tomb and later departed. A few facts easily topple this theory. When the Roman soldiers conducting the crucifixion — men who likely knew death when they saw it — concluded Christ was dead, one soldier pierced Christ in the side with his spear and out poured a mixture of blood and water.

If Christ were alive, the wound would have spouted blood with each beat of his heart. Instead, blood and water flowed from the wound, the result of a ruptured heart. The conclusion is incontrovertible: Christ died on the cross.

The important event however, is not Christ's death but his resurrection. After his resurrection, Jesus appeared to about 525 people, 500 of them at the same time. In I Corinthians 15:6, the apostle Paul wrote that most of those 500 witnesses were still living. In essence, Paul was boldly saying, as Edwin M. Yamauchi, associate professor of history at Miami of Ohio, writes, "if you don't believe me, go ask them."

Christ as depicted in Leonardo Da Vinci's "The Last Supper." Da Vinci spent three years (1495-98) on the painting.

The New Testament, including the account of Jesus' resurrection, is authentic and historically accurate. They are not made-up stories. No other ancient document, including works by Thucydides, Josephus and Tacitus, is more reliable than the New Testament. F.F. Bruce from Manchester University said that if the New Testament were a collection of secular writings, their authenticity generally would be regarded as beyond all doubt.

In a desperate attempt to refute the truth of the event, anti-religion fundamentalists, not Christians, are the only party guilty of propagating myths and fairy tales about Christ's resurrection. When Paul presented the gospel in Athens, the Greeks sneered and mocked the resurrection account. Essentially, they committed intellectual suicide by failing to even acknowledge the historical facts.

George Hanson states, "The simple faith of the Christian who believes in the Resurrection is nothing compared to the credulity of the skeptic who will accept the wildest and most improbable romances rather than admit the plain witness of historical certainties. The difficulties of belief may be great; the absurdities of unbelief are greater."

Loaves' popularity on the rise

NICOLLE FOLSON
Collegian

Students are loafing around in the K-State Union Stateroom.

They aren't wandering aimlessly or being lazy. They are consuming more than 400 of the stateroom's small bread loaves a day.

"We think it has to do with economics," Becky Lind, stateroom cash sales manager, said. "They want to feel full for a very low amount of money."

Many students eat the bread plain and others purchase such condiments as peanut butter, jelly, butter, honey and jalapeno cheese, she said.

There are several reasons the loaves are so popular.

Students like the taste and the price, Lind said.

The bread sells for 70 cents a loaf and is a popular meal and snack-time finger food.

"They taste good," Tracy Morris, sophomore in elementary education and English, said. "It's kind of a snack until lunch."

Morris usually buys bread on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and she prefers to purchase white, she said.

The loaves contain the equivalent of five dinner rolls and come in white and wheat flavors, Barbara Depew, production manager of Union Food Service, said.

White loaves are roughly two-thirds of the loaves the stateroom sells.

White loaves usually look bigger because wheat dough doesn't rise as well, she said.

Whatever type of bread they choose, students are using them to battle mealtime hunger, Depew said.

"They've become the meal for the student," she said.

Chris Smith, junior in finance, enjoys the loaves' flavor and convenience.

"I just like the bread," he said. "It's portable, and it fills you up."

The rise of the loaf popularity was unintentional, Depew said.

More than fifteen years ago, the stateroom began using left-over dough for the loaves to prevent waste, she said.

"It was a way to utilize the products that we had that weren't being used in rolls or other baking items," Depew said.

In 1985, Depew noticed the loaves started going faster, she said.

Students were always requesting more bread loaves, and the few that were made went quickly, Lind said.

"They were constantly asking the dessert person to go back and get more," she said.

In recent years, they have become such a hot item that two extra students were hired to help bag the bread, Depew said.

Some days an entire batch of dough is used to make the loaves, she said.

Making the bread is a timely process.

Prep time for the bread is nearly two hours, Depew said.

The dough usually takes one hour to rise and gets 30 minutes in the oven. Once the bread is done, it usually takes an hour to remove it from the oven and bag it.

Students can purchase the loaves beginning mid-morning, Depew said.

For the stateroom to maintain a high-standard product, the bread is made without preservatives or additives, she said.

Student-to-student contact is one of the main reasons for the loaves' popularity, Depew said.

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

"The best publicity is word of mouth," she said.

Chris Wicks, freshman in arts and sciences, said his friend introduced him to the loaves.

Wicks sometimes buys as many as three loaves, he said.

"I told my mom they were really good, and she wanted me to get some," Wicks said.

He said the bread tastes great, and it melts in his mouth. He usually buys white loaves every day.

As well as being popular, the loaves are versatile too, Depew said. She occasionally buys a loaf for herself when there are left-overs, and said they make great French toast and stay fresh for several days.

"They have multiple uses," she said.

Mader plans job assistance if elected

RITA KIDD
Collegian

The heat is being turned on in student campaigns.

Tracy Mader, candidate for student body president, and Marc Scarbrough, candidate for student body vice president, announced a plan to assist students with future employment if they are elected in this month's student elections.

Mader, junior in agricultural economics, and Scarbrough, senior in electrical engineering and pre-medicine, assessed the problem of student marketability in employment situations in a recent study in cooperation with the Career Planning and Placement Center.

"My honors research has been based on better ways to market K-State engineers. This is an expansion of that theme to a campus-wide project," Scarbrough said.

In their assessment, the candidates concluded that more than one-third of K-State first-year alumni surveyed found it difficult to find a job, and one-fourth of those alumni surveyed went through ten or more interviews before securing a position.

The results of the candidates' survey showed that as recently as three years ago, more than 50 companies interviewed conducted on-campus interviews for engineering positions.

This year there are only sixteen, said Scarbrough, who is currently a second-term engineering student senator.

"The Career Planning and Placement Center is doing a great job with the limited personnel and resources they presently have available," Scarbrough said.

"The fact is that changing economic times and changing student needs demand a more aggressive approach to the marketing of K-State students."

The candidates propose implementation of an electronic resume database, which would enable nation-wide access to K-

State graduates.

Because of economics, fewer companies consider it cost-effective to send representatives to individual schools. The companies must rely on complete and accurate resumes when being introduced to a prospective employee, Mader said.

"As students, we are here to get an education and be placed in the work force or graduate school," Mader said.

"K-State has to be competitive with other universities in marketing its students for us to be successful and the student body to be successful."

The implementation of a co-curricular transcript program will give University documentation of a student's co-curricular activities, said Mader, who is currently a second-term agricultural student senator.

"When you take academics and extracurricular experience and put them together, true learning takes place," Mader said.

"This would make a student realize that it is important to become involved."

The co-curricular transcript program proposed by Mader and Scarbrough, paid mostly by user fees, would recognize student involvement in non-academic pursuits, the candidates said.

Mader cited, as an example, a co-curricular transcript program from the University of North Dakota where a majority of companies surveyed preferred co-curricular activity documentation when examining resumes.

Mader was chairman, and Scarbrough served on the Holton Hall Council.

They were partly responsible for starting the Academic Career Information Center in January, Mader said.

This program assists students with undecided majors, or those who are academically displaced. About 80-100 students use this service each week, Mader said.

"As students, we need every edge possible," he said.

Jet crashes into homes, 3 missing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUATEMALA CITY — A Salvadoran jetliner crashed into two houses near Guatemala City's international airport Monday. Three people on the ground were reported missing, but 215 people were evacuated safely from the plane, officials said.

The Boeing 767, from Salvador's national airline TACA, crashed while trying to land at La Aurora International Airport, the fire department said.

Fire Department spokesman Fernando Romero said one child aboard the plane was injured and taken to a hospital. It was not immediately clear how many people were aboard the plane.

Romero earlier had said 235 people were evacuated, then reduced the figure. He said both houses were destroyed.

Leticia Calaveras, an official with TACA in Los Angeles, said the flight that crashed was Flight 510 from San Salvador to Los Angeles via Guatemala City.

A first report to the airline's offices said there were no injuries, she said.

Royal Purple, Collegian win crowns

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

The debate team is not the only K-State group winning top national honors. Both the Collegian and Royal Purple have won Gold Crowns, awards that put them in the top 2 percent of college publications nationwide.

Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications and Collegian news adviser, said K-State has a rich tradition of winning awards for journalistic achievement.

"These are truly student awards," Johnson said. "The students deserve it. They spend untold hours per week and take great pride in serving the readers."

Johnson said the Royal Purple and Collegian have been highly competitive in the 1990s.

"It speaks so highly of the talent and professionalism of the students who work for the Royal Purple and Collegian," Johnson said.

Presented annually by Columbia Scholastic Press Association, the Gold Crowns are considered the Pulitzer Prizes of collegiate journalism.

The Royal Purple has won the Gold Crown consecutively for the past three years.

For the Collegian, this Gold Crown is the third award since 1991. That year, the Collegian became the first ever college newspaper in the country to win two Gold Crowns in a single academic year.

Johnson said journalism competitions provide good avenues to be judged and critiqued.

"The more feedback, the better we are," he said.

Quarterback situation a question in spring drills

Smargiasso is No. 1, but junior transfer May expected to vie for job

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

The more things change, the more they stay the same.

Monday afternoon marked the beginning of spring drills for the Wildcat football team. And even though K-State has shown remarkable progress in the four-year reign of Coach Bill Snyder, posting three straight five-win seasons for just the second time in 80 years, one staple has remained throughout — the quarterback controversy.

Carl Straw vs. Paul Watson. Watson vs. Jason Smargiasso. Smargiasso vs. Matt Garber.

The latest version? Smargiasso vs. Chad May.

"Jason will start the spring as our No. 1 quarterback," Snyder said. "That's our policy — wherever you finish at the end of the season, that's where you go in at the beginning of spring ball."

Smargiasso, though, lost his No. 1 status at the end of last season. Garber was the starter for the final six quarters of last season, and he played the entire game against Nebraska, a 38-24 loss in Tokyo.

But since Smargiasso, now a senior, is the top returning quarterback, he inherited the No. 1 nod.

"He's going to have to get himself better," Snyder said. "Or it's going to become one of those quarterback situations again."

What specifically does Smargiasso have to improve?

Primarily, he needs to stay in the pocket and allow the play to develop. Smargiasso, a good athlete who is both big (6-foot, 2-inches, 220 pounds) and mobile, likes to run with the football.

The result? Six games in which he threw for less than 70 yards and an offense that averaged just 244 yards a game — 104th out of 107 Division I schools. Smargiasso threw for more total yards in his first three games (526) than in his final eight (464).

"If I really knew what was wrong with him, he probably would have performed a little better last year," Snyder said. "Obviously, we're still learning a little bit about him.

"He just has not yet totally adapted to our offensive package."

As a senior, that presents a problem.

Smargiasso's primary threat to take over the starting job is junior transfer May. May, who started as a redshirt freshman with Cal-State Fullerton in 1991, is a typical K-State quarterback — big (6-2, 215). His best game at Cal-State was a 213-yard performance in a 37-36 win over Long Beach State.

"Chad is a stout, tough youngster," Snyder said. "He throws the ball well. He seems to have adapted well into our offense, but that remains to be seen."

And May said he likes to throw the ball — that running is not his style.

"I don't like to run," he said. "I can't run. I like to stay in the pocket and throw the ball."

"Those guys are out there trying to kill you," he said. "I'm going to run parallel with the line and look for an open guy. I don't need to be trying to run and getting hit by those guys."

Because of transfer regulations, May sat out last season. And with all of the quarterback changes, he said it would have benefited him to play.

"It's tough sitting on the bench," he said. "It was a long season, I'll tell you that.

"I haven't had a chance to prove myself yet," he said. "They have Jason as No. 1 right now because they haven't really seen what I can do. Now that I'm eligible, I think I'll get a look and that I'll get my fair shot."

"That's all I'm asking for."

Redshirt freshman Brian Kavanagh, who threw for 1,306 yards as a senior in high school, will likely be the third-string quarterback.

BASEBALL

Cats hoping to squeeze in series with Cowboys

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

The K-State baseball team is 8-14 and 1-2 in the Big Eight, tied with Iowa State for first place in one unique category — five rainouts thus far in the season.

If there were a motto for the team, it might be, "Rain, rain, go away."

But the rain continues to fall, especially, it seems, on game days.

The Cats lost two games against Oklahoma because of the rain. Last weekend's three-game set against Iowa State was also rained out.

And Coach Mike Clark said he has had enough of it.

"We need to play," he said as his team practiced under gray clouds.

"We'll play anybody. It's hard to get consistency when your team's not on the field."

K-State might have to wait a little bit longer. The forecast in Stillwater, Okla., where the Cats are scheduled to play Big Eight powerhouse Oklahoma State today at 7:30 p.m., calls for a 30-percent chance of thunderstorms.

The Cats won't even leave Manhattan if the word at noon today calls for a soggy evening.

There is the same chance for thunderstorms for the 2 p.m. start Wednesday.

Further, there is a chance for rain Thursday night in Manhattan when the Cats play Wichita State.

But Clark said he was glad to get onto Frank Myers Field for practice Monday afternoon.

"As long as we get outside to practice, that's all right," he said. "If we don't get out on the field, then we can't work on the little things that can hurt our team, such as fielding ground balls."

Outfielder Jamey Stellino said the team needs to get on the diamond.

"We've got to play some games," he said. "We have to get outside and practice. We haven't had a practice outside since the Minnesota-Creighton games. That was about two weeks ago."

The Cats played Minnesota and Creighton on March 22-24.

"It's different practicing inside,"

Stellino said. "There's no wind. So, it makes it easy to run down fly balls. We have 30 minutes of catching fly balls today."

Clark said he has been giving pointers to the team while waiting to play a game.

"I have been telling our batters to be confident and be aggressive at the plate," he said. "Defensively, I told them to relax and be ready to react to certain situations."

"But we are going there with a lot of question marks."

For Stellino, he said he hopes the weather forecasters are incorrect.

"I hope their predictions are wrong this time," he said. "I hope there are no more rain-outs for the rest of the year."

Netters improve to 3-0

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The K-State tennis team played what Coach Steve Bietau called the Wildcats' best effort of the year, a 5-4 win over the Cornhuskers Monday in Lincoln, Neb.

K-State got singles wins from Susana Labrador, Amelia Van Der Werwe and Evelia Alvarez.

The match was tied 3-3 heading into doubles play.

Martine Shrubsole and Maria Uson beat Nebraska's No. 3 doubles team of Michelle Waldhauser and Jane Startin in the final match of the day to give the Cats the win.

Five of the six singles matches had tiebreakers or went three sets.

Only Labrador and Van Der Werwe won in straight sets, while Alvarez won the closest match of the day, a 7-6 (7-2), 5-7, 6-4 win over Startin.

Both Suzanne Sim and Linda Neethling lost their single matches, and the two got beat in the No. 2 doubles slot.

"This was the best effort we've had all year," Bietau said. "The overall effort and attitude was the best I've seen this season."

The victory improved K-State's overall record to 6-9. More important, though, the Wildcats are a perfect 3-0 in conference play.

"Record-wise, we couldn't be any better," Bietau said.

Webber's TO sinks Wolves in 77-71 loss to UNC

Tar Heels win when Michigan star calls illegal timeout

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW ORLEANS — Chris Webber made one big play after another for Michigan on Monday night, then made the biggest mistake of his basketball life in North Carolina's 77-71 victory last night at the Superdome.

With the Wolverines trailing North Carolina 73-71 in the NCAA title game, Webber rebounded a missed free throw and, after nearly traveling with the ball, raced upcourt. With 11 seconds left, he called timeout.

But Michigan had no timeouts left.

As a result, a technical foul was called against the Wolverines and Donald Williams made both free throws to secure the Tar Heels' national championship.

Webber, who scored 23 points and grabbed 11 rebounds, said he couldn't remember the exact details of the play.

"I just called a timeout, and we didn't have one," he said. "It probably cost us the game. If I had known we didn't have any timeouts left, I wouldn't have called a timeout."

Michigan coach Steve Fisher said he reminded his players during their final timeout with 46 seconds left that they had no timeouts left.

"Apparently it wasn't clearly defined," he said. "We thought we did (make it clear), but apparently we didn't get point specific enough or we wouldn't have taken it."

The play recalled the end of the 1982 title game, when Fred Brown of Georgetown inadvertently threw a pass to North Carolina's James Worthy, costing the Hoyas a chance to win in the final seconds.

Two blunders. Two national championships for Dean Smith. Both titles came at the Superdome. Smith becomes the fourth active coach to win two national championships.

Williams, who finished with 25 points, made both free throws on the technical and added two more when he was fouled on the ensuing possession.

When the buzzer sounded, the Tar Heels charged the court and mobbed Smith, the second-winningest coach of all time who had always been maligned for his Final Four failures.

Asked about getting his second championship on a bizarre play, Smith said, "I don't want to say that was another fluke."

The Tar Heels got the lead for good when Derrick Phelps scored on a layup with 3:12 left for a 68-67 lead. Jimmy King of Michigan threw up an air ball from three-point range, and the Tar Heels extended the lead to three when George Lynch scored in the lane with 2:10 left. Montross, who had 16 points, dunked with one minute left and the Tar Heels lead by six.

Ray Jackson's jumper with 47 seconds left brought Michigan within three again. An unforced turnover gave the ball back to the Wolverines, and Webber scored on a rebound with 36 seconds left. Those were Michigan's final points for a season in which it went 31-5 — but failed again in the final game.

Williams, the Tar Heels' only legitimate perimeter threat, had five three-pointers in the semifinal win over Kansas and matched that in 11 attempts.

While Williams was scoring outside, Montross was occupying most of the Michigan frontcourt inside. That allowed Lynch to come up with 12 points and 10 rebounds, and allowed Williams to get off the long jumpers.

Michigan had taken a 67-63 lead with 4:13 left on a jumper by King, but Williams hit a 3-pointer to bring the Tar Heels within one and set the stage for 10-4 run that closed the game.

Clemens beats Kansas City in opener

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Roger Clemens saw something in Boston's 3-1 season-opening victory over Kansas City that he liked even better than Mike Greenwell's three-run triple or his own six-hit pitching.

"The key to the entire game was hitting the cutoff man and making the big play at the plate," the three-time Cy Young winner said of the bang-bang play that prevented the Royals from taking a 2-0 lead in the fourth. "That was more instrumental than even Mike's base hit. Obviously, the runs are important, but it's real nice to see that kind of defense right out of the gate."

Greenwell, whose 1992 season ended in June with knee and elbow problems, seemed prouder of that play than of his bases-clearing triple off Kevin Appier in the fifth.

"I made the throw — we hit the cutoff man and got the guy at home plate," the left-fielder said. "That was a big key to the game. Then I turned around and drove the ball deep in the gap for the hit. I know there were probably some questions about me because I wasn't throwing people out, and I wasn't driving the ball. It was great to answer all those questions."

Brent Mayne was thrown out on a good throw from Greenwell to shortstop Luis Rivera, who made a perfect peg to catcher Tony Pena.

Clemens struck out five and walked three in eight innings, increased his opening-day record to 3-1 in his team-record sixth straight opening day start.

Clemens is 13-3 in his career against Kansas City, including 6-3 in Royals Stadium with a 1.45 ERA.

Clemens had lost two previous decisions in Kansas City to shutouts by Appier, who gave up three runs and six hits in six innings, walked four and struck out two. Appier, 15-8 last season, had a 2.46 ERA in 1992, good for second in the league behind Clemens' 2.41.

Kansas City, which has lost seven of its last eight openers, wanted to get off to a fast start to make up for last year's 1-16 opening.

Consecutive doubles by Wally Joyner and George Brett with two out in the third put Kansas City ahead.

Boston loaded the bases in the fifth on Rivera's two-out double, Scott Fletcher's walk and Billy Hatcher's single. Greenwell's liner carried to the wall in right-center, just inches beyond centerfielder Brian McRae's desperate reach.

"I was trying to go low and away," Appier said. "I got it away, but it wasn't as low as I wanted."

Jose Lind, obtained by Kansas City from Pittsburgh to shore up weak defense at second, showed his Gold Glove ability with a run-saving play in the second.

After Appier walked Ivan Calderon and Scott Cooper with two outs, Pena hit a smash that Lind stopped while diving to his right.

On his knees, he threw out the runner by a step and ran off the field to a standing ovation from the crowd.

Jeff Russell, making his debut for the Red Sox, pitched a perfect ninth for the save.

McRae top vote-getter in Royals' all-time team

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hal McRae, Fred Patek and George Brett were among the top vote-getters in a fan vote for the Kansas City Royals all-time team as the organization starts its 25th season.

The Kansas City Star organized the ballot, in which 15,522 votes were cast by telephone and mail. Ballots were received from 20 states and as far away as Germany.

Voters were allowed to choose one player at each infield position, three outfielders, four starting pitchers, a reliever, a designated hitter and a manager.

To be eligible, position players must have appeared in at least 400 games for the Royals or played 250 games at any one position. Starting pitchers had to win at least 50 games, and relievers had to save at least 40 games. Managers had to win at least 400 games.

Notable also-rans in the voting included Danny Tartabull, who finished with 3,458 votes, just 277 votes behind the fans' third outfield selection, Al Cowens. Bo Jackson was the fans' fifth pick in the outfield, with 2,941 votes.

McRae got the most votes from the fans, with 11,365 for the designated hitter spot.

SPORTS DIGEST

► MEN'S GOLF TEAM 2 STROKES BACK

The K-State men's golf team had a good first day and is in a solid position to win the Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic.

The Cats have a two-round score of 594, behind only Oral Roberts' 592 and Southwest Missouri State's 593.

Richard Laing is leading the tournament, being played at the Tallgrass Country Club, with a score of 141.

Laing tied his career low with a second-round score of 69. If he wins, it will be the first tournament win of his career.

► MARLINS, ROCKIES GET STARTED

The Florida Marlins and the Colorado Rockies each played their first-ever games Monday afternoon, each starting their franchises in different fashion.

The Marlins beat the Los Angeles Dodgers 6-3 in Florida. Jeff Conine, a former minor leaguer for Kansas City who was left unprotected, got four hits and scored twice. Charlie Hough, the ageless knuckleballer, limited the Dodgers to three runs in six innings.

Colorado accomplished a lot of firsts in their major league debut Monday. Winning or scoring wasn't one of them. The Rockies were shut out 3-0 by Dwight Gooden and the New York Mets.

Reader shouldn't hate difference

DEAR CASSANDRA,
I agree with the "Worried Roommate" in regard to his humorous and jocular prose. It was wonderful and well-explained on why homosexuals should not be allowed in the military.
Since some are already in the forces, it just proves why there will never be unity with gays and lesbians in the military. Although I do agree with the "Worried Roommate's" roommate in that if they were in the army — and they are — they should be allowed to carry guns, unloaded of course.

It is people like you, Cassandra, and your narrow-mindedness that we see our nation falling to its knees. You can't handle the truth and you surely can't take a joke when you see one. You are as left as Clinton himself, and to me that is disappointing. Not that you are on the extreme left, don't get me wrong, but your thinking yesterday was as shallow as my drinking glass. Why don't you wake up and smell the coffee?
The Man In Politics

DEAR IDIOT,
I can take a joke — there was simply nothing funny about "Worried Roommate's" letter. Similarly, there is nothing enlightening, entertaining or informative about your letter. It's just more of the same redneck bigotry and hatred that spews out of the mouths of heartless morons. But thanks for taking the time to write.

I'm "as left as Clinton himself?" Say it isn't so!

I hope that someday you'll be able to see differences in people as something to be appreciated instead of something to be feared and hated.

Heifer receives prosthesis following fence accident

RANCE AMES

Collegian

After spending a night entangled in a barbed-wire fence, one lucky heifer was the recipient of a $1000 custom-designed prosthesis.

A surgical team from the College of Veterinary Medicine amputated the leg at the knee and replaced the lower portion with the prosthesis, or false limb.

The owner of the heifer is David Judd of Pomona.

Veterinary surgeon Guy St-Jean led the surgical team, and surgical residents David Anderson and Andre Desrochers assisted.

"We tried to save the leg first, but there was too much nerve damage as well as vein and artery damage," St-Jean said.

"We let the leg heal for a couple of weeks before the prosthesis surgery," he said.

Byron Whitaker, president of Certified Orthotic and Prosthetic Associates Inc., of Kansas City, Kan., and Doyle Collier, vice president, designed and fitted the prosthesis.

"After the amputation, we came down and made a plaster impression to help custom-fit the prosthesis," Whitaker said.

The prosthesis is made of acrylic resin combined with carbon fibers. He said it is strong and lightweight, costing about $1,000.

Whitaker said they generally work with human patients, but it is not difficult to make a prosthesis for animals.

"We always have to custom fit a prosthesis for humans. So, it isn't too hard for us to shift to animals," he said. "The same materials are used for animal and human prostheses."

Whitaker previously constructed a neck brace for an American Royal champion horse, while Collier built a prosthetic leg for a St. Bernard.

Prosthetics is a means to save the life of a valuable breeding animal that otherwise would have to be slaughtered, St-Jean said.

"This heifer is a valuable registered Gelbvieh," St-Jean said. "Because this heifer is black, while most Gelbvieh's are brown, she is even more valuable," St-Jean said.

Because of the heifer's rare genetics, she will be used as an embryo donor, St-Jean said.

This is the first prosthesis operation performed by the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"K-State vet-med is the nation's leader in working with bone fractures and surgeries of cattle, but we couldn't repair this leg," he said.

The heifer is recuperating well, St-Jean said.

"She is quickly adapting and learning to walk with her prosthesis," St-Jean said. "She will be ready for release this week."

The prosthesis will have to be removed every day to care for the stump of the leg, he said.

Artist featured in jewelry exhibition

ROBBIE SPEARS

Collegian

Soldering, pounding, fabricating and forging.

These are words used to describe the making of metals and jewelry.

Karen Lauseng, senior in art, had a chance to show off her jewelry and other forms of art through a metalsmith and jewelry exhibition from March 29 to April 2 in the Gallery 6 Art Building.

Lauseng estimates she works on her art and jewelry about five hours a day, five days a week.

"I've been working with metals for almost four years," she said.

Although Lauseng has gained experience, it has taken a lot of hard work.

"When I first started out, it was difficult. I didn't even know how to turn on the blow torch or put the saw blades in," she said.

Lauseng, who also has a degree in economics, became interested in art after she took a few basic art courses.

"By the time I was finishing up my degree in economics, I had no desire to go into that field, so I pursued my interest in art," she said.

Lauseng's interest in art is more focused toward metals now.

"I like working with metal for several reasons. It doesn't break. If you make a mistake, you can always correct it. I also like its textures," she said.

Besides textures, Lauseng said she likes the creativity of metal.

"There are so many different varieties you can come up with when expressing yourself with metal," she said.

In the future, Lauseng would like to manufacture her jewelry and market it. However, right now she feels she is still learning.

"I'm still in the learning stage, I think. Plus, I need to develop my skills more before I sell anything," she said.

Lauseng said there are many stages that take place in creating her metals and jewelry.

"First, I sketch what I want to create. Then I determine what metals I'm going to use, and then I start the process of creating what I want," she said.

Lauseng spends anywhere from 15 to 20 hours on a project.

"Everything I do is basically for a grade," she said.

Lauseng gives a lot of credit to her professor Elliott Pujol.

"He has definitely had a major impact on my work," she said.

Lauseng said her exhibition was a tremendous amount of work.

"There are over 40 pieces of work in the exhibition, and each piece tells its own story," she said.

Many of Lauseng's works are currently on display at other shows and competitions.

Amateur radio offers far-reaching education

Enthusiasts use communication tool for telephone calls, computer messages

MARK JONES

Collegian

To amateur radio enthusiasts, there are no limits. They can communicate as close as across campus to as far as the other side of the world.

Jeff Smith, senior in electrical engineering, uses amateur radio to stay in touch locally.

He said he takes his radio with him when he drives and goes on campus at night so he can stay in touch with his wife.

"I always carry a radio whenever I drive somewhere," he said.

Jeff and other amateurs can make telephone calls from their portable radios.

"We report accidents when they happen because we can call the police," he said.

Other amateurs use radio to learn about the world.

"I learn geography and about other people by talking to them," David Yoder, Marlatt Hall director, said.

"I just tune around and see if there is someone I want to talk to," he said.

When he finds someone, he listens for their call sign to see if it is someone new. Every country uses different letters in their call sign.

"You become more aware of the world. You talk to places that other people haven't heard of," Yoder said.

Yoder has talked to amateur radio operators in 238 countries.

"That's not a tremendous amount — there are people who have talked to every country," he said.

"My No. 1 interest is to contact people in a lot of different countries. It is definitely possible through amateur radio to talk to people in every country in a lifetime."

Not all amateurs use radio to communicate by voice.

Eric Smith, senior in electrical engineering, uses packet radio to communicate.

Packet radio connects computers together through radio.

"It's almost like using a modem, but you're not using phone lines. You're using radios," Smith said.

Packet radio mainly is used for message passing, not downloading files like many people do with modems, he said.

"You can send messages to people and get information — it's mainly text. It's possible to send binary computer files, but it's really slow," he said.

Many amateur radio enthusiasts enjoy their hobby because they can always learn new things, he said.

King called for attention to racial injustices in speech

"I try to present a realistic position," King said. "There have been significant strides for racial justice — but we have a long, long way to go."

One racist action that continued was the underemployment of black people, he said.

"There is another kind of murder," he said. "They work every day, long and hard, but they make so little they can't function in the mainstream of our economic life."

He congratulated students in the movement for civil rights.

"When the students sit down, they are standing up for the best American dream," King said.

King said, though he believed non-violent methods of exposing moral defenses are most effective in fighting desegregation, he could not condemn violence without recognizing the intolerable conditions that create it.

"America has failed to hear the plight of the Negro and is calling for attention. As long as justice is postponed, we will be on the verge of social disruption."

The audience interrupted King 12 times with applause, giving him a standing ovation afterwards. A large crowd of autograph seekers gathered around afterward, which delayed a coffee given in his honor by President McCain.

Landon Lecture announced

MEGAN MULLIKAN
Collegian

Former U.S. Ambassador to the Soviet Union Robert Strauss will deliver a Landon Lecture on May 5.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to K-State President Jon Wefald and chairman of the Alfred M. Landon Lecture on Public Issues, said the events in the former Soviet Union made it important to have the last ambassador to the Soviet Union lecture.

In August 1991, Strauss was appointed as ambassador to the Soviet Union by former President George Bush.

During his time in Moscow, Strauss witnessed the break-down of communism in the Soviet Union and the new democratic administration of Russian President Boris Yeltsin.

Reagan said he asked Strauss to address what is going on in Russia and the other confederate states and what it means to Americans.

Because of the many changes in Russia, Reagan said he believes everyone can benefit Strauss' speech.

"There is nothing more important in the international scene than what is happening in Russia," he said.

Strauss resigned from his position as ambassador last November and has rejoined his law firm, which he helped form in 1946. He also headed former President Jimmy Carter's election campaigns in 1976 and 1980.

During Carter's administration, Strauss held the cabinet-level position of Special Trade Representative. He worked in Tokyo on trade negotiations, which ended in the Trade Act of 1979.

Carter also asked Strauss to serve as a representative in the Middle East peace negotiations.

King's death ignited riots, celebration

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Sunday was the 25th anniversary of Martin Luther King Jr.'s death. This is the second in a four-part series discussing King's visit to K-State and racism in Manhattan, then and now.

Martin Luther King Jr. never got to see his promised land.

On April 4, 1968, King was standing on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tenn. He was shot in the neck by an unknown assailant and died less than an hour later.

A tribute to King was held on the next day at K-State at All Faiths Chapel. Students, faculty and Manhattan residents gathered to mourn and pay tribute to King.

William Tremmel, director of religious activity at K-State, spoke, along with several priests.

"He was my man," Tremmel said. "When he died, I wept."

Some Manhattan citizens said they felt shock. Others cheered. Paul Kjollic, a K-State student, wrote a letter to the Collegian expressing his indignation to the campus.

"What is wrong with the American people?" he wrote. "Tonight Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated ... My fellow residents of Marlatt Hall (second floor, west wing, to be particular) greeted the news of the assassination with cheers that echoed down the hallways. In an air of great joy and happiness, the informed student spread the word to the uninformed, who also joined in the 'celebration.'"

Mrs. Warren Longren wrote to the Manhattan Mercury, expressing her disgust at the applause that greeted the announcement in the Veteran of Foreign Wars meeting.

The Mercury polled several people for their reactions the day after King died. Most didn't seem to understand what King meant to some people.

"I was surprised," Mrs. Jerry Roberts, Manhattan, said. "Everybody said he was for peace. I don't believe this. He started his talks peacefully, but they always ended leading to violence. I can't say I'm sorry, though I'm sorry he died this way."

Thomas Taylor, also of Manhattan, offered an opposing viewpoint.

"I was quite stunned at the loss of a person who will go down in history as a truly great man."

K-State president accepts nomination in search for Michigan State administrator

WADE SISSON
SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

K-State President Jon Wefald and Provost James Coffman are on the list of candidates for university president of Michigan State.

Wefald has accepted the nomination, while Coffman has neither accepted nor declined, said Bill Frischling, editor-in-chief of the State News, Michigan State's student newspaper.

Wefald, who was en route to a meeting of the NCAA Presidential Commission in New Orleans, was unavailable for comment Tuesday night.

Coffman said he did not know

Budig declined to confirm this, but said several Michigan State faculty members have called him about Wefald.

"Jon Wefald will be on many lists in the years ahead," Budig said. "He has an excellent reputation in national circles. I would hope he would remain in Kansas. He cares very much for K-State."

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said neither Wefald nor Coffman have discussed this with him.

"This is news to me," Krause said. "I'm not surprised."

Krause said the possibility of him leaving with either Wefald or Coffman has not been discussed.

Robert Traxler, spokesperson for the Michigan State search committee, said the purported list of candidates is inaccurate.

"It is the search committee's policy not to comment on any name," Traxler said.

The State News published a list of candidates today, attributing sources close to the presidential search committee.

"When Mr. Traxler goes into his private meeting to discuss who is going to lead this publicly funded university, I hope they take a copy of our newspaper, compare it with their list and decide if it's accurate," Frischling said.

Frischling said 132 individuals were included on the list of potential candidates for the university president position. Of these, 41 have accepted, and 14 have declined thus far.

Slattery talks to town

Budget, health care were main focus of meeting

MEGAN MOORE
Collegian

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., addressed more than 100 Manhattan residents last night in a town meeting.

The meeting was organized at the request of many area groups, including the Riley County Democratic Party, Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, Flint Hills Association of Black Educators, and Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment.

Slattery focused on issues ranging from health care to budget cuts, to taxes and spending. He said it was the largest crowd he had seen for a town meeting in Manhattan.

"Right now, Senate is considering a budget resolution that is presently locked in a filibuster. Included in this package are insurance benefits, an accelerated highway program and funds for education," Slattery said. "To get the resolution out of the filibuster, Senate will have to vote, or Dole and Clinton will have to compromise."

The proposed budget is targeting a reduction in the federal deficit and improving the quality of life and education among all Americans.

"Today I visited the Manhattan Job Corps Center that has about 250 participants. Every person in this program has found a job — many of whom have led difficult lives and have now learned the basic skills needed to find a job," Slattery said.

He said there are a lot of tough cuts in the proposed plan. Cuts affecting retirees and government workers in the form of pay reductions. Also, reductions in Medicare and Pentagon spending. "There are a lot of budget cuts, but these cuts will pay for the improvement of highways and housing," he said.

SENATE ALLOCATIONS

Senate began the last week of allocations Tuesday night. Five groups were considered for allocation money.

Legal Services for Students' allocation of $34,736 was passed unanimously with one amendment that increased the amount of advertising to $96, allowing for four advertisements. It provides advice concerning any legal matter within the attorney's expertise.

ASIA was allocated $1,390.75. Part of that, $1,240.75, was for Asian-American Awareness month, while $150 was for an MMASU Leadership Retreat for ASIA officers. ASIA brings together different students from Asian descent and other interested students to establish an organization that addresses campus issues.

FONE Crisis Center received $18,539.45 for telephone services and salaries for the coordinator and assistant coordinator. FONE provides short-term crisis intervention and peer counseling.

Touchstone received $1,595.35 for printing and distribution of its publication. It is a literary magazine of poems and short stories by undergraduate students from K-State and other universities.

Kappa Kappa Psi and Tau Beta Sigma did not receive any funds for their budgets. It promotes K-State bands, honors outstanding band members and develops leadership.

TWO TIMS TO REMAIN CANDIDATES

Tim Orindgreff and Tim Madden are still in the race to become the next K-State student body president and vice president.

The two came under question by the 1993 Student Governing Association Elections Committee for missing a mandatory candidates' meeting on Friday. Orindgreff said the two had completely spaced off the meeting.

Mary Farmer, SGA Elections Committee chair, said there were no specific guidelines about removing the two from the ballot for not attending the meeting and not appointing a representative.

The committee voted 5-2 to let the two remain on the ballot.

New organization to benefit campus

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

As of last week, the student chapter of the National United Law Enforcement Officers Association will be recognized as an official student organization at K-State.

Shawn Gordon, senior in sociology and criminal justice, gave a speech last Wednesday to the Student Governing Association in an attempt to make the organization official.

Gordon is currently the president of NULEOA, and the chapter will elect new officers in the fall.

The student chapter originated in Memphis, Tenn., and the student chapter at Kentucky State University has 1,500 students in its chapter.

"As far as I know, we are the first one in the Big Eight," Gordon said. "We'll beat KU out of something."

Being part of NULEOA is a good way to find out about job opportunities in law enforcement or any kind of criminal justice field, he said.

"At Kentucky State, 89 percent of its students get placed," he said.

As a club, Gordon wants to try to help different organizations within the community. Ideas include helping with the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the Red Cross Blood Drive.

K-State Police Chief Charles Beckom has suggested the club make checks around campus at night to see that all of the lights and emergency services are working properly.

"I will provide assistance to them in any way I can," Beckom said.

Being part of a national chapter will give the students national recognition, Gordon said.

"We will get publications on what's really going on in law enforcement instead of just what we hear," he said.

The student chapter of NULEOA meets the third Tuesday of every month. NULEOA will meet at 6:30 p.m. April 20 in Union 208. Michael Finnegan, professor of anthropology, will be the guest speaker.

Your Q. & A. about Student Financial Assistance

Q. I've heard there are changes in financial aid eligibility for the Fall - 1993 and Spring - 1994 award year. What does this mean to me as a financial aid applicant?

A. Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 took place in July, 1992 and will regulate all financial aid programs until 1997. The maximum Pell Grant for 1993-94 is funded at $2300 and the minimum at $400. Overall, a decreased level of eligibility for grants will be the norm replaced by a higher level of eligibility for low interest loans.

Q. What type of low interest loans are available to financial aid applicants?

A. In addition to the regular Stafford Loan, a new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan is available to all students regardless of income levels. The annual limits under the Stafford Loan program have also changed:

$2625 for first year students $3500 for second year students
$5500 for remaining undergraduate students
$8500 for graduate/professional students after 10/1/93

If you do not borrow the annual limits under the Subsidized Stafford Loan, you may be eligible to borrow these amounts under the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program. If you have a question regarding your eligibility, you are encouraged to make an appointment with a financial aid counselor by calling 532-6420.

Q. What if my parents want to borrow for me?

A. You must be a dependent student for financial aid purposes in order for your parents to borrow through the PLUS Loan. The parent loan allows one of your parents to borrow up to the cost of your education minus any other financial aid you may receive. Previously, parents were limited by a $4,000 cap for each student attending college. Your parents may call or write the financial aid office to inquire about the PLUS loan. The address is: Student Financial Assistance, 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. How do I know if I will receive the Pell Grant or loans?

A. Your 1993-94 Award Letter will show your eligibility for grants and loans. It is possible for all students both dependent and independent to receive low-interest loans once your Free Application for Federal Student Aid is received by the financial aid office. Congress has made changes to help students regardless of income levels; however, the shift to personal responsibility for educational expenses is a direct impact of the Higher Education Amendments for 1992, and will be reflected in students' awards for 1993-94.

STDs/AIDS: COPING WITH YOUR EMOTIONAL REACTIONS

You have just been told that you have an STD or that you are HIV+ . . . initial numbness is transformed into a swirl of emotions. What might you feel? What can you do to cope? Some common emotional reactions are listed below with corresponding suggestions for coping with each.

MOVE FROM COMMON
EMOTIONAL REACTIONS

DENIAL: You may try to ignore the impact of your own behaviors. For example, people under the influence of alcohol or drugs may make irresponsible choices in partners and sexual practices; they don't always remember to put on a condom properly, if at all. Or, it may be taking a "Why Worry" attitude or believing that it can't happen to you, that you're invincible.

SHAME...GUILT...ANGER: Based on your own or society's biases, you may feel shame or even blame for having an STD or being HIV+. Feelings of guilt or anger may fill you whether it is realistic or not.

FEAR...LOSS: You may fear the long-term effects of the illness which may include issues of loss such as the loss of friends, loss of fertility or impact on childbearing, loss of self-image, or even loss of your life when AIDS is involved.

WORRY: You may go around in circles in your mind about: What do I say to my partner? Should I tell anyone? When will the next flare-up come? The thoughts may come and go, or they may seem endless...

ISOLATION/AVOIDANCE: Initially, you may be unable or unwilling to talk to parents or friends about STDs/AIDS. You may avoid dating or close relationships or even any social situations.

MOVE TO MORE EFFECTIVE COPING

ACCEPTANCE: Understand the fact that alcohol impairs judgment and common sense. If you drink, don't make any foolish or impulsive decisions that could affect the rest of your life. It CAN happen to you. By the year 2000 as many as 110 million people will be affected with HIV, not to mention other STDs. Become knowledgeable; learn as much as you can about these diseases.

GET FACTS to confront the stigma; join a support group to learn you are not alone; accept that this is a health issue, not a moral issue; direct your anger to take action for change, not harm.

TAKE STEPS: No one should face a difficult situation alone because loneliness increases the fear. Don't wait until a crisis to talk/interact with supportive peers or family, build on positives in relationships. It is all right to get counseling for help in coping.

FOCUS ON FACTS/REALITIES rather than the fears. Try writing down your thoughts/worries: this may make them easier to focus on one at a time; develop objective plans for self; develop stress-management skills; seek help.

REACH OUT: talk to a trusted friend or family member, seek change in current social patterns, develop new friends or social network, develop or strengthen relationship skills.

Incumbent loses in city commission race

"I enjoyed my time on the commission, but I am pretty sure it will not be difficult for me to find other ways to spend my time."

EUGENE KLINGLER
CITY COMMISSIONER

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

Being an incumbent was both good and bad in Tuesday's Manhattan City Commission elections.

It was good for Edith Stunkel, who finished first — more than 800 votes in front of her nearest competitor.

It was bad for Gene Klingler, who finished in fourth place and won't be returning to the commission.

The elections were successful for first-time candidates Sydney Carlin and Steve Hall, who will join Stunkel on the commission after finishing second and third.

Carlin said she was very pleased with her showing in the election.

"I am really proud of the confidence that the community has placed in me, and I will do the best I can," Carlin said. "I was very pleased with the results."

Carlin said she believes K-State played a big role in the election.

"A lot of the people in and around the University seemed very concerned about this election, and the University definitely played a large role," Carlin said.

There will be many pressing issues to deal with in her upcoming term, but after the long and stressful election she wanted to enjoy her win, she said.

"Tonight I just want it to be known that I am very pleased," Carlin said.

Incumbent Klingler said he was not surprised with the results, although he was a bit disappointed in them.

"I knew going in that it was going to be real close," Klingler said.

"I think that there is just an overall distrust of people who have been in power for a long time, and I think it is the general mood of the country to put new people into office."

"But I have nothing to regret. I think we accomplished a heck of a lot in the 14 years that I served. If they accomplish as much in the next 14 years, Manhattan will be in great shape."

Klingler said the main reason he felt bad about the election was because so many people had put time and money into his many campaigns.

"I really feel bad for my supporters. They have put in a lot of effort. I can't complain a bit about my support."

"I enjoyed my time on the commission, but I am pretty sure it will not be difficult for me to find other ways to spend my time."

Tom Whalen, who was also a challenger in the election, finished in fifth place.

He said he wished there were more interest in the elections.

"It would be nice if more people would get out and vote, but I am not sure if more people voting would have changed the results of the election," Whalen said.

Election Commissioner Ilene Colbert said 30 percent of eligible voters turned out to vote in the election. This was disappointing to her, she said.

"I had hoped for 35 percent, and I was a little disappointed with the turnout, but the turnout was pretty close to what I expected," Colbert said.

City commission passes bill on street music

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Manhattan City Commission voted 5-0 Tuesday night to authorize the Aggieville Business Association to install audio speakers in Aggieville.

The measure will allow nine speakers to be installed. The speakers will be used to broadcast background music, as well as occasional advertisements.

Originally, it was thought a city noise ordinance might need to be amended for the speakers to be put into place, William Frost, city attorney, said.

Instead of amending the ordinance, the commission authorized the use of the public right of way.

Commissioner Eugene Klingler said he received calls from residents who were concerned about the installation of the speakers adding to noise coming from the Aggieville area.

"We're not opening up the city to loud speakers on every street corner or light pole," he said.

The commission is working with a specific area of the city, and the policy has explicit terms addressing the use of public audio speakers, Klingler said.

In essence, the commission will allow the installation of the speakers as long as use of the speakers is consistent with the city noise ordinance.

Frost said the current noise ordinance is in two basic parts. First, there should be no unreasonable noise that disturbs others, and the ordinance defines unreasonable noise as amplified sound between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. that extends 50 feet beyond the structure.

In accordance with the noise ordinance, the commission decided the speakers will not broadcast between the hours of 11 p.m. and 7 a.m., except for use by law enforcement officials or fire personnel in emergency situations.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Non-profit, non-credibility

THE ISSUE

Many heads of non-profit organizations make six-figure salaries.

WE SUGGEST

These groups must stop taking advantage of tax breaks and the image they project to a contributing public.

For all you upcoming May graduates, there may be the best advice you'll ever get — go climb the corporate ladder of a non-profit organization. That's where the money is.

According to a recent report, six-figure salaries are becoming commonplace at such organizations. Consider John Rowe, president of New York's Mount Sinai Medical Center, who pulls down $799,492 every year.

Or, at the more economical end of the pay scale, Nathan Leventhal, president of the non-profit Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, who rakes in a paltry $315,000.

Although many non-profit organizations are not necessarily charity groups, the majority of them use their non-profit label to garner enormous tax exemptions as well as to solicit contributions.

These contributions usually come from a public who equates the "non-profit" label with a group of sacrificing people doing good deeds for minimal pay.

How would you feel about giving money to the non-profit Children's Hospital in Washington, D.C., when their president makes $337,110 annually?

Currently, former United Way President William Aramony is trying to extract a multi-million-dollar retirement settlement from the organization — one year after he scandalized it with the revelation of his $435,000 salary.

These groups need to stop abusing the tax breaks meant for organizations with real priorities, and they need to make sure contributions aren't falling into the pocket of nearest CEO.

Is it worth the big hangover?

MIKE PORTER

Rationalizing drinking, especially drinking to excess, is quite common and quite simple. There seems to be a defense mechanism that allows us to accept drunkenness as a behavioral norm.

Alcohol can absorb students' lives. Research tells us "the typical college student spends more money on alcohol than books." In fact, students spent more than $5.5 billion in 1991 on alcohol, as opposed to $1.7 billion spent on college libraries. One more statistic: in 1991, $100 billion was spent for higher education in the United States, while $86 billion was spent on alcohol-related problems.

Enough of the numbers — people are not going to stop drinking. What we must consider, rather, are some of the ethical issues associated with alcohol use, and specifically, its misuse.

Most people have deep reservations about hurting other individuals, mentally or physically. Most people do not, however, have deep reservations about downing a $1.25 pitcher or a "big" beer. All-you-can-drink specials are even better. Even if over-consumption has led to problems in the past (violence, harassing behavior, etc.), it does not usually lead to the end of the overdoing. Being drunk has become an excuse.

Ask people why they laugh about vomiting in someone's car. Ask them why they smashed a window in a fraternity house and laughed (through a headache) the next morning. Ask someone why she is not embarrassed about waking up next to someone she cannot recognize, let alone remember a name.

Most of us who drink in college (which is most of us in college) have probably done something similar to one of the aforementioned situations, and rationalized it while working a math equation that enables us to figure out just how high our blood-alcohol content really was.

The idea of excusing our actions through drunkenness has become so prevalent that now we let drunkenness be an excuse for the inappropriate behavior of others. It may well have been a joke letter, but the Feb. 26 Cassandra column is an excellent case in point — a woman ignored a sexual assault because the offender had been drinking.

What if, when charges were pressed, the court system excused people who were intoxicated because they were not in control? That's what we do as students. Is that fair to ourselves? Is that fair to an offending individual?

We skip classes and appointments and bomb Friday examinations because we had to go out the night before and do what college students are expected to do, what our friends expect us to do.

Asking these questions is not intended to lead one to believe that prohibition is the moral/legal solution to the problem, but a suggestion that we reconsider our attitudes about alcohol.

The words of Jimmy Buffet's "Why Don't We Get Drunk and Screw?" make an entertaining song — maybe, though, they aren't the best way to live.

Letter to el presidente

Dear Bill,

Well, I guess congratulations are in order. Kudos big guy. I hope the move went well. Probably a bit of a culture shock. D.C. certainly ain't no Little Rock. How about that indoor plumbing?

Some friends of mine went to see Chelsea at her new school. I was a little surprised you all opted for the swanky private school over the more pristine public variety. I am sure it was a tough decision. I mean those public schools — a true beacon of democracy — that you embraced with such vigor during your campaign can sure be scary in the big city. Suppose you're feeling a little out of touch right about now.

So, enough about me. The reason I was writing was to tell you that me and about a million or so friends will be in town on the weekend of April 25. Don't worry, we have already made arrangements to stay with friends. Besides, I'm not a big fan of cats, and frankly, the Gores scare me.

As I'm sure you know, April 25 is the big March on Washington for Lesbian, Gay and Bi Equal Rights and Liberation. Kind of a cumbersome title. So, let's just call it The March. Sure hope it is a nice day and all. Mom told me to pack an extra sweater just in case. Most likely I will heed her advice.

Seems rather appropriate that The March would come on the heels of your election and following such a wacky year for our community. What were those zany kids in Colorado thinking anyway? Would love to hear your take on that whole mess sometime.

And how about those crazy Republicans. Are they a boil or what? I must say their convention was quite a hoot. I mean thanks to that fabulous savings-and-loan deregulation idea, I now owe somewhere in the neighborhood of $15,000. And that Iraq-gate. Once again "ol "Pardon me George" pulled a fast one. And they think my morals are out of kilter.

But then there was you Bill. Boy did you cajole the queers into your ranks. You were our only hope — or so it seemed. You spoke at our conferences. You addressed our community's concerns on a policy and human rights platform not on a morality debate. Pretty cool for a goofy guy from Arkansas.

Then that whole gays-in-the-military thing stubbed your political toe. It's even bigger than Amy Fisher. Who wudda thunk it?

Somehow or another you made us believe you when you said you were going to lift the ban. Then that loon Sen. Les Aspin brought out the chess board, and now we are engaged in a six-month-long match. Boring.

Bill, Bill, Bill. Don't forget who or what brought you to Washington. Remember our checks, our voices and our support? Well it wasn't unconditional. We believed you, but we're not stupid. We have been fooled before.

Just as we marched to the polls in November to cast a vote for you, now we will march through the streets of D.C. to show you that we are still here.

It would certainly be nice to see those Lincoln Log legs of yours on the 25th. I thought I had seen enough of them during the campaign, but I was wrong. How about it?

Oh, and if you are afraid people will think you are gay or something because you are participating in The March, don't worry. If you would like, you can march with one of my straight friends who is going. She wants to show her support for the rights of all individuals to live their lives in freedom.

Her name is Michelle and she is about 5'6" tall and has long brown hair. She is real loud. So, you can't miss her. We will be marching with the Kansas contingency. Should be easy to find because — by the luck of the draw — we will be following the leather contingency. Ah, the diversity. Some innocent midwestern kids walking in the shadows of leather-clad S & M types. Only in America!

Enough of my rambling for now. Send Chelsea and Hillary my love and extend my invitation. Hope to see you there. If not you can expect many more letters from my friends and me.

Peace, Love and Regularity. Or since you seem to be a bit of a Michael Bolton fan: Time, Love and Tenderness.

SAFE SEX

Defending condoms and sex education

Editor,

This letter is in response to David Weatherford's letter about safe-sex awareness. As members of Lafene's volunteer program, Peer AIDS Education Team, we would like to address some of Weatherford's inaccuracies.

Condoms are not 100-percent effective; however, in the March 1989 Consumer Report, condoms were rated on their projected maximum failure rate. In this report, condoms were found to be from 90- to 98.5-percent effective when used properly.

Therefore, if a person chooses to engage in sexual activity, it is better to use a condom than not to. The only safe sex is abstinence, and through safer sex, the risk of contracting HIV and other STDs is lowered.

It is true that people should use common sense when engaging in sexual acts; however, in today's society, many people still feel that there is no need to worry because "it can't happen to me." This is not true; in fact, the fastest growing group of newly infected HIV persons are women in rural areas, and yes, Kansas is considered a rural area.

Through education and communication, we are trying to provide factual information so people will not place themselves in harmful situations. If you choose to engage in sexual acts, please practice "safer sex."

DATE RAPE

Know what to do in dangerous situations

Editor,

I would like K-State students to educate themselves about a serious issue — date rape.

Date rape is a serious crime and a major problem on college campuses. It consists of sexual assault against a woman, committed by someone the victim knows and trusts.

You can help avoid date rape by being alert, knowing yourself, being aware of your tolerance for alcohol, developing strong communication and assertiveness skills, setting limits and communicating with your date.

If you are attacked, remain calm and don't panic; scream and make lots of noise, and don't forget to fight back. Contact someone close to you, such as a friend or relative, and a professional who deals with rape to give you more information on what else to do. You also should contact the police to report the incident and get medical treatment as soon as possible after the assault.

The University has many resources — please take the time to learn about date rape.

ACADEMICS

It is live or die time for minors program

Editor,

I am writing to you in reference to the issue of the academic minors program.

I saw the article in the Collegian a couple of weeks ago on the upcoming final vote for the proposed K-State academic minors program. This proposal goes in front of Faculty Senate at 3 p.m. on April 13. All I am really asking for is support from the students.

This proposal has been dragging on way too long, and I am sick and tired of this procrastination crap. I know this proposal has been tabled and retabled since 1989. What the hell have these people been doing? I mean, there is so much talk about how much student support there is on this issue. So, why has it taken so long to get the ball rolling?

Now that the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee has passed this proposal, all the Faculty Senate has to do is approve it. I just hope they realize how much support the student body has for the K-State minors program. Let's finally finish what we have started and show our support by showing up to Faculty Senate on April 13.

REVIEW

Griffith keeps folk music torch burning

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

Upon the first listen to Nanci Griffith, I was sitting among friends in a smoke-filled living room. Friends who were constantly referring to her as having the "voice of an angel."

At first, I was unsure of the native Texan because I don't particularly care for country music. But after listening to Griffith I found she has the unique ability to weave her country roots with her love of folk music.

Her latest release, "Other Voices, Other Rooms," celebrates her revival of folk music from the writers she respects and grew up listening to.

The title comes from Truman Capote's first novel, written in 1948, which signaled the rebirth of interest in folk music and its presence from the late 19th century to the present.

The torch of folk music is being passed from the first generation on to others, and Griffith's own revival is a reminder that folk music is still very much alive.

Griffith's soft, yet strong voice dominates her passion and emotion felt and heard throughout the 17-track compact disc. Her revival of folk on this CD comes from all the songwriters she covers.

From Kate Wolf and Woody Guthrie to Gordon Lightfoot and Bob Dylan, Griffith is preserving folk music from older generations as well as incorporating new musicians by introducing today's youth to the founders.

In addition to Griffith's many established friends who appear on the CD, there are many great singer/songwriters who volunteered for the project.

The Indigo Girls (Amy Ray and Emily Saliers), John Prine, James Hooker, Arlo Guthrie and Guy Clark are just a few of the outstanding contributors.

Tracks off this CD can't be classified — they individually shine as some of the best representatives of folk music.

One favorite is "Do Re Mi," an upbeat acoustic song by Woody Guthrie. Guy Clark sings along with Griffith that if you don't like the "garden of Eden" found in California, go back to the South.

Throughout the CD, Griffith's distinct soothing voice is backed by her acoustic guitar, additional vocals, strings and percussion.

The CD is an incredible example of Griffith's intense hard work to produce a project filled with respectable, established musicians in folk music history.

"Other Voices, Other Rooms" is Griffith's way of saying thank you to friends and admired musicians — everyone who has aided her in her 15 years as a recording artist.

This CD is a reminder there are still songwriters who appreciate good, quality folk music and aren't caught up in the façade of fame and fortune.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A dedicated crew

Cat regatta team gets up at the crack of dawn to compete

ERIC MOORE

Collegian

The K-State crew team first set its paddles in the water in 1963, but rowing has not only been at K-State for the past 30 years — it is widely known as one of the oldest sports in America.

"Crew is an early morning sport," Wildcat crew coach Alex Binkowski said. "A lot of people cringe at that thought, thinking, 'how can you get up that early?'"

"But after a 5:30 practice, and the coach says you are all done, it is a beautiful scene — the water is calm; the birds are chirping."

There are two types of regattas in rowing — head races and sprinting.

In the fall, the longer races, or head races, are in season. Those races run 3 miles or more.

"The races run like a car rally," Binkowski said. "When the race starts, each boat is buffing it out for position. But the clock time at the end of the race is more important than position, because that is what is used to determine the winner."

"At this point in the race the coxswain, the person in the back of the boat who steers and coaches while out on the water, does a lot of work."

The spring semester consists mostly of the sprints, or 2,000-meter races — Olympic distance.

"This is almost like the mile in track," Binkowski said.

There are two types of rowing, including sweep rowing or sculling.

"Sweep rowing is where each person has one oar, alternating on opposite sides from one person to the next," Traci Cole, the novice women's coach, said. "Sculling gives each person two oars to row with."

The boats are identified by how many people they will hold.

"There are eights, which are about 65 feet long and cost about $16,000 each," Cole said. "They hold eight rowers and one coxswain. There are also fours, which are about 50 feet long. You can race in pairs or singles."

Binkowski said there is a $50 club fee for those who want to join the club. That cost pays for all tips and races the team might take.

"We are a student-run organization," he said. "And as long as I am here, we will decide what equipment to purchase and where we will race."

"We go year-round," he said. "Til mid-November, we are in the water. Then we head to the weight room, rowing machines, and we run. Rowing is mostly legs — you use your arms very little. As soon as it is safe and warm, we head back to the boats."

"Right now, my role as head coach is new," Binkowski said. "I started in January, so my goal right now is to help rebuild the program. One thing we are doing is we will have a summer rowing program where people can come out and learn to row."

A canine tragedy: the saga of 'stumpy'

About ten years ago back in Harvey County, I worked at a Dairy farm just outside of Walton, Kan., where Art's Chips are made.

My buddy and I were cutting wheat around dusk, and the light conditions were marginal at best.

Disaster struck.

There was a dog. For some reason, he was sleeping in the wheat field and woke up just as the header of the combine grabbed his torso. The shears cut off his legs.

We shut the machine down immediately and went down to the dog. Amazingly, he was alive.

I ripped up an old jacket and wrapped his legs as best I could. My buddy started the pickup and drove it to us.

We got in the old blue Dodge and took the poor hound all the way to the vet.

Amazingly, the vet was able to save our little pal. The dog was doing quite well about two weeks after the accident. I was happy for him.

When the dog was ready to be released, I wondered who was going to take care of him. I decided that since I had been the driver of the machine that disabled him, I should help bear his burden.

The dog and I got along great. He was actually very active and very friendly. We were pals.

The veterinarian told me that he was a Rhodesian rabbit dog and probably had a damn good nose on him.

The vet was right — the Rhodesian turned out to be one hell of a good rabbit dog. The bad part was that I had to push him around in a wheelbarrow. That damn wheelbarrow got really heavy by the end of a long day in the field.

To solve the wheelbarrow problem, I had the vet design some wooden legs for my little friend. The little wooden legs fit pretty good and allowed the dog to meander from the house to the barn where he slept.

That Rhodesian rabbit dog had the worst luck of any canine I've ever seen.

A terrible fire raged through the barn. All the able-bodied animals were able to escape, but not the little Rhodesian. He was trapped in the inferno.

Burnt my dog to the ground.

Once again, we were back at square one. I tried to think of a way to make life better for my little hunting dog, but the idea just wasn't coming to me.

For that matter, the dog wasn't coming to me. Hell, I never even named the little mutt because even if I did call him, he couldn't come to me anyway.

So there was my little canine friend. What could I do?

I finally went to a very famous vet in Zimmerdale, Kan. He designed some metal legs for my little hunting partner.

The metal legs worked great. They were a little heavier than the wooden legs, but the dog enjoyed them — except when he went swimming in the old mine pond.

Boy, could that dog swim fast. Never did get nailed by one of those nasty mines — good swimmer that dog.

But that was his summer torture. In the dead of winter, when we went rabbit hunting, was when things really got ugly.

Like any dog, the Rhodesian would lick his underside, starting with his stomach and working out to his metal legs.

Then he would start whining because his little tongue was stuck to his little metal legs. What a mess. I had to carry an insulated canteen full of hot water to get his little tongue unstuck from his little metal pedals.

The last time I ever saw my little Rhodesian rabbit dog was when I took him to the junkyard.

Boy, the junkyard magnets on those cranes sure are strong. I'm going to miss that huntin' dog.

SPORTS DIGEST

► WHITE SIGNS WITH GREEN BAY

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Reggie White reached agreement with the Green Bay Packers, bringing the seven-time All-Pro defensive end to the NFL's smallest city.

"We have agreed to terms in principle with Reggie White," said Mike Reinfeldt, the Packers' chief financial officer.

White will get $17 million. The San Francisco

49ers, meanwhile, were limited by free-agent restrictions because they were among the league's final four teams this year. The 49ers had a $19.5-million, five-year deal on the table.

The 31-year-old White said his first priority in finding a team was one that would give him a chance to win a Super Bowl before he retires.

► GUZMAN JUST SHY OF NO-NO

CHICAGO (AP) — Jose Guzman came within one out of throwing a no-hitter in his Chicago Cub debut.

Atlanta's Otis Nixon singled to left with two outs in the top of the ninth Tuesday. The Cubs held on to beat the Braves 1-0.

Mark Lemke and pinch-hitter Francisco Cabrera led off the ninth with easy outs. But Nixon singled to left field to deny the Cubs their first no-hitter since Milt Pappas beat the San Diego Padres on Sept. 2, 1972, at Wrigley Field.

BASEBALL

OSU powers past Cats

Oklahoma State used the long ball to defeat the Wildcats, 5-2, Tuesday night in Stillwater, Okla.

The Cowboys, 17-8 and 6-5, hit three home runs off Wildcat starter Rob Merriman (2-3) to give them 42 long balls in 25 games this season.

K-State, now 8-15 and 1-3, took a 2-0 lead with two runs in second inning. Tim Decker and Jamey Stellino each had opposite-field RBI singles to highlight the inning.

Oklahoma State used back-to-back home runs by Sal Bando Jr. and Jason Heath to score four runs in the fourth. Heath gave the Cowboys a 5-2 lead in the fifth with his second home run of the game.

Merriman threw 128 pitches in just six innings.

The Cats threatened in the ninth when Decker got his third hit of the game. A pair of Cowboy errors and a single by Todd Petering loaded the bases. But Chris Wolf was robbed of a single, lining out to a diving first baseman, and Brian Culp grounded out.

Jay Hogue (1-0) picked up his first win of the season, going five innings and giving up four hits.

The two-game series concludes today with a 2 p.m. game.

Laing leads Wildcat golfers to 2nd-place finish

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Wildcat golfer Richard Laing won his first individual golf tournament Tuesday afternoon, leading K-State to a second-place finish in the Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic.

Laing's three-round total of 214 edged out the 216 scored by second-place finisher — and Laing's teammate on the Wildcat squad — Jim Brenneman.

"It was a great tournament for them two," golf coach Mark Elliott said. "Those two played super."

"But I'm kind of disappointed we didn't win because we had a chance. We just didn't have too much help for those two."

K-State finished behind only Oral Roberts in the 14-team tournament played at Tallgrass Country Club in Wichita. The Shockers played host to the tourney.

The Wildcats' score of 897 was just behind Oral Roberts' 895.

"It was right down to the wire," Elliott said. "It was kind of fun."

Laing, who tied his career-best with a second-round score of 69, said his first tourney win didn't feel like a burden coming off of his shoulders.

"The reason I can't call it a monkey off my back is because my collegiate career is almost over," he said. "Usually, when you say you got a monkey off your back, it means you're really ready to get going."

"But it does relieve a little pressure because it was getting down to the end of my collegiate career."

Elliott said that the tournament was a big one for K-State because the Wildcats beat Big Eight teams Iowa State, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska.

"It almost guarantees us a spot in the NCAA tournament," he said. "I don't know how we can't make it."

The men's golf team continues to make huge strides under the leadership of Elliott, who is in just his second season at K-State. A year ago, the Wildcats broke a 15-year stretch of last-place finishes in the conference, ending the year in sixth.

"When you get satisfied with less than your best, you are never going to get any better," he said. "We're happy we took second, but if you ever get satisfied, you're never going to get any better."

"The more you expect of yourself, the more you're going to succeed."

And Laing said Elliott is the direct result of the Cats' newfound success.

"Mark brought with him something that past coaches couldn't give us," he said. "He brought desire — he brought confidence. Mark brought with him the determination to make this program better."

"And he doesn't ask too much for us," he said. "He just wants us to believe in ourselves. I think he's done an unbelievable job for K-State."

UNIVERSITY

Employees selected as campus' best

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Three of K-State's 2,000 classified employees were selected employees of the year for 1993.

The 16th annual Classified Employee Recognition Ceremony will be at 3 p.m. Wednesday in McCain Auditorium.

Stephanie Harvey, president of the Classified Senate, said classified employees nominate one another throughout the fall semester for outstanding work in many areas, ranging from exemplary leadership to outstanding sales.

"They must write what is special about these people," Harvey said.

Harvey said the 30-member Classified Senate receives the nominations in the three categories of office and clerical positions, technical and professional classifications, and service and skilled crafts employees.

She said the nominations are hard to write as well as hard to judge.

"It's real competitive," Harvey said. "They must be nominated in such a way as to convince 30 people that they are the best."

After all the nominations have been received, the Classified Senate narrows the number of nominees.

"We select three finalists from each category," Harvey said.

In February and March, the Classified Senate talks to the finalists' peers, co-workers, subordinates and superiors, Harvey said.

"We want to get a feel for who the people are," Harvey said.

In March, the Senate votes for one of the three in each category to pick the employees of the year. This information is not released until the ceremony.

Ross Hauck, medical technician II in veterinary diagnosis, is one of the finalists in the technical and professional division.

Hauck said he is surrounded by many people who do not get nominated.

"There are a lot of people out there deserving of the nomination," Hauck said. "I think there are a lot of co-workers that make me look outstanding, if that's what I am."

Hauck said he was excited about the ceremony, and it was an honor to be nominated.

"I've been nominated a couple other times," he said. "I was surprised to make the finalists."

The finalists for the employee of the year are Viola Bess, continuing education; Linda Davison, geology; Sandra Randel, computing and information sciences; R.J. Bokelman, Bramlage Coliseum; Ross Hauck, veterinary diagnosis; Steven Kelly, physics; Fern Mayfield, housing and dining services; Patricia McClain, K-State Union; and Margaret Rogers, housing and dining services.

In addition to the finalists — honor retirees, an employee scholarship winner, employee suggestion winners and 204 employees with five, 15, 25 and 35 years of service will be honored.

Grade proposal to go to Senate

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

A proposal for a mandatory plus/minus grading system was finalized by a subcommittee of Faculty Senate today. The proposal will most likely go before Faculty Senate at its May 11 meeting.

The proposal states all instructors will use the plus/minus grading system. All passing grades can be assigned a plus or a minus, with the exception of an A+ or a D-.

Ken Brooks, chairman of the subcommittee and professor of landscape architecture, said the committee had originally gone into the meeting with a proposal that stated the plus/minus grading system would be an option for individual instructors. Because of the opposition by some faculty members, the proposal was modified to make it a mandatory system.

"The optional situation could set up the appearance that an A under one system would be different than an A under the other system. With the mandatory grading system, everyone understands what a grade means," Brooks said.

This idea of a plus/minus grading system was first discussed two years ago. A subcommittee was assigned to research other colleges and universities to discover the different kinds of grading systems, Brooks said.

"More larger public schools are moving toward the plus/minus grading system," he said. "The committee's perception is that this change could have value and is worth voting on."

Three other universities in the Big Eight have some kind of plus/minus system in effect — the University of Colorado, Iowa State University and the University of Nebraska.

At Iowa State, the system seems to be working well, with few problems arising during the past 10 years, said Mike Crum, former chair of Faculty/Senate Committee on Academic Standards and Admissions at Iowa State.

"The data that I've seen didn't show any inflation or deflation in the grade point averages. I don't think there has been a negative or positive overall impact," he said.

"A lot of faculty I know like the plus/minus system because it does allow you to better differentiate between grades. It allows you to recognize the difference when grading," Crum said.

Brooks said he agreed with Crum. He said the committee believes it will allow instructors to give students a grade that more accurately reflects what the student has earned.

The committee believes there will be fewer negotiations between students and instructors because there is only a difference of 0.3 points between grades, instead of a whole point, Brooks said.

There are several arguments against the proposed system. One issue of concern is academic programs that require students to achieve a certain grade to remain or advance in the program.

"Some confusion may be about courses that have a minimum grade requirements. The idea is not to change existing rules unless departments or colleges want to. The grades will still translate to a number. If the requirement says you need a C, then you still have to have a C, not a C-," Brooks said.

Brooks said it is very important to keep the grading system on a 4.0 scale so it will be easier for other institutions to understand K-State's system.

Another obstacle is the University's capability to handle a new grading system, Brooks said. However, the University is already working on making changes in its computer software to accommodate a more complex system, he said.

"The whole University is worried about whether it has the capabilities," Brook said. "The registrar's office is working on their ability to post academic progress and make improvements to the information system. This will include some money."

Brooks said the subcommittee believes the proposed change would increase the students' ambition to put forth that extra effort in order to make the grade.

"It's an awful lot easier for a student to get up for a final exam if it leads up to improved grades. If a student has a solid B in the class, they must ace the final to maintain that B, and it's darn near impossible for them to get an A. But with a little more effort, the student could move the grade up and have more motivation to do well and study for the final

Amateurs, pigs
lassoed into contestMICHELLE SMITH

Not everyone who participated in the Little American Royal had years of background showing animals. Some people were competing for the first time.

Reid Bork, junior in secondary education, was talked into showing a pig in this year's competition.

"A couple of my friends had been doing the LAR since they were freshmen. They kind of roped me into doing it. I got to put on a pair of Wranglers and a pair of boots," Bork said.

"I don't think I have ever even touched a pig before. I got to clean her last night. It was a pretty intimate relationship, but we did not have a great rapport in the show ring."

Bork's relationship was so intimate he even named his hog.

"First I was going to name her Meat because I thought she was going to be killed. I found out later that she was going to become a sow. So, I ended up naming her Sweetie," Bork said.

Jennifer Jaynes, freshman in animal science, also showed an animal for the first time in this year's LAR.

"It sounded like it would be fun. I have never participated in anything like this before in my life," Jaynes said.

Jaynes later said that, in addition to sounding like fun, the LAR sounded like a good way to pad one of her grades. Jaynes received extra credit in her dairy science class for showing.

Jaynes and her friend Rachelle Keeley, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, both showed in the swine division. They agreed showing hogs was a good place to start.

"Hogs are low maintenance. You do not have to work with them as much as the other animals," Keeley said.

Other amateurs featured in a celebrity beef class included Quentin Neujahr, center for the Wildcat's football team; Todd Johnson and Heather Riley, K-State ambassadors; James Coffman, K-State provost; Marc Johnson, dean of the College of Agriculture; Dave Mugler, director of agriculture academic programming; and John Fairman, assistant vice president of university relations. Neujahr won the class.

"I would like to protest the fact that Quentin won because he could handle the bull. He was bigger than the bull," Fairman said.

"I was really proud to beat the dean of the College of Agriculture," he said.

As the only female competitor in the celebrity show, Riley had trouble communicating with her bull.

"Everyone knows that men don't listen to what you tell them," Riley said.

"I had no idea how to get the bull to walk forward. Then I started realizing that if I got it to move, I probably couldn't get it to stop. That was scary."

THE PLUS/MINUS SYSTEM

There is a proposal to make a plus/minus grading system mandatory. Instructors may add a plus or minus to an assigned grade. There would be no A+ or D- grades. A plus would add 0.3 points to a grade. A minus would subtract 0.3 points.

DON'T LET ANOTHER ONE HAPPEN IN THE BODY SHOP.

When you get bodywork done on your GM car or truck, you might assume that genuine GM parts will be used. Not so. Many second-rate imitations are available on the market. And some insurance companies specify "generic equivalents."

Many imitations don't meet GM's strict standards for fit & finish, corrosion resistance or structural strength. That can mean serious problems down the road.

Insist on seeing your repair order and specify genuine GM sheet metal parts. That's all we use. And all we'll ever use. Because they're built by the same people who built your GM vehicle. And they're backed by a Limited Lifetime Warranty.*

A lifelong friend

◀ Robin Pool gives her golden retriever, Abraham, a hug after lunch at KSDS dog training center. Abraham and Pool spent two weeks learning about each other at KSDS before they returned to Wichita.

Stay. Sit.
Wait. Come.
Heal. Tug.
Lights.

These commands may not be significant to many people, but they mean a lot to trainers and dogs at the Kansas Specialty Dog Service, Inc.

Located in Washington, Kan., the training center opened its doors in September 1990.

Trainers at KSDS teach dogs the commands they need to know to be specialty dogs. The dogs become guides for the blind or visually impaired, service dogs for the physically impaired, or social dogs for people in care facilities, Sarah Holbert, assistant director of KSDS, said.

The dogs are tested for temperament, trainability and physical soundness, as well as ancestry.

Cat-chasing is inherited through as many as four generations, Holbert said. For this reason, KSDS houses two cats to help train the dogs.

"They run, jump and curl around the dogs. They get free reign to terrorize the dogs. It's like they're trained to do these things," Holbert said.

Cats aren't the only boundary in the training. The dogs must go through a seven-week temperament test. If sound, they go to foster homes for six months to a year. The dogs are then returned to KSDS to finish training and go through four to six months of evaluation.

After all this training, those who are to get dogs must go to KSDS to train with the dogs for one to four weeks. The student gets to know the dogs, and vice versa.

"Dogs are fine-tuned to the

Some of the training takes place in Manhattan Town Center, Holbert said. There are kids, people running in and out of stores, and people in uniform for the dogs to get used to. Also, many ethnic groups are represented.

"It's amazing how dogs react to different ethnic situations. The dogs may stop and look at blacks and Indians," she said. "You have to work on that. You don't think about it. The mall gives good training and opportunity for this."

When ready, the dogs graduate and can go with their new owners.

"Students can have as much fun as they want with their dog," Holbert said. "A lot of single people like the 'get it' command.

They're not taught that. What they use the commands for is up to them."

A 13-year-old boy made a joke for the "light" command. He said to use Bud Light or Coors Light as the command for turning on lights.

"It's really just 'light'," Holbert said.

The process to the "light" command is really more than learning "light," Kemp said. The dog must learn "up," then "kiss," and put it together to get "light."

Fun and utility aren't all the dogs are for.

"Dogs are good icebreakers. A dog is safe ground to approach a handicapped person. The dogs are people magnets. After someone approaches the dog and the person, it is found that the handicapped are just like us," Holbert said.

She said she believes this is especially important for children because they are socially isolated. Dogs give them something to be proud of, increasing self-esteem.

Some children get to take their dogs to school; some don't. By law, the dog must be allowed in. Some schools cooperate better than others.

Overall, this has not been a big problem, Holbert said.

"For the most part, schools have been outstanding. There are some narrow-minded people who don't want to give it a chance," she said.

Holbert said she remembers when a child with poor speech came in for training with a dog.

"By the first week, her dad was knocked away by improvement in her speech skills," she said.

People with life-line buttons are helped, and emotionally disturbed children also benefit from the dogs.

"These children lose their temper. They're not like us and can stop," Holbert said.

"It keeps going. If there is an outside stimulus introduced, that stops the anger. Then, they can relax. The dog is that outside stimulus."

"Dogs are warm and fuzzy for kids. Dogs are their friends and love them unconditionally."

To get a specialty dog, a person must submit an application and be legally blind or physically disabled. A care facility must have a primary care-giver for the dog.

The dogs are given to the students at no charge.

KSDS has many expenses, and most of the money comes from donations.

The K-State Pre-Vet Club, elementary schools, the Wichita Veterinary Medical Association, 4-H clubs, individuals and others give money, KSDS Director Bill Acree said.

Dog food is also donated. Iams Co. donates all food to the dogs throughout their lives.

KSDS breeds its own dogs. A separate building houses the dogs, the vet room, the grooming room, exercise runs and dog pens. The females are on one side, and the males on the other.

Training dogs are also kept in the building, Kemp said and a truly great American, one who seemed to put humanity above himself or even his nation," Taylor said.

On Sunday, April 7, 200 people met in City Park and marched to the Pilgrim Baptist Church at the intersection of Ninth and Yuma streets, picking up 100 people along the way for the memorial service.

Across the nation and at home, the assassination was the last straw for many black people, and some let their anger take over.

Memphis exploded into six hours of riots, looting, arson and shooting. Black-power advocate Stokely Carmichael urged black people to arm themselves with guns and take to the streets in retaliation for the shooting.

Some of them took his advice. In the days following the shooting, violence erupted in the form of fires, shooting and looting in Washington, D.C., New York, Memphis and Baltimore.

On the campus of Mississippi Valley State College, two black students were wounded when highway patrolmen fired at 300 student marchers. At Florida A&M University at Tallahassee, snipers shot bows and arrows and guns at police.

On April 6, 5,000 federal troops were sent to Chicago. Three days after the death of King, the death toll stood at 18, half of the victims being from Chicago. More than 200 people had been injured, and nausea gas was used to try to quell the rioting. Maryland Gov. Spiro

Agnew declared a state of emergency.

On April 8, thousands of black people, Coretta Scott King and her children included, marched silently through Memphis in memory of King.

Thousands of people in Kansas and Missouri also took part in memorial marches. About 10,000 people assembled at the Liberty Memorial Hall in Kansas City. In Wichita, 3,000 people attended a three-hour rally for King.

On the day of King's funeral, the violence struck home in Kansas City, as 1,000 black people marched on City Hall but were dispersed with tear gas and National Guard troops. Rioting followed for several days.

by Cassandra Duveaux

Take the heartbreaks in stride

DEAR CASSANDRA,

For the second time this school year, I have experienced the most heartbreaking feeling anyone could possibly feel — the feeling of being "used."

I really never believed the theory that "lightning doesn't strike twice in the same place," but after this past weekend, I think that theory sucks; it has struck me twice.

Last fall, I met a girl at a party. I thought she was an OK gal. At this party, we didn't talk much, probably not more than 15 words in a four-hour time span. But lo and behold, at the end of the night, we were in a bedroom alone. I had just met her that night, and before I knew it, we were all over each other (we weren't having sex). Next thing I knew, she was telling me not to call her the following day. She didn't want anything to come of this encounter.

Right then I felt as if I was being "used." But I can deal with straightforward people, and that she was. Although something still hurt inside.

The real problem I have is when someone tells you to call them and seems really interested. When you call them, it's like some sort of revelation to them that you called. I hate that.

Last Thursday, I met a young lady, and we hit it off great.

She was great to talk to, and we shared a lot of similar qualities, personality-wise. We ended up messing around that night for a few hours. She is a girl that I would like to get to know and spend more time with. She even told me to call her the next day. Just to be sure she was serious about it, I asked her several times, and each time she said "yes." So on Sunday I called her, and she didn't even act like she wanted to speak to me at all. She even acted surprised.

What's up with that? Did I catch her at a bad time, or did she change her mind about me and forget to tell me about it? What happened to honesty?

Heartbroken

DEAR HEARTBROKEN,

What happened to honesty? What happened to brevity?

Chalk your first experience up as a one-night stand, and let it go.

This young woman you met the other night might have actually been surprised you called. Perhaps she was busy when you called on Sunday. Maybe you're trying too hard. You say you asked her several times if it was OK to call her — maybe she thought you were insecure.

Try calling her again. If she doesn't sound interested this time, let it drop.

Slattery addresses town meeting

Another issue Slattery focused his opening statements on was health-care reform.

"We are trying to move toward a more simplified, standard system of health care. We want to provide basic benefits to all customers at one price and to eliminate preexisting conditions," he said.

By simplifying the current conditions, Slattery said all insurance companies would use the same standard form and use electronic billing procedures for easier service.

"We still have many questions about these proposals because many employers who provide benefits to their employees are paying additional benefits for families of the employees," he said.

"In addition to these benefits, companies have to pay benefits to those that are shifted to them from companies who aren't able to pay. This needs to change," Slattery said.

There are still employees who work full time and don't receive benefits, Slattery said. To avoid this, Congress could propose one of two ways to avoid cost-shifting between companies.

"We could have businesses pay an additional payroll tax or a broad-based tax to prevent the cost-shifting. Right now, we just don't know how this would work for rural America," he said.

Slattery said he would ultimately like to see health-care costs contained in a more cost-efficient manner within individual states, rather than by bureaucrats.

"I want to see this get as close to the people as possible. We need to give each state the authority and latitude to fit the people within each state. No one knows how to contain health-care costs. So, we will have to try different strategies to see what will work," he said.

He also addressed many of the audience's questions about the declining economic base, foreign trade problems, military spending and education.

"The key to a good future for education is to give every opportunity because there is a need for life-long learning. People are constantly updating their job skills and training to maintain a standard of living," Slattery said.

"If we don't develop basic learning skills in youth, they will become lost in the economy. The single-most important thing is to help students," he said.

"It's time to ignore the problems we face or do something about it," he said.

Forum brings call for changes

"I do not understand why this University does not have a multicultural requirement."

LAURA VETTER
SENIOR IN PHILOSOPHY AND ANTHROPOLOGY

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

A lack of understanding. Originally, the purpose of the second Rodney King forum was to release emotions about his alleged violated civil rights.

It veered another direction.

A group of audience members voiced their opinions on the way oppression and diversity are addressed at K-State and what changes need to be made.

"We have to learn how to come together as a community and support each other," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

The forum was designed to alleviate emotions about the upcoming verdict in the second Rodney King trial, Franklin said.

SGA wanted to provide an environment where emotions could be released.

Beverly McLean-Murray, professor of media law, began the forum with an overview of the current trial. She discussed the possible arguments for the prosecution and defense, and said she didn't know what the outcome would be.

"Officer Singer, a female police officer, testified that the officers involved in the beating joked about it afterward. Rodney King also testified in this trial, where he didn't in the first one. The jury heard the testimony given, and it all depends on what they believed," Murray said.

If you look at why the first riots happened, it isn't simply because a man was beaten, Murray said.

Rodney King was a catalyst to a much bigger problem, and it was the final straw in the ongoing issue of fair treatment, she said.

"I'm tired. We are all tired of being treated differently," she said.

Laura Vetter, senior in philosophy and anthropology, initiated a discussion on what K-State can do to help the issue of diversity.

"I do not understand why this University doesn't have a multicultural requirement," Vetter said.

She suggested starting a campus-wide petition drive to encourage a multicultural class requirement for all students.

"When human ecology threatened to cut classes, the students responded with a peaceful demonstration. Maybe that's what we need," she said.

Some faculty members in the audience said they agreed with the idea of a petition drive.

They also mentioned the lack of attendance at forums of this type by other faculty members.

"The only change will come when you go home to your community or your residence halls and fraternities, and say hey, we're not going to take it any more," Syvette Davis, sophomore in English and pre-law, said.

Explosion sends radioactive cloud across Siberia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — A radioactive cloud moved across Siberia on Wednesday after a tank of nuclear waste exploded in what the government called the worst nuclear accident since Chernobyl.

Russian and foreign experts said Tuesday's explosion at the Tomsk-7 nuclear weapons complex was far less severe than the 1986 Chernobyl disaster. But the environmental group Greenpeace said several villages were at risk from windborne fallout.

No deaths were reported and no one was evacuated from the region 1,700 miles east of Moscow. One fireman received a high dose of radiation, said Georgy Kaurov, head of the Nuclear Energy Ministry's information department.

Russian authorities said it was fortunate the wind blew the radiation away from Tomsk-7 and the nearby larger city of Tomsk, with its 500,000 inhabitants.

International environmental groups demanded the immediate shutdown of the plutonium processing plant in Tomsk-7, a secret military city built by the Soviets in the late 1940s.

"The accident highlights the Russians' inadequate attention to environment and safety issues," said Tom Cochran, senior scientist at the Natural Resources Defense Council in Washington.

Commonwealth television said the Russian Air Defense Command was monitoring the radioactive cloud as it moved northeast at 22 mph, 1.2 miles high.

Dmitry Tolkatsky of Greenpeace's Moscow office said that on Wednesday afternoon, the cloud passed north of Asino, a town of 30,000 people 75 miles northeast of Tomsk.

He said it was heading toward the Yenisei River in the general direction of 11 Siberian villages, each with a few thousand inhabitants. The largest town in the cloud's path was Yeniseisk, population 23,000.

"They keep saying there's no danger and no evacuation is planned, but the situation in those villages is unpredictable," Tolkatsky said.

Classified employees recognized

Three receive employee of the year in annual program

MICHELLE HAUPT

Only three K-Staters were named employees of the year on Wednesday, but many people walked away from McCain Auditorium as champions.

"We are all winners," Viola Bess, office specialist in the Division of Continuing Education, said in her acceptance speech during the 16th annual Classified Employee Recognition Program. Bess is employee of the year in the office and clerical division for 1993.

Ross Hauck, medical technician II in veterinary diagnosis, is employee of the year in the technical and professional division.

Margaret Rogers, custodial worker in the Department of Housing and Dining and Services, is employee of the year in the service and skilled crafts division. During her speech, Rogers said this day was very important to her.

"I certainly will always remember it," Rogers said.

Bess said her colleagues gave her a send-off before the ceremony. She said they made her walk out and stand in the courtyard in the rain.

"It was great," she said.

Bess said being nominated and winning showed her how much her colleagues value her.

"They do appreciate me, and I definitely appreciate them," Bess said.

Each employee of the year received a plaque as well as a cash prize, gift certificates and tickets to various campus events. The redeemable value of all the prizes is about $875.

In addition to the employees of the year, retirees, an employee scholarship winner, employee suggestion winners and employees with five, 15, 25 and 35 years of service were honored.

Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director for Academic Affairs, was guest speaker for the program. Switzer spoke about a team approach to success.

"A team player never gives up," Switzer said. "You must try for individual excellence and then work together to achieve group goals."

Switzer said too often employees are not thanked for what they do. He said K-State is indebted to the team play of its employees for the University's accomplishments.

"I will always believe that actions speak louder than words," Switzer said.

Viola Bess, office specialist in the Division of Continuing Education, receives a congratulatory hug after receiving the Classified Employee of the Year award Wednesday in McCain Auditorium. Bess won the honor in the office and clerical division for 1993.

Investigation nets 2 in illegal gambling operation

Ring may have Las Vegas link, police say

RON LACKEY
Collegian

A month-long investigation has resulted in the arrest of two Manhattan men who were allegedly running an illegal gambling ring that spanned the Midwest.

The Riley County Police Department has also said the men may have had a direct link with Las Vegas.

Police arrested Edgar Darrah Jr.,

55, 3107 Heritage Court, No. 52 and Russel James Bunker, 40, 2130 Westchester Drive, No. 12, both of Manhattan.

Darrah, who is retired, was arrested at his home. Bunker was arrested at his business, Tans to Go, at 1214-C Moro St. Bunker was the golf coach at K-State from 1988 to 1991.

During the search, police uncovered paperwork and financial records at Darrah's residence and at Bunker's Tans to Go.

Capt. Allen Raynor of the RCPD Investigative Division said this did not begin as a search for a commercial gambling ring in Manhattan.

"We stumbled onto it during another investigation. It was the attorney general and the Kansas Bureau of Investigation's opinion that this was not just a few guys in an office pool," he said.

Raynor said they found ample evidence of a commercial gambling operation in Manhattan.

"We recovered tons of evidence to back up our claim," he said.

The investigative tools used by the police were specialized, he said. He would not specify the exact systems the police used to collect their evidence. He did say the case was difficult to follow because of the tight organization common in gambling operations.

"We used sophisticated investigative techniques," Raynor said.

"We are pretty proud of our gathering of evidence in a 'closed shop' type of affair."

Raynor said the size of the gambling operation justified such a large sting.

"This was a well-organized operation. There were several parties in other states involved, at least four states and Las Vegas," Raynor said.

The men were using 800 numbers, fax machines and additional phone lines to run the operation, he said.

Raynor also said some of the call-in gamblers were using personal identification numbers to identify each other.

The people in the area who were calling in bets shouldn't worry, he said. Although calling in bets is illegal, it is not as serious a crime as operating a commercial gambling ring, he said.

"That is a lesser offense than installing machines to make money off the betting," Raynor said.

"We do have names in the community, but we're not going to go dragging people in just because we have their names."

The police will continue the investigation.

"The investigation is ongoing — we are looking at the breadth and extent of their activities," Raynor said.

Darrah had no comment on the arrest. He said he is retired and has no financial interests in the Dara's Fast Lane convenience stores or Tans to Go, as reported in the Manhattan Mercury.

Bunker had no comment.

Program targets divorced fathers

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

President Clinton said he is looking for ways to give people a hand up, not a hand out. The program "Survival Skills For Men" does just that.

"Survival Skills For Men" is the first step in a four-step program called "Parents' Fair Share." The second step is parent training, the third step is school, or training, and the fourth is to get a job.

The program was written by Linda Thurston, associate professor of special education and an expert in family issues. Thurston wrote the successful program "Survival Skills For Women," which is implemented in 23 states.

Thurston said "Survival Skills For Men" provides a way for low-income, divorced fathers to learn basic life skills.

"The program is aimed at divorced fathers who are not able to pay child support due to low income and lack of education," she said.

This program has been piloted in Tennessee, where the courts gave men the choice to participate or go to jail for not paying child support.

"If these guys can't pay child support and taxpayers are paying to support their kids through welfare, then why don't we spend a little money up front so that they can get their act together, get a job, an education and pay child support," Thurston said.

The steps in the program are interdependent.

"Survival Skills For Men" is the foundation piece for the other steps to work better. Men begin working towards self efficiency and away from dependence on welfare, food stamps, and housing agencies," Jill Adams, outreach coordinator for the Survival Skills Education and Development company, said.

Thurston will train males who will assist with the program in late April and May.

Adams said they want to use the same gender to assist in the development of the program, in order to break down barriers within the group.

"A woman telling a group of men that they have to pay child support isn't going to go over very well," she said.

"Survival Skills For Men" consists of a group discussion and homework. Some of the topics are money management and making wise decisions about shopping.

"It is not a program where there is one expert teaching all of these skills," Thurston said.

"It is developed so that the men learn from each other within the group."

Thurston said the men develop into a team that has to work together in order for all of them to become winners individually.

"They develop some camaraderie so that when they go back out onto the streets they've got someone to hang around with that isn't going to try to get them back on drugs or into trouble," she said.

Thurston said some men start out with some hostility.

"We developed the curriculum to get over the idea 'I'm here because somebody thinks they're going to tell me how to run my life,'" she said.

Your Q. & A. about Student Financial Assistance

Q. I've heard there are changes in financial aid eligibility for the Fall - 1993 and Spring - 1994 award year. What does this mean to me as a financial aid applicant?

A. Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 took place in July, 1992 and will regulate all financial aid programs until 1997. The maximum Pell Grant for 1993-94 is funded at $2300 and the minimum at $400. Overall, a decreased level of eligibility for grants will be the norm replaced by a higher level of eligibility for low interest loans.

Q. What type of low interest loans are available to financial aid applicants?

A. In addition to the regular Stafford Loan, a new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan is available to all students regardless of income levels. The annual limits under the Stafford Loan program have also changed:

$2625 for first year students $3500 for second year students
$5500 for remaining undergraduate students
$8500 for graduate/professional students after 10/1/93

If you do not borrow the annual limits under the Subsidized Stafford Loan, you may be eligible to borrow these amounts under the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program. If you have a question regarding your eligibility, you are encouraged to make an appointment with a financial aid counselor by calling 532-6420.

Q. What if my parents want to borrow for me?

A. You must be a dependent student for financial aid purposes in order for your parents to borrow through the PLUS Loan. The parent loan allows one of your parents to borrow up to the cost of your education minus any other financial aid you may receive. Previously, parents were limited by a $4,000 cap for each student attending college. Your parents may call or write the financial aid office to inquire about the PLUS loan. The address is: Student Financial Assistance, 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. How do I know if I will receive the Pell Grant or loans?

A. Your 1993-94 Award Letter will show your eligibility for grants and loans. It is possible for all students both dependent and independent to receive low-interest loans once your Free Application for Federal Student Aid is received by the financial aid office. Congress has made changes to help students regardless of income levels; however, the shift to personal responsibility for educational expenses is a direct impact of the Higher Education Amendments for 1992, and will be reflected in students' awards for 1993-94.

Schwenk: talked about incorporation of SGA

STEPHANIE FUQUA

Collegian

It was time to set the record straight, he said.

So Doug Schwenk, senior in physics education and student body president candidate, announced new ideas for his campaign Wednesday and responded to ideas of other candidates.

The co-curricular transcript idea has been tried unsuccessfully at K-State before, Schwenk said. The idea has been presented by student body candidate Tracy Mader, sophomore in agricultural economics. The transcript would allow students to document their extracurricular activities.

"Gary Pierson, assistant director of new student service, made an attempt to use the co-curricular transcript at one time," Schwenk said. "He found it wasn't effective at K-State. The school's too large. It cost too much to implement."

Schwenk said he thinks a database for jobs, also proposed by Mader, is a great idea, but he would take a different approach.

A disc containing a database of information about recent graduates and alumni looking for jobs could be sent to both small and large

Wingert/Peterson: announced textbook plan

MICHELLE SMITH

Collegian

Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson, candidates for student body president and vice president, announced their two-part plan to improve the book buy-back procedure at the K-State Union.

"The root problem with buy-back is that about 25 percent of the textbooks, which could be bought from the students, are not repurchased because faculty have not turned their lists in on time," Wingert, senior in business, said.

"So students receive $3 for a book from the wholesaler instead of $20 from the Union for a book that is used again."

Wingert said he would first contact Faculty Senate leaders.

"Basically, it's a communication challenge. As student leaders we can help increase discussion on this subject. If we can convince faculty to submit their lists on time, we will return thousands of dollars back to students," said Peterson, junior in animal sciences and industry.

They would also encourage faculty members to promptly turn in the list of books they plan to re-use.

Skoog/Henry: discussed athletic fee proposal

BRYAN LARSON

Collegian

Ed Skoog and Eric Henry, candidates for president and vice president, said they are tired of people not taking their campaign seriously.

"We are very serious about this campaign," Skoog said. "We have some very strong opinions and some solid proposals that we feel would make this University better for the students."

Henry echoed Skoog's comments.

"We're dead serious about all of this," Henry said. "We like to have fun, and we'll continue to have fun, but we would like everyone to know that when it comes down to brass tacks, we definitely mean business."

The main proposal Skoog and Henry have made regards the athletic fee.

"The athletic fee is the first fee in which you get nothing in return for your money. With all other student fees there is a producer-consumer relationship. In other words, you get something in return for your money. With the Collegian fee you get the Collegian, with the Lafene fee you get services at the health center, but with the athletic fee you get nothing," Skoog said.

"Eric and I would work on a proposal in Presidential hopefuls square off in debate

RHONDA WILSON

Student body presidential candidates squared off to address issues concerning students at a forum Wednesday night in the basement of Haymaker Hall.

The seven candidates who participated in the forum were Tracy Mader, Doug Schwenk, Ed Skoog, Scott Truhlar, Sid Turakhia, Charles Walters and Fred Wingert.

The eighth candidate, Tim Orindgreff, sophomore in pre-med and life sciences, was not in attendance.

Candidates were asked about the involvement of residence hall students in Student Governing Association, the role of the new vice presidency and the president's role in the finances of the University.

Todd Fertig, senior in journalism and English and Haymaker residents assistant, coordinated the forum.

Fertig said he wanted to get residence hall students more aware of the candidates' various ideas.

The candidates began the evening with a brief introduction of themselves and their platforms.

After their introductions, they explained what they would do to get better representation in SGA from students living in residence halls.

Many of the candidates encouraged these students to run for office in order to get better representation.

Schwenk, senior in physics and pre-med, said if students ran with the support of the residence halls, they would have a chance of being elected.

"There could be a great voice from the residence halls that has not been taken advantage of," he said.

Skoog, senior in English, said representation should be an individual endeavor.

Just because a student lives in a residence hall does not mean they have the same goals as other students in the residence hall — they are a group of individuals with varied agendas, Skoog said.

Candidates then defined what they saw as the powers and responsibilities of their vice president.

Most candidates agreed a vice president would divide the workload of the president, which would enable the president to do more for the University.

Truhlar, senior in pre-med, said he and his vice president would divide the responsibilities equally.

"We originally considered doing paper-rock-scissors at the beginning of each week to divide up the upcoming duties," he said.

Mader, senior in agricultural economics, said his running mate would specifically be in charge of facilitating round-table discussions with various groups to bring their concerns back to the president.

The final question the candidates answered concerned the role of the president in SGA allocation of funds and University fiscal practices.

Many of the candidates said they wanted SGA to be accountable and responsible for the funds they allocate.

"We want to see money spent with a little bit of common sense," Wingert, junior in business administration, said about SGA allocations.

"When money is wasted, it's our money," he said.

Walters, junior in political science, history and international studies, said if elected he would try to get SGA to do some long-term financial planning.

Walters said SGA investments could prepare the University for drastic increases in tuition and a cut in funding that will come from the state five years from now.

Turakhia, junior in mathematics, is proposing a system that would allow students to pay only for the fees they choose to pay for.

"I don't like bureaucracy, all these committees," he said. "I will give you a voice, and you automatically allocate funds where you want them to be."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Welcome to America

THE ISSUE

There has recently been a rash of violence against foreign tourists.

WE SUGGEST

Using these tragic incidents to spur a new movement against all violent crime in our country.

Violence in America once again rears its ugly head, this time proving it doesn't discriminate when choosing its victims.

Last Friday, Barbara Jensen Meller was robbed, beaten and run over as her mother and two small children looked on. The four had gotten lost after leaving Miami International Airport in a rental car, which was then rammed from behind by Meller's killers.

Tuesday, the German foreign ministry issued a warning to German travelers heading to Florida after Meller, a Berlin teacher, became the seventh foreign tourist to be killed in that state since October.

Also, an advisory was announced Monday from the British Foreign Office for travelers going overseas to be careful when carrying valuable items.

The attacks have spread from Florida. Several shootings at vehicles along a highway heading into Florida from the north were reported, and a visiting man was torched after leaving a friend's house to buy a newspaper in New York City.

Putting aside the fact that tourism is a multi-billion dollar industry for the United States, we must address the question how far our violent crime problem has grown when countries have to warn their citizens against visiting us.

These warnings used to be issued against volatile countries like Afghanistan, Libya and Lebanon. If the United States has joined that woeful list, perhaps it's time that we took a new look at violent crime.

Just another sentimental Easter

Judging from my mail, I can dishonestly say I know many of you have been wondering, "Is Brad Seabourn going to write one of his Easter specials again this year?" Well the answer, in a word, is, "Why not?"

You might also ask, "But don't you know what today is?"

Ha! Of course I do. Today is Maundy Thursday (maunde: Middle English, meaning "cheap bath"). And tomorrow is Good Friday (which has always been "good" ever since Bejorg, the first collegiate caveman decided to only go to school five days, party on the sixth, and sleep it off on the seventh), followed by an even better Super Saturday, and ending the weekend with Sleep Late/Easter Egg Hunt Sunday.

Now, I know many of you are thinking there is a religious aspect here that I seem to be missing. But that's just it. I don't miss it at all, and neither do my children. We are going to spend Easter Sunday doing something that is FUN and involves looking for the REAL meaning to Easter and life in general: hunting Easter Eggs, while carefully trying to avoid running into the bunny that was big enough to lay them, as my children innocently believe.

But first, I have to get something off my chest.

I have made a valiant effort to avoid commenting on the religious aspect of this coming weekend, but the news media will not allow me to keep silent with their incessant reminder of — well, you know. Particularly television.

This past Sunday (also called "Palm Sunday" in celebration of all the money that passes from your hand to the churches' during the year), in addition to the standard doomsday religious fare of Oral Roberts, John Osteen, and Jack and Rexella Van Empe, I also was treated to Hollywood's "The Ten Commandments" and "The Robe."

These are great movies. And not just because they bring to cinematic splendor some of the greatest Bible miracles ever invented for television. They really do point out how totally absurd Bible stories can be.

For instance, take the tale of Moses and the miraculous parting of the Red Sea, admirably played by Charlton Heston in "The Ten Commandments." Now, just to put things in Biblical perspective, let me begin by saying that just prior to this miracle, Moses is trying to haul, yea verily, roughly 600,000 "beaten-to-a-frazzle" former slaves and about, yea verily, 50 bazillion cows and goats across the desert as fast as one man can. All the while wearing only a robe and sandals, before Ramses, the Egyptian pharaoh, decides to change his mind about letting them go. Yea, verily.

So, Moses and crew reach the Red Sea only to find that God has not provided them with the Queen Mary to help ferry them across. At this point in the movie there is great gnashing of teeth. Then, with great emotional fanfare, Moses raises his staff and commands the waters to part, thus allowing them to make their wondrous escape.

At this point, I would like to know, and only for future reference in case I should find myself confronted with a similar situation, why did not Moses, who had this really AWESOME staff, use it to inflict Ramses and his cohorts with the worst case of Holy Emroids (which is Bible-babble for hemorrhoids: a very typical Biblical malady inflicted by God upon sinners) this side of the Nile River, and thus effectively slow his butt down to the equivalent of a very painful pony ride at the Cairo Carnival.

Well, we may never know.

But I do know this: if I were Ramses and I had just watched a man command a plague of grasshoppers to devour all my pomegranates, cause a storm to hail stones of fire, turn water into blood and sticks into snakes, create a pillar of fire, and fatally poison little children with some mysterious, green, funky gas, I would think twice about trying to cross a dry seabed with huge, boiling, walls of water poised on either side. In fact, I would YEA, VERILY, think twice about it.

Which is why I am not going to spend much time on Easter Sunday trying to help my kids find the Big Bunny that laid the eggs. As big as those eggs are, you just know he has got to be in a really foul mood.

Dying by remote control

DAVID
FRESE

There is something to be said for this man walking across the snowy lawn, who is half-turned with his hat down, perhaps smiling in black and white.

In him, there is neither the feeling of dread nor the look of celebrity-ness. He does not have that. He does not possess darkness or evil. He is merely a man in the newspaper, walking across the top of page three beside stories of drought in California, fire in the forests of Washington State, Valentine's Day marriages up 21 percent in Las Vegas. He is just a man.

He is a doctor as well, this man. He is known. He is feared. He is celebrated.

There is another man in the newspaper. Hugh Gale. He is gray-haired behind Elvis sunglasses, Elvis sideburns and Elvis collars. Seventy years old. Emphysema. Congestive heart disease. Detroit resident.

Hugh Gale had written a letter to the doctor in the newspaper. The doctor replied. To meet Hugh Gale, that is what the doctor wanted, to meet Hugh Gale and find out if Hugh Gale was serious.

And so, Hugh Gale killed himself Feb. 16, 1993. He died in his suburban home as his suburban wife, Cheryl, watched. Hugh Gale's suburban dreams and suburban pains went away. The doctor looked on as Hugh Gale put on the mask. Inhaled. Stopped breathing. Died.

There is also something to be said for living in the United States of America. For surveys reported in newspapers asking people if death is a reasonable end when faced with an incurable disease. For mail-order assisted suicide. For dying.

It is perhaps the feeling of the times that says life is too much these days, and life is not worth living if you are hooked up to a machine. They surround us, and we have little idea what most of them do.

The refrigerator turns on and off at will. Our banks keep our money in a sort of hyperspace accessed by bus-jogged around the park at 6 a.m., skipped the butter and ate bran, put down the butts for good this time. With this, without that, we shall live long and healthy lives.

Then it happens: We are stricken by headline diseases that confuse doctors and startle reporters and catch politicians with their pants down. Then there is the squeak of wheels as the machines are wheeled in.

What kind of life is an artificial one? What will happen now that technology has overridden and evolved faster than biology?

Hugh Gale sought the answers to those questions. Hugh Gale was weary of the pain, tired of coughing up suburbia. Hugh Gale got his answer from the doctor. Jack Kevorkian. Dr.

Death. Jack Kevorkian continues the rebellion, ending the life of machines. The major irony, perhaps, is that he does not help those wishing to die by feeding them arsenic, choking them with hands, stirring some shamanic potion to end this life.

He uses a machine, produces carbon monoxide, pumps into the lungs, kills.

And so, in death, there is no life, no natural way to end a life naturally. To live or to die is to be surrounded by pacemaker rhythms, swirling around us in lights and hums and buzzes and chirps and whirs. There is no escape, even in death.

stop sized terminals, located next to liquor stores and dry cleaners. We are paralyzed when our new autos with auto windows, and auto locks and auto antennae don't start and we are unable to go to work to type, add, total, design, build, fix, screw, unscrew.

We are not self-sufficient. We try to deal with this all our lives. But when this life begins to end, the machines will take over; they will do our breathing, they will beat our hearts, they will monitor our brains with charts and readouts and little green lights and beeps and whistles. This becomes life.

It is not the life we were promised/promised ourselves as we

The Salina Journal on frying the bacon (April 1):

United States senators have no business "personally securing" federal money for any project, no matter how worthy it is. The fact that they do, and brag about it, shows why so little in the way of real deficit reduction has been done.

On the very day that (Kansas Sen. Bob) Dole was continuing his incessant harangue about how the federal government must cut spending — for the benefit of the network news crews — he was faxing hot press releases about how he had once again brought home the bacon — for the benefit of Kansas newspapers. ...

The KSU-Salina project — a flight training program that will improve the college's facilities, reputation and ability to attract students from all over the world — is indeed a worthy project.

But as long as the only way worthy projects can be funded is by powerful senators lobbying powerful Cabinet members, and not proper appropriations bills properly considered for their cost and benefit to the nation as a whole, this nation will continue to spend too much money, and spend it less than wisely.

Dole will claim, with reason, that this is just the way the game is played in Washington, and that he should be praised for being such a good player.

But, if he is so concerned about federal spending, why won't he use his influence and skill to change the game?

while the flowers and the trees are blooming, spring has also brought the perennial election campaigns for student government.

RESPONSE

Kelly, if you don't vote, you can't whine

Editor,

This letter is in regard to Kelly Klawonn's column on April 7.

If I am not mistaken, Klawonn stated last semester that she would not take part in the presidential election (i.e., vote) because she dislikes our system of government. Lo and behold, Kelly is now bitching about how things are not quite going the way she would like.

Kelly, how can you possibly complain about a situation in which you chose not to participate?

On the other hand, perhaps by choosing to participate in this upcoming march, you have discovered that you were wrong. Perhaps you have discovered that to change things in this country (and there are many things needing change), you have to contribute more often than you bemoan. Perhaps you have discovered that the biggest difference between our system of government and those of many other countries is the fact that we let boring columnists blab endlessly without jailing them.

Then again, perhaps you haven't discovered anything at all. Perhaps you purposely didn't vote so you could sit back now and spout stupid platitudes. Perhaps you didn't want to share the burden of responsibility for the actions of those elected to office: "responsibility" is a dirty word these days.

I am very suspicious.

Other cultures display artifacts

TRACY ARNOLD

Bright colors, maps, posters, videos and more made up an international event in the K-State Union.

Wednesday marked the middle of International Week, and with this celebration, cultural exhibits were laid out for all to see.

"These exhibits help people understand other cultures beside American. It also helps them to accept foreign culture because Kansas is remote from borders and everything else," said Vangelis Evangelopoulos, graduate student in landscape architecture and volunteer at the Grecian exhibit.

The Grecian exhibit had posters, statues, catalogs, maps and money laid out.

Other tables had many of the same items from their own country.

Pakistan added a tea set and jewelry to the items above.

"Different regions have different crafts and bracelets. The bracelets mean happiness. People wear them in the house or to parties," Nabeeha Kazi, freshman in political science, said.

The African exhibit had a spear, statues, a fan with bright colors, and a bright pink and black dress. This was all next to a sign that read, "Africa, She too can smile."

Other countries represented were Indonesia, Costa Rica, Bangladesh, Japan, Thailand, Vietnam, China and India. The International Club and World Friendship set up tables also.

World Friendship is a 25-year-old organization of international women, Ana Maria Brescia, corporate president, said.

"I think this makes you feel you are at home. It makes you feel welcome, and people here will learn about different cultures," she said.

Learning about different cultures was a shared interest of the people walking around the exhibits.

"We're interested in learning about different cultures. I'm from a small town in Kansas and never got to see other cultures and different ways of life," Jeff Peterson, junior in animal science, said.

Athos Antoniadis, freshman in business administration, said it also helps in making friends.

"American students are friendly to international students, and this helps further that friendship," he said.

That friendship can be guided by education, Peterson said.

"This is definitely an education. I wish more students would stop by."

Band promises a night of ooga booga

TRACY ARNOLD

Submytion — no it's not spelled incorrectly — is the name of a band from Kansas City.

"We've been playing in Manhattan for about five years. We started at Bonkers, then Brothers, the Blue River Pub, the Spot and now Boulevard's," Troy Schuster, drummer for Submytion, said.

He and lead singer Theron Barton said they enjoy playing in Manhattan.

"We like to play Manhattan because the people here enjoy the music more than some other places we play. More people know our songs as opposed to people in other towns who come for the copy tunes," Barton said.

Schuster also likes Manhattan because of the people, he said.

"It's cool to play in Manhattan. The college-age people are a lot of fun. They're there to blow off school and relieve stress. We're good stress relief," he said.

The stress relief Schuster speaks of comes from what people see and hear when they go see the band.

"Expect craziness and ooga booga," he said.

However, there are other things an audience can expect.

"I think people can expect good sound, a good light show and a good performance on stage," Barton said.

Schuster said he feels people should expect even more.

"Expect one, two, fuck you. Expect a high quality, live, loud, rockin' sound from classic to newer tunes. Also expect an album-and-a-half of original music," he said.

They both said they agree the band possesses its own sound.

"Vocals are our best feature with a solid band behind that. It's lyrical hard rock," Schuster said.

They also perform covers from Ozzy Osborne, Metallica, Sound

Garden, Ugly Kid Joe and more.

Submytion will be performing at Boulevard's 11th Street Bar and Grill Thursday, Friday and Saturday night.

"We set out to perform a show that's fun and entertaining. We also set out to sell a lot of drinks. So, bring a designated driver," Schuster said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Snyder hopes spring drills answer questions

Wildcats looking for 4th straight 5-win season for first time since 1912

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

With the Wildcats' spring football drills less than a week old, several questions face head coach Bill Snyder and his coaching crew.

Will the Wildcats be able to overcome the disappointing 5-6 season a year ago — a season when K-State was supposed to get over the proverbial hump?

How will K-State be able to replace seven defensive starters, including the entire linebacking crew?

Can the Wildcat running game — 96th in the country a year ago with a 105.7 yards-per-game average — improve after losing Eric Gallon, the second-leading rusher in K-State history?

First things first.

Between the years 1905-12, K-State put together eight straight seasons with at least five victories. Since then, however, the Cats have never had four straight five-victory seasons. Five wins this year would be the fourth consecutive five-win campaign for the Cats.

Last season, K-State was coming off the heels of a 7-4 season — the best record in 37 years. Expectations were high for the Wildcats, and there was talk the Cats would contend for their first bowl game appearance since the 1982 Independence Bowl.

"I think there was some disappointment last season," Snyder said of the ensuing 5-6 mark. "How they respond to that disappointment, each individual is different."

"But I believe the confidence is still there, and I think that this football team really believes that it has the ability to be a better football team than what we proved to be last year."

And Jaime Mendez, the top returning Wildcat, said the Cats are on a mission.

"Everyone is really hungry on this team," he said. "We're all hurt somewhat about what happened and some of the comments that we heard — this program had just one or two years, and that's all it was good for."

"Everyone is real, real excited to prove that point wrong."

One of the primary concerns for Snyder is that the defensive side of the football graduated seven starters. Of last year's front seven, only defensive end John Butler returns.

Gone are starters Reggie Blackwell, Ekwensi Griffith and Jeff Simoneau. In are Robert Pearson, Tim Colston and Darrell Harbert.

Another question haunting the Cats is whether or not the

"When you lose an Eric Gallon, you've certainly lost a quality young player in your program," Snyder said. "But I think we all feel comfortably with J.J. Smith and think that he's a very gifted running back."

Smith showed flashes of brilliance last season, gaining 109 yards on 17 carries — 6.4 yards a rush — against Missouri. He also averaged 4.6 yards in 10 attempts against Oklahoma. He finished with 232 yards.

Rod Schiller averaged 4.8 yards a carry last season, gaining a total of 177 yards. Leon Edwards will also compete for playing time.

Quarterbacks Jason Smargiasso and Chad May are expected to battle for the No. 1 nod at the QB spot — a particular area of concern last season.

But the quarterback-to-be, once again, will have a talented receiving corps to throw to. Andre Coleman is one of the premiere long-distance threats in the Big Eight, and his speed and agility are evidenced by a Big Eight-best 24.5 yards per kickoff return last season.

Mitch Running, who will be a sophomore, has good hands. His 15.8-yards-per-catch average was second on the team a year ago.

As the wide receivers are the strength of the offense, so is the Wildcat secondary the strength of the defense.

Three starters return from the group who finished first in the Big Eight and fourth nationally with 21 interceptions.

Two-time all-conference safety Mendez leads the attack. And he said it's the goal of him and his teammates to prolong the season beyond the scheduled 11 games.

"We've been saying that for two years now," the senior-to-be said of a possible post-season bowl berth.

"I definitely want to go out with a bowl game under my belt."

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Bill Snyder, Wildcat football coach, said he hopes the spring drills answer several questions for his K-State team. He is shown here Monday afternoon at KSU Stadium at the first practice of the spring.

Cats blow big leads in 14-13 loss to OSU

No. 15 Cowboys get winning run with walk in bottom of 9th inning

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcat baseball team scored 13 runs — and hit four home runs — against nationally ranked Oklahoma State Wednesday afternoon in Stillwater, Okla.

And lost.

Cowboy center fielder Peter Prodanov drew a bases-loaded walk with two outs in the bottom of the ninth to give Oklahoma State a 14-13 win over K-State.

The Cowboys, with a national ranking as high as 15th in the nation, improved to 18-8, 7-5 in the Big Eight. The Wildcats fell to 8-16 and 1-4.

K-State blew several leads in the second game of the two-game set, letting leads of 4-2, 9-2 and 13-10 slip away.

In the bottom of the ninth, after the Cats had taken a three-run, 13-10 lead, K-State fell apart.

Ralston, now 0-3, started the inning by hitting Joe Wallace with a pitch — Wallace was plunked three times in the game. Fred Ocasio's double put runners on second and third with nobody out.

After Wallace scored on a ground ball out, Ernesto Rivera doubled to drive in Ocasio, closing the gap to 13-12. After another out, Chabon Childers singled to right, scoring Rivera to tie the game. Childers advanced to second when Wildcat right fielder Tim Decker misplayed the ball.

After an intentional walk to Sal Bando Jr., K-State third baseman Jay Kopriva muffed yet another grounder, loading the bases for Prodanov's bases-loaded walk.

Oklahoma State's winning four-run inning consisted of one hit batsman, two walks, two errors and just four hits.

But the real excitement may very well have taken place in Oklahoma State's half of the seventh, when the Cowboys scored eight runs.

Oklahoma State entered the inning down by a 9-2 count. Walks plagued the Cats in that inning, as well. All three of the Cowboys who walked eventually crossed the plate.

But it was Thad Chaddrick, the Cowboys' leading hitter with a .470 average, who provided the sparks. Chaddrick is suffering from a sprained ankle and hadn't played in either of the Cowboys' two previous games.

He entered the contest as a pinch hitter with the Cowboys trailing by a 9-6 count. The bases were loaded, and two were out.

Chaddrick hit a dramatic grand slam and limped around the bases.

Oklahoma State's come-from-behind victory erased solid performances by several Wildcat hitters. Catcher Brian Culp hit a three-run home run in the top of the seventh. Petering had three hits, three runs scored and two runs batted in. Kopriva had four RBIs.

But it wasn't enough to make up for the pitching that gave up a total of eight walks and 13 earned runs.

K-State is scheduled to play a home game tonight against Wichita State at Frank Myers Field in Manhattan.

Denver Zephyrs gone in body, still very much alive in spirit

Major league baseball's opening day brought two new teams into action, and fans in Miami and Denver are saying, "It's about time."

But amid the celebration, this baseball fan realized things in one of those towns won't be the same.

Last summer, I had the opportunity to live in Denver, giving me a chance to see a different brand of baseball — minor league. Specifically, the Triple-A Denver Zephyrs.

The Zephyrs (or Z's, as they were affectionately known) were the rung under the majors for players in Milwaukee's farm system.

Players like Gary Sheffield and Paul Molitor passed through on their way to the majors.

Before them, Craig Nettles and even a young, aspiring manager by the name of Billy Martin were part of the history of their predecessors, the Bears.

Last year's stars were pitcher Cal Eldred and first basemen John Jaha, both of whom got called up to "the show" during the season.

And there was always the opportunity to catch a rising star like Ozzie Canseco or Brian Jordan, who were both with Louisville, or even Jeff Conine "the Barbarian," now playing with the Marlins after being taken from Omaha.

Many nights and Wednesday afternoons, I had the chance to watch the stars of the future play in Mile High Stadium.

But more importantly, I found that the people behind the teams are different on each level.

The Colorado Rockies had a large staff in place long before I ever stepped foot in town for the summer.

The Zephyrs were run like a small business. One public-relations guy was in charge of the stats, interviews, and typing the play-by-play during the game, while the others handled all advertising and were the PA announcers.

The promotions director was a full-time, grade-school teacher. The two interns both were enrolled at the University of Denver and were doing all the grunt work such as manning the autograph booth, handling giveaways and other behind the scenes work done out of love for the game.

And the official scorer was the former sports editor of one of the local papers. Good old Frank might have been 76 years old and been around Denver baseball for more than 50 of those, but he came to the game each day with the same level of excitement.

The atmosphere in a major league pressbox tends to be subdued and quiet. Not in Denver last summer. Jokes between reporters and staff were in the air constantly. Good plays were met with applause and shouts of "Did you see that?"

Everyone knew the time was limited for enjoyment of the Z's, but those thoughts always were erased when it came to game time. We were all there for the fun of baseball, without its multimillion-dollar salaries and egotistical crybabies.

When the Rockies open at home this weekend, they change all that. Denver can call itself a major league town — finally.

The Zephyrs, meanwhile, have relocated to New Orleans and will try to build on the tradition they left behind in Denver.

Just before I left town last summer, the gang in the pressbox threw a party for me and a fellow intern I worked with. We were presented official Zephyr caps.

Mine serves as a constant reminder of what baseball really means to the people lucky enough to be associated with the minor-league version of the game.

The Denver Zephyrs may be dead, but the memories will live on in this fan's mind for years to come.

►RED SOX TOP PUNCHLESS ROYALS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — David Cone, returning to the Royals for the first time since 1986, lost to Frank Viola in a pitchers' duel Wednesday night as the Boston Red Sox beat Kansas City 3-2.

Cone is a Kansas City native who was traded to the New York Mets after the 1986 season in one of the Royals' worst deals. He agreed Dec. 8 to an $18 million, three-year contract, gave up two runs and eight hits in eight innings, struck out five and walked two.

Viola pitched four-hit ball for eight innings, struck out four and walked one. Jeff Russell finished for his second save.

Viola retired 13 in a row until George Brett singled opening the seventh, his 3,007th hit. That tied him with Al Kaline for 16th place on career list.

►MONTANA GOING TO THE CHIEFS?

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Reports say that Joe Montana, the four-time Super Bowl winner, is meeting with the Kansas City Chiefs today, but the location of the meeting was not immediately clear.

Team officials refused to confirm published reports that the San Francisco 49ers quarterback would meet with Chiefs' President Carl Peterson and Coach Marty Schottenheimer.

The Chiefs have long been rumored as one possible new home for Montana, who has played little since injuries felled him in 1990 and now plays behind Steve Young, last year's MVP.

"I didn't know anything about it until I saw it in the paper. There have been no negotiations with him yet," a secretary in the Chiefs' public relations office said. A spokesman said Peterson and Schottenheimer were unavailable.

Extended hours help busy students

KEVIN STRECKER

Lafene Health Center is proposing to modify its hours of operation.

"This change is for a reason," said Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center. "Lafene will be operated much more effectively and efficiently."

The proposed changes will primarily affect the general outpatient, medical clinic and after-hour services.

"They will not affect the operations of specialty clinics like the Women's Clinic and Sports Medicine, along with others," Zweimiller said.

The charges will be made to enhance access to services most highly utilized by providing extended weekday evening hours," he said. "This will help part-time students and others like students in the vet school who have a hard time getting here during the day."

Currently, Lafene is used minimally after 9 p.m. on weekdays and weekends.

"In order to extend evening hours to the students and provide pharmacy service after 5 p.m., it's necessary to eliminate access after 9 p.m. weekdays, eliminate Sunday hours and limit access on Saturdays," Zweimiller said.

The current hours are weekdays from 8 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. and from 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.

The newly proposed hours for general outpatient medical clinic services are weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. This will allow Lafene to stay open during the lunch hour and on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

There will be no after-hours charges during these times, and there will be a pharmacist on hand at all times.

Current after-hour services are weekdays from 4:30 p.m. to midnight and weekends from 8 a.m. to midnight. There is also an $8 after-hours service charge, and no pharmacist is available.

"The goal is to enhance accessibility to health center services having highest utilization and to enhance effective and efficient use of center resources to serve the community in the best manner possible," Zweimiller said.

Jason Allen, senior in mechanical engineering, said he praised Lafene for keeping the students in mind when proposing a change.

Student Senate could act on the proposal April 22, Zweimiller said. All comments or questions are welcome, he said.

KU professor talks on fundamentalism

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

Collegian

The word "fundamentalism" has been superimposed on the Islamic religion, a University of Kansas professor said.

"What is a Muslim fundamentalist? Most Muslims don't know," he said.

Jeffrey Lang, KU professor of mathematics, said "fundamentalist" is not native to Islam. He spoke to a large audience Wednesday in Union 212.

"Fundamentalist" is a term that grew out of Protestant Christianity and is widely used by the media, he said.

Even if you ask a Christian what fundamentalism is, they will have difficulty answering, he said.

Akhter Khan, graduate student in agronomy and secretary of the Muslim Community Association, said the aim of the lecture was to highlight that the word "fundamentalism" has been imposed on Islam by Western media.

Another reason was to spread the message of Islam to non-Muslims, he said.

Aspects of fundamentalism include a strong emphasis on the innerancy of the Bible, hostility toward modern science and the belief by fundamentalist that those who don't share their point of view are nominal believers, Lang said.

"Does the term apply when we talk about Muslim? Are there groups of Muslims who hold this view?" he said.

Muslims, Lang said, are very careful not to call each other weak. They do not make judgments about another Muslim's standing with God, he said.

"There is no strong theological movement in Islam. There is no hierarchy and no priesthood," he said.

As a result, there is no backlash against modern theology in Islam, he said.

He said Christianity is hostile to modern theology.

In regards to the Bible, there is some similarity between Muslims and Christians.

Muslims believe the Qu'ran is infallible, as it is God's word in its pure unedited form, he said.

Christians believe the Bible is the infallible word of God as well, he said.

The major difference though, is only segments of the Christian church believe the Bible is infallible. This is where fundamentalism comes in.

However, the entire community of Islam believes the Qu'ran is the infallible revealed word of God, he said.

The term "Muslim fundamentalist" does not make any sense, Lang said. It is misleading, as all Muslims universally share the same belief.

Panel talks openly with students

LYNN ANDERSON

Collegian

Societal acceptance of sexual orientations was discussed in a forum Tuesday, as members of the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society and Flint Hills Alliance organizations answered questions from human development students.

"It's a topic many have to deal with," Steffany Aye, human development recitation instructor, said. "I hope that through this the students will accept them as people and understand them better."

Only questions about religion and acquired immune deficiency syndrome were not permitted.

"I'm not a theologian," Karen Cook, FHA member, said. "We don't want to get in a talk about AIDS, but we hope that you're all practicing safe sex."

Some panel members remained anonymous because they said knowledge of their beliefs would be detrimental.

"I can't tell you my last name because my landlord will evict me," Ilene said.

The origin of the panelists' sexual orientations was an often-asked question. Several of the sessions dealt with when and how the individuals "came out of the closet."

"My dad figured out when I was 17, and he invited over people to our house," Ilene said. "They talked to me about lesbianism. I didn't know there were others."

Family knowledge and acceptance by friends was an obstacle some said they still have not overcome.

"My mom and sisters don't mind, but my father and brothers don't know," Jason Lueker, freshmen undecided and BaGaLS member, said.

Students asked how homosexuals could spot those with identical sexual orientations.

"It's kind of like a buzz word game," Ilene said. "You can tell by asking questions about what bars they go to and what musicians they listen to."

"Political stance and issues represented also can be an indicator," she said. "It may seem stereotypical, but there are ways to communicate."

The panel poked fun at what's called the "Gay Radar," citing several examples of specific lingo passed between homosexuals.

With discrimination still a big issue, panelists noted weary feelings and reservations about certain societal involvements.

"There's three things. You don't try to pick up at a frat, at a football game or at a local country western bar," Lueker said.

The future of gays and lesbians in the military was discussed with the panel, as two panelists had served in the military.

"When I first went into the military, they asked 'have you, or do you intend to, or desire to engage in homosexual activity?'" Ilene said. "I answered no. I didn't think I was lying because I thought homosexuals were men. That question is off now."

Panelists were asked about the future of the two programs and what the goals of the groups are.

A 12- to 15-member group, BaGaLS, is mainly geared toward students, Lueker said.

"The first thing is to know they are accepted among themselves so they can be accepted by others."

businesses. The database would contain statistics about those people. This would make it easy for employers to find exactly the kind of people they are looking for. For additional information or resumes, the employers could then contact the Career Planning and Placement Center.

"Our idea is going to be inexpensive, easy to implement. It would be a foot in the door for K-State graduates," Schwenk said.

Incorporation of SGA has been one of the fundamentals of the campaign, Schwenk said. Currently, student fees are collected and sent to Topeka, where they are kept until Senate allocates the money. The state keeps about $50,000 of interest off that money. Incorporation could help lower student fees, he said.

"They're keeping what should rightfully be ours," he said. "Florida State invested their money wisely 10 years ago, and now they have more money than can be spent wisely."

"There is not as much a margin of profit when the Union sells a new book as when it sells a used book. This should mean more money for the Union and more money for the students," Peterson said.

The plan would use money saved from the Total Quality Management program recently established in the Union to increase the percentage paid back for books.

"This program in the Union is innovative and a good idea. We would like to see the savings to the Union from this program returned to students in the form of a larger percentage back for books. We have received positive feedback in our discussions on this idea," Wingert said.

"The program is in its preliminary stages, but it should eventually mean some cost savings."

Peterson said one of the benefits of their plan is it is of no cost to students.

"If just half of this program we are working on is successful, it will mean a tremendous amount to K-State students financially. If you're like Fred and I, you could use that extra money," Peterson said.

which students get free student tickets to football and basketball in return for paying the athletic fee.

"Last year in Senate this proposal was supported by Eric and I, as well as Milt Richards, the former athletic director, but others, including some running in this campaign, were against it."

"Some of these people have proposed to be watchdogs of student money, but Tracy Mader, Marc Scarbrough and Michelle Munson all voted in favor of raising the athletic fee to $17, without allowing students anything in return," Skoog said.

Skoog and Henry said this proposal is feasible.

"This is not a pipe dream," Henry said. "Students at other universities have implemented this with success."

Skoog and Henry also have proposals dealing with solving parking problems by encouraging workable solutions and implementing a plan allowing beer drinking at football games. They also support breaking up the monopoly at the Union.

If you believe it's love, it is

DEAR CASSANDRA,

This is a serious question from a serious person. So, don't go cracking jokes like you usually do.

I am deeply in love with a man (for the first time in my life, I might add), and I need some advice.

He lives only a few hours away, but it's almost unbearable to have to come back to classes after spending time with him every couple weeks.

My question is how do I know if this is really love? It can't be just because it hurts to be away from him. I would do anything for him, though, and every time I'm around him I feel more alive, more aware of myself. He makes my heart beat faster, and I'm not even embarrassed to put my arm around him or even kiss him in public. I never felt this way about old boyfriends. Infatuation? Obsession? Love?

Confused

DEAR CONFUSED,

If you ever thought you loved someone, you did. That's all love is really, feelings (as Kevin Costner said eloquently in "Fandango"). Your heart beats faster, you don't want to leave him, you smooch and hold hands in public—sure it's love. Congratulations! Lots of folks go through life without ever experiencing what you're feeling.

I have a pretty good idea that I didn't tell you anything you already didn't know.

Senate: Cancel class, Wefald

"You have to learn how to deal with people who don't look like you. Be leaders. Be real people. Get through the biases and fears."

BERNARD FRANKLIN, ASSISTANT DEAN OF STUDENT LIFE

Resolution to allow attendance at King forum

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Emotion related to the Rodney King trial resulted in unscheduled resolution by Student Senate last night.

In association with the Rodney King Forum, scheduled for April 12, a resolution was passed encouraging K-State President Jon Wefald to cancel classes after 11:30 on Monday to allow students to attend the forum in the Union Courtyard at 11:30.

The resolution was proposed to allow students to get prepared for the verdict, said Andrew Tomb, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education and education senator, as well as the co-author of the resolution.

Many opinions were expressed in the meeting about the King trial and expected response.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, spoke of his days in the South.

"There are aspects about the South that I miss. The South was real. There was genuineness and authenticity we don't have here. Here, people will smile and then walk down the hall or in another room and say something completely different," Franklin said.

"You have to learn how to deal with people who don't look like you. Be leaders. Be real people. Get through the biases and fears," he said.

Ian Bautista, senior in modern languages and Senate chair, reflected his frustration.

"We have to realize that as individuals we have differences," Bautista said.

Allison Mahoney, freshman in business administration, said multicultural experiences were new to her.

"This is beneficial for this body to realize. These are issues that I've never faced before," she said.

In other business, the last day of allocations resulted in money being allotted to University for Man, Multicultural Student Council, Amnesty International and Black Panhellenic Council.

UFM, which is a campus educational resource program designed to provide opportunities for creative education and growth in an open environment, was allocated $13,000 for postage, printing, honorariums and salaries.

The allocation was passed by unanimous consent.

Multicultural Student Council, which fosters unity and support of multicultural student groups on campus and provides cultural awareness to K-State faculty, administrators, students and community, received allocations totaling $1,588 for three projects.

The first project is a multicultural business student conference. The second project is for an inspirational speaker, and the third project is for a MSC/talent showcase.

The allocation was also passed by unanimous consent.

Amnesty International, a human rights organization, was allocated $211.80 for two projects.

The projects include a publicity campaign and a Human Rights Day.

Black Panhellenic Council received $2,130 in allocations. It was passed unanimously.

The group is a new organization on campus and will sponsor such activities as a Peer Partner Program and a multicultural freshman seminar to help students make the transition into college and inform the students of the Makeup the key to success

Entrepreneur students earn extra money by selling various products

MICHELLE SMITH

Several K-State students have found a way to earn extra spending money without being a slave to a time card.

They use their spare time to sell a line of products.

Jamie Hill, junior in social work, sells cosmetics as a way to earn some cash for the necessities of college life.

"I started because I needed some extra cash on the side. I wanted to make money without the restrictions of hours," Hill said.

"It can be as profitable as I want it to be. School is my main priority. Selling has taken a back seat to my studies."

Jodie Newell, junior in social work, works as a distributor of products offered through catalogs. As a distributor, Newell has access to thousands of goods at a wholesale price.

"It's not a conventional business at all — you work at your own pace. It's just like my own business. Nobody tells me what to do. I don't have any quotas," Newell said.

"Some people will just explode with it, depending on their abilities," she said.

Newell doesn't consider what she does as selling.

"It's like a network. A network of people is what you are trying to build," Newell said.

"The plan about the business is that you consume the products yourself and then help share it with other people. Then they consume the products also."

Newell prefers to contact people she already knows about the business.

"You can make cold contacts, people you have never met before, but I do not prejudice people. I just give them the opportunity to get involved in the business," Newell said.

Like Newell, Hill began selling by first contacting friends and families. If they were not interested in the products, they usually know people who might be interested.

Brenda Rohling, sophomore in elementary education, sells a line of nail-care products. Rohling has had more trouble making contacts. She has found that convincing college students to consume new products can sometimes be difficult, she said.

"I was more involved in retail sales in high school. Up here, people are so poor," she said.

Despite dealing with poor college students, Rohling is still able to make some extra money for school.

"I still have 32 women and a couple of men at home who order from me regularly," she said.

Students interested in selling products may sometimes have to pay a start-up fee. Both Hill and Rohling had to buy kits to begin their business. They also had to attend training sessions to learn how to use the products correctly.

Hill must also decide what products she thinks she can sell. She purchases those products to later sell for a profit.

"I have to have the products on hand to give to the customer. Women buy on impulse. When they need it, it will be there," Hill said.

In addition to products, Hill and Rohling offer services to their customers. Hill will provide facials as a way of promoting her products. Rohling often provides free manicures for friends.

Wild Turkee Party endorses, announces platform

Andrew Tomb, chairman of the Wild Turkee Workers Party, talks during a press conference in the K-State Union Thursday afternoon while Ed Skoog and members Steffany Carrel and Tom Lister listen. The party sponsored the press conference to endorse the Skoog-Eric Henry ticket and announce the party's platforms.

Gobble, gobble, gobble.

Just four days before the Student Governing Association elections, the Wild Turkee Workers Party endorsed a student body president candidate and announced its platform Thursday in the K-State Union.

The party endorsed the presidential ticket of Ed Skoog, senior in English, and Eric Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications. Skoog founded the party one year ago, but Andrew Tomb, party co-chairman, said the candidates are non-partisan.

The party's platform consists of many ideas that mirror Skoog's campaign issues, such as free tickets to athletic events for students, smoking in the Union and allowing outside vendors in the Union and parking.

All party members who are presently senators opposed the raise in the athletic fee, Steffany Carrel, party co-chairwoman, said. "We want free tickets for students or no athletic fee," Tomb said. "We really get nothing for our money."

Members of the party said it would benefit students to allow smoking in the Union again. Tomb said they also want to bring outside vendors into the Union.

"We need to bring the Union into the capitalistic age. Burger King and Pizza Hut. We need to bring more variety, better quality food into the Union," Tomb said.

Party members want to encourage people to walk or ride their bikes to campus to help solve the parking problem.

"We want to offer real solutions to the parking problem," Tomb said. "There are never going to be enough parking spaces."

However, bicycles need to be encouraged, Carrel said.

"Biking has been discouraged," she said, citing the lack of bike paths and bike racks. "We need to stop discouraging that."

Skoog said he welcomed the endorsement and encouraged the student body to vote for members of the Wild Turkee Workers Party and members of the Alliance for Change, another student political party.

Your Q. & A. about Student Financial Assistance

Q. I've heard there are changes in financial aid eligibility for the Fall - 1993 and Spring - 1994 award year. What does this mean to me as a financial aid applicant?
A. Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act of 1965 took place in July, 1992 and will regulate all financial aid programs until 1997. The maximum Pell Grant for 1993-94 is funded at $2300 and the minimum at $400. Overall, a decreased level of eligibility for grants will be the norm replaced by a higher level of eligibility for low interest loans.

Q. What type of low interest loans are available to financial aid applicants?
A. In addition to the regular Stafford Loan, a new Unsubsidized Stafford Loan is available to all students regardless of income levels. The annual limits under the Stafford Loan program have also changed:
$2625 for first year students $3500 for second year students
$5500 for remaining undergraduate students
$8500 for graduate/professional students after 10/1/93
If you do not borrow the annual limits under the Subsidized Stafford Loan, you may be eligible to borrow these amounts under the Unsubsidized Stafford Loan Program. If you have a question regarding your eligibility, you are encouraged to make an appointment with a financial aid counselor by calling 532-6420.

Q. What if my parents want to borrow for me?
A. You must be a dependent student for financial aid purposes in order for your parents to borrow through the PLUS Loan. The parent loan allows one of your parents to borrow up to the cost of your education minus any other financial aid you may receive. Previously, parents were limited by a $4,000 cap for each student attending college. Your parents may call or write the financial aid office to inquire about the PLUS loan. The address is: Student Financial Assistance, 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. How do I know if I will receive the Pell Grant or loans?
A. Your 1993-94 Award Letter will show your eligibility for grants and loans. It is possible for all students both dependent and independent to receive low-interest loans once your Free Application for Federal Student Aid is received by the financial aid office. Congress has made changes to help students regardless of income levels; however, the shift to personal responsibility for educational expenses is a direct impact of the Higher Education Amendments for 1992, and will be reflected in students' awards for 1993-94.

Thailand fighters use hands, swords

Martial arts skills demonstrated as part of International Week

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

Collegian

Two students from Thailand demonstrated their martial arts skills Thursday in the K-State Union Courtyard as part of International Week.

The performance began with a holy dance to the sound of solemn Thai music in the background.

The importance of the pre-fight dance was to pay respect to the teachers who trained the students doing the demonstration.

"I learned martial arts in high school," said Sawitree Khatbanlue, graduate student in public administration.

Khatbanlue said his martial art involves the use of the hands and swords simultaneously.

Gunn Stithyudhakarn, graduate student in history, said using swords requires more care, but at the same time, it is more exciting. "This is new to K-State. In Thailand, this is known as Thai classical art," he said.

The sounds of clanging swords captured and maintained the undivided attention of the crowd throughout the demonstration.

During the demonstration, as the swords collided with each other, sparks of fire could be seen coming from the collision.

The principle of fighting was based on excellent coordination and fast movement of the body. This ensures the safety of the participants.

The participants displayed their skills by putting down one of their swords while fighting, then skillfully picking it up later.

There are different types of swords used in martial arts, Khatbanlue said.

The ones used in the demonstration were made of a type of steel known as Aranyaik. This kind of steel is well known for the metallic sounds during fighting.

K-State students had this opportunity to learn about the kinds of fighting done in Thailand.

This is not something they will see live very often, Stithyudhakarn said.

'Jesus' seen all over the world

Estimated 350,000 people watch film each day

MICHELLE HAUPPT

Collegian

Every day, an estimated 350,000 people watch the movie "Jesus" all over the world.

Friday, this global movie will be shown at K-State.

David Stuckenschmidt, staff member for Campus Crusade for Christ, said more than 500 million people have seen the movie in more than 197 countries.

Stuckenschmidt said "Jesus" has been translated into 241 languages, and there are more than 100 additional translations in progress.

It is the most translated movie in history, and there should be at least 270 translations by July, he said.

"It's the most accurate film ever made on the life of Christ," he said.

Stuckenschmidt said he knows of other schools where the movie has been shown for large numbers of people. He said he hopes for a big turnout here.

"We wanted to coincide it with Easter so students at Kansas State would know what Easter was all about," Stuckenschmidt said. "We've never done this before, so we don't know what to expect."

He said he checked statistics from the International Student Center to find the largest percentages of international students when determining in what languages the Stuckenschmidt said he had collected the movie in these four languages.

"We decided it would be a good opportunity to do it this year," he said.

Alicia Brende, senior in radio and television, is a student leader in Campus Crusade for Christ.

"I haven't seen it, but I hear it's an incredible film," Brende said.

Iran to buy nuclear missiles

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — An Iranian military delegation is in North Korea to complete the purchase of 150 missiles capable of reaching Israel with conventional and chemical warheads, an Iranian opposition official said Thursday.

"We would view that with considerable concern," Secretary of State Warren Christopher said when asked about the reported deal.

State Department official Richard Boucher said: "We are working with our friends and allies to persuade North Korea to terminate its missile proliferation activities, and to address Iranian missile acquisition efforts."

Mohammed Mohaddessin, foreign affairs director of the National Council of Resistance of Iran, an opposition coalition, said sources in Iran reported the 21-man Iranian delegation is headed by Brig. Gen. Hossein Manteqi, head of Iran's Defense Industry Organization.

He said in an interview the Iranians are pressing the Koreans for delivery of the missiles this year, perhaps as early as July or August.

The two sides are still haggling over terms, he said.

The missiles, called No-Dong I after the cape where they were being tested in North Korea, have a range of 1,000 kilometers or 625 miles, more than doubling the range of military payload which Iran can now deliver.

North Korea and China have helped Iran develop technology to build Soviet-designed missiles with a 250-mile range. These are now believed to be in production in Iran.

Mohaddessin said the North Koreans would provide fixed and mobile launchers for the new missiles.

Mohaddessin is a member of the opposition coalition's largest group, the Peoples Mujahadeen, which has a network of supporters and sources in Iran and has given accurate information in the past on Iranian military developments.

EASTER—The Hope of Life

More than bunnies and colored eggs, Easter is the celebration of two historical events, the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Christ died for our sins and rose again. In so doing, He conquered death for all time. As we establish a personal relationship with God through His Son, Jesus Christ, Easter gives us the hope of eternal life. Trusting in Christ's death and resurrection closes the gap which our sin has forged.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

So much for the opening act

THE ISSUE

While most SGA candidates are qualified and are in the race for right reasons, some don't seem so sincere.

WE SUGGEST

There's nothing wrong with fun, but this election is serious business for serious candidates only.

With all the somber determination that accompanies election, either local or national, it's sometimes refreshing to add a little humor to the recipe.

However, humor only goes so far for so long.

The vast majority of candidates running for offices in next Tuesday and Wednesday's campus elections are qualified students who care about the positions they are campaigning for.

They will spend a lot of their own money trying to convince you that they are right for the job.

They want to help the students of K-State.

But then there are those who, under the guise of adding some levity to the elections, are out to get their names and pictures in the newspaper or to gather fodder for the stories they'll tell their grandchildren about how hip and irreverent they were in college.

At its most basic level, an election is a weighty matter and, when you get down to it, should be treated as one.

Playtime is over, children. Yes, it was fun while it lasted and we appreciated the break but your job is done.

As the election draws close, it is time for those who are serious about being leaders to get running. And it is time for those not serious to hit the road and quit wasting our time.

The Lenin Contribution

"You cannot make a revolution with silk gloves." — Josef Stalin

The summer of 1918 was a hot one in the Russian town of Ekaterinburg, situated 800 miles east of Moscow in the Ural Mountains. A dusty mining and factory town, Ekaterinburg was a hotbed of support for the Bolshevik revolutionaries that had taken power the previous October. It was to this angry and unsympathetic location that the deposed Tsar Nicholas II and his family were taken in April 1918.

SHAWN WOODFORD

The question of what to do with the former Autocrat of all Russians and his wife, four daughters and hemophiliac son nagged at the leader of the Bolshevik Party, Vladimir Ilich Ulyanov, better known by his revolutionary alias as Lenin.

None of the Allied countries were willing to accept the pitiful family, which was the target of worldwide scorn directed at the perceived decadence of European royalty. Lenin feared that the Tsar would provide a rallying point for the gathering counter-revolutionary forces, known as the "Whites," as opposed to the Bolshevik "Reds."

While their fate was being decided, the royal family sweltered in the summer heat in the two-story Upatiev House. The top five rooms had been converted into a prison and the windows painted white so that no one could see in or out. A tall fence was erected around the premises and the home was officially designated The House of Special Purpose. When Nicholas and his wife Alexandra arrived in April, they were greeted by an angry mob shouting "show us the Romanovs!"

In May, the children joined their parents. Olga, the oldest at 23, had chestnut colored hair and blue eyes and was most like her father. She was shy and well known for her kindness and innocence. In many ways she was overshadowed by her sister Tatiana, 21.

Tatiana was the tallest and slenderest of the sisters, with auburn hair and grey eyes. Tatiana's elegance, energy and strong opinions made her the most regal of the young Grand Duchesses. Nineteen-year-old Marie had light brown hair and dark blue eyes, known within the family as Marie's "saucers." Mashka, as she was called, was merry and flirtatious and looked forward to a life as a wife and mother. Anastasia, the youngest daughter at 17, was short, blue eyed and the family rebel. A tomboy, Anastasia amused everyone with her ability to mimic visitors and guests.

The focal point of the family was the Tsarevitch, or former heir, Alexis, 14. Despite suffering greatly from hemophilia, Alexis was an active boy and the light of his parents' lives. So greatly did Alexandra feel Alexis's suffering, she had placed all her faith in the peasant mystic Rasputin, who displayed an uncanny ability to alleviate the boy's suffering. But Rasputin's scandalous behavior was a major reason behind the souring of the reputation of the Russian royal family with the people.

For all of his faults as a national leader, Nicholas was a devoted family man. Even while the Bolshevik guards delighted in tormenting the captive family, Nicholas remained pleasant and polite in the face of repeated slights. The family maintained its dignity through the heat, and remained calm when the brutish guards were replaced by detachment of hard, humorless men from the Cheka, the Bolshevik secret police.

Early in the pre-dawn hours of July 17th, the family was awakened and told to gather downstairs. They were led into the basement. When Nicholas stood to ask what was going on, the Chekists began to gun down the helpless family. Some of the Grand Duchesses had hidden jewelry in their underwear, which deflected the bullets. They were finished off with bayonets.

When Alexis groaned and began to crawl to his father, one of the Chekists stepped on the Tsarevitch's head and delivered two more shots. Even the daughter's dog, Jimmy, was bayoneted.

QUESTION AUTHORITY

TOM LISTER

Last Thursday I had the opportunity to hear Indian activist Russell Means speak in the K-State Union. It was one of the more interesting times I've had lately.

Means spoke for nearly two hours to the largely white audience, and most of his speech centered on the crimes of the Eurocentric male (the politically correct term for "cracker"). I listened as Means told us how Eurocentric males had systematically killed Indians and their culture, and how these whites continued to rape Mother Earth. Occasionally, Means would pause to sip coffee from a styrofoam Union cup. He is, incidentally, a great actor.

I don't think most white liberals there noticed the cup, and I don't think they truly took in much of what Means had to say. They were too busy trying to form a romantic allegiance with him.

When the man who bemoaned racism referred to Saudis as "rug merchants," no one stirred. When he gloriously applauded David Koresh, there wasn't even a shuffle in the seats. When he insulted all anthropology and history majors in the room, they quietly swallowed their pride.

Even when Means denounced the idol Bill Clinton, the audience remained silent (although they might have looked constipated).

Don't take me wrong. I really got into some of what Means had to say. He showed us all how ignorant we were of the Bill of Rights, and he explained the right to bear arms in a way that many had never heard before. I also liked what he had to say about Indian medicine.

"Have you ever been to Sea World and watched them throw fish to the seals? It was a bit like that."

But when it came time for any real questions or arguments concerning what Means had to say, there were none. No one picked apart his speech for individual points. They simply agreed with him on everything, no matter what, and applauded.

Have you ever been to Sea World and watched them throw fish to the seals? It was a bit like that.

So many multicultural groups exist within the United States, but I think if people left this country, they'd discover just how much we have in common. Above all, we share an overly eager desire to be liked. And often, to fulfill this desire, we choose the easy shelter of political conformity.

So we're either left or right, liberal or conservative. A flip of the coin. Unfortunately, we've come to the point where we really don't know what either means.

However, I think I know what the term liberal arts means. It means we're at the university level to explore the humanities and current issues. It means we're here to listen to National Endowment for the Humanities director Lynn Cheney speak, but that we should question what she has to say and give her hell. Even if an obnoxious fat bastard like Rush Limbaugh makes a point, we ought to think about it before we dismiss it. No talent lies in simple obedience.

We should have questioned Means also, but nobody did. Means worked against that happening. When he spoke last Friday, he wouldn't allow people to take notes during his speech.

Perhaps Means is like the trickster of Indian folklore, a figure who is neither good nor evil, a figure who exists simply to raise a little hell.

During Means' visit, no one but Means raised any hell. The only thing the audience did was sit back and take it.

means nothing. What experiments have they done? Where have they published the results of their experiments?

In an article I read last year, an experiment was performed on the power of prayer. Christians and non-Christians prayed for ill individuals without their knowledge. It was a double blind test and the protocol used was good. Do you know what the results were? Prayer had no effect on the course of a disease.

Second, the courts have acted responsibly by taking children away from Christian Scientist parents. It is true that adults have the right to act stupid, but that right ends the moment it infringes on the rights of others. The fact is that Christian Scientists are practicing ritual child abuse by denying medical treatment for their children.

Pork barreling helps us a little, hurts us a lot

Editor,
Our good Congressman Bob "Bring home the bacon" Dole has done again what Kansans have been electing him to do for the last 30 years. I am referring to the $7.5 million pork barrel spending package for the new flight training center in Salina. This program includes money for 10 new piston engine airplanes manufactured in Wichita, plus simulators and other undetermined costs.

More than 8,000 airline employees were laid off last month, both the Air Force and the Navy are cutting their pilot ranks and consolidating their training programs, and Bob says this project was passed for national defense? Surely we are not going to retrofit Cessnas and Beechcrafts to deliver cluster bombs and cruise missiles.

Kansas deserves pork barrel spending as much as any other state, but until we all start to show some fiscal restraint our federal deficit will continue to swell. This little spending package is one example of how Republicans like to line up at the trough as much as Democrats. No doubt Bob had to vote for another pork barrel program in some other state to bring one home for us.

PARKING

Profit from fines means cars will not go

Editor,

Being an enthusiast about walking, I found Hawks' April 5 column very appealing. To solve the parking chaos, the solution is not to create more space for parking, but to eliminate that space or even the need for automobiles. Unfortunately, there is one mountainous obstacle, and as usual, it's money. I'm not talking costs here, but profit.

No matter what the rationalization, Parking Services exists as a profit-motivated organization. As long as we have cars, we will feel a need to buy a parking permit for those occasions when we may need to park on campus. Of course, there are meters especially designed for those of us who prefer to pack a pocket load of nickels and dimes. If you're observant, you can catch a student at any given time racing from a building to slip another coin into the lot she or he has been parked in for most of the day.

And then there are the slots faculty and other select individuals may rent at outrageous $100+ amounts. This has always seemed like partiality toward the rich to me.

Anyway, the point is that K-State is making far too much money from permits, meters and parking fines to prohibit the use of vehicles by anyone on campus.

RELIGION

Nine times out of ten, prayer doesn't cure ails

Editor,

I wish to comment on Keith Landis' letter for April 5.

Landis is misleading in two areas. First, the fact is that somewhere near 99 percent of all diseases will run their course and present no harm to the individual. For some people, even deadly diseases have run their course and not killed them. The fact that a bunch of scientifically illiterate people have written testimonies about how faith cured them

E-Mail faster than snail mail

KRISTEEN YOUNG

Collegian

It is possible to communicate with someone in Japan, France or just about anywhere else in just a fraction of a second.

This is not face-to-face communication, or even speech, but electronic mail transmitted by computer.

Communication can occur across the world in a very short amount of time, said Betsy Edwards, staff assistant with computing and network services. "It is just typed instead of hand delivered," she said of electronic mail.

"And it's faster, so you really notice the time difference when you are across the world."

The electronic mail system is so much quicker, regular users have come to call postal mail "snail mail" because it seems so slow to them, Edwards said.

The electronic mail system is called BITNET and through it, mail is sent called BITMAIL.

BITNET is a network that is further connected to a national network called Internet.

While the terms may sound confusing to those who don't regularly use computers, BITNET is easy enough for anyone to use.

Any student, faculty or staff member can be a user of the electronic mail system. However, until February, 1988, only students in computing classes were allowed to use the system.

Edwards said the rule to open the network up to anyone was an administrative decision to help students and the University.

"We see it as promoting computer literacy at K-State and also as providing a service for the University community," she said.

Currently, 13,500 user IDs are active at K-State. Obtaining a user ID is free, and so is using the computers.

A student doesn't have to take a class to use the computers. There are student consultants on hand in most of the labs, and a CMX/Unix Survival Kit, which gives specific instructions about computer use, is available to purchase.

There are eight labs on campus where electronic mail can be sent and received. Some of those are open 24 hours, seven days a week.

Angie Hicks, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said the labs with late hours are a benefit for her.

"On a Saturday night, once I was typing for three hours," Hicks said.

She was typing to her boyfriend, Greg Harrod, senior in electrical engineering, in Illinois, and messages to each other had become a daily ritual. Hicks said she wasn't a computer junkie, and she had rarely used computers before, except for a computer class she once took.

Harrod was working at a co-op at Caterpillar Inc. in Peoria, Ill., through K-State's cooperative education program with the College of Engineering.

Caterpillar Inc. had an account with the University of Illinois, and Harrod was able to log on to a computer at work where he could communicate with Hicks during his lunch break or after work.

"If I wasn't in class, I would ring his computer at lunch. His computer would flash so he'd know someone was calling him," Hicks said.

At first they only used BITNET a little and mostly used the phone.

"We got better at using BITNET once the phone bill came. We used the computer more," Hicks said.

Although there was an advantage to cutting back the long-distance phone bill, Harrod said there were disadvantages.

Hicks said it is hard to tell the tone of someone's voice by what they type.

"It can't replace the voice," he said.

CAMPUS

Summer classes concentrate studies

KRISTI HUMSTON

Collegian

Classes don't always end after finals.

For many students, intersession and summer studies enter the picture just as others leave for home.

Cyndy Trent, intersession coordinator, said intersession courses allow students to focus on one course at a time without worrying about all the activities going on around campus.

"The intersession period is short, so the course is over quickly, and there's no opportunity to procrastinate," Trent said.

Students can take courses in a special-interest area or in something they've never thought about before.

Intersession courses, Trent said, are a little different because they are run through the Division of Continuing Education. The cost per hour ranges between $59 and $212, depending on whether or not the student is an undergraduate or graduate and a resident or non-resident.

Registration for intersession courses is April 28-29. Tuition and fees are paid at that time, and students may enroll in no more than four credit hours.

Trent said intersession courses usually attract 400 to 700 students.

According to figures provided by the Office of the Registrar, a yearly average of 6,263 students have taken summer courses throughout the past five summers.

Brad Eisenbarth, senior in industrial engineering, has taken summer courses for four years. He said he enjoys the one-on-one interaction and close work with the teachers, but said he feels the classes are often harder because they have to be compressed into a short amount of time.

Robert Reeves, professor of nutrition, has taught summer courses for 13 years. He said there are some advantages to taking summer courses.

"It allows a student to focus energies on one or two courses in a concentrated way," Reeves said.

He also said it relieves the pressure with courses that take a lot of time.

"A disadvantage is that you may have to do this (take a course) because you are required to do it," Reeves said.

This can sometimes cut back on working hours for students wanting to make extra money in the summer.

Fred Bradley, professor of counseling and educational psychology, has taught summer courses for 20 years.

"The atmosphere is different,"

he said. "People are more relaxed."

He said the advantages to summer courses include convenience, with eight-week or shorter courses and the increased ability to integrate material.

Disadvantages of taking summer classes, Bradley said, may include adjusting to the longer hours of the classes and the potential distractions with warmer weather.

"The classes shouldn't be any different unless they are timely."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMNS

Has the rivalry with the school down the road gotten violent?

What should have been a six-hour drive home from Arkansas for the K-State track team took more than 11 hours.

The track team was on its way back from the Tyson Invitational track meet in Fayetteville on April 4 when it ran into some trouble.

About six miles east of Lawrence on Interstate 70, around 12:45 a.m., an unknown person chucked a good-size rock — about six inches in diameter — from the overpass at the windshield of the bus that was carrying the Wildcat track and field team.

Later, the bus driver said he saw a figure of a person from the overpass.

The rock was thrown just right to hit the windshield precisely in front of the driver. What saved him from getting hit square in the face was the plexiglass between the two glass windshields. Luckily, the driver suffered only minor cuts from the chips of plexiglass that flew from the windshield.

What was even more fortunate was that the driver did not lose control, much less swerve the bus.

His driving saved his passengers because if he would have swerved either way, it could have been a fatal accident.

Has the KU-K-State rivalry gone violent? That may be an over-dramatization.

One could easily think the accident was revenge on what happened to Kansas basketball player Rex Walters on Jan. 18 in Bramlage Coliseum. That's when, supposedly, a K-State fan threw a penny that ultimately cut Walters above the eyebrow. Logically, one would pretty much have to believe a K-State fan would have done it.

But the accusations against K-State for the incident could be deemed as unfounded. Who knows — maybe a kid or a parent lost control of the penny when it was on its way to their pocket. The fact is the person of responsibility was never caught.

Since the Kansas basketball team lost to North Carolina the night before the K-State bus accident, one might say that some angry fan could have been raising hell.

But even though the chartered bus was heading back to Manhattan, the evidence that the incident was a result of a vindictive nature against K-State is highly unlikely.

Many people would like to believe it was a violent act of deviance against K-State athletics, for whatever reason that may be.

Here are a couple of facts — incidents of similar nature have been reported in the same location. Another fact — the KU campus is another six miles into Lawrence, pretty far for a midnight stroll on or around campus.

What I am getting at is the fact that KU and K-State love to point the finger at each other, whether the circumstances can easily be proved or not. And more often than not, that finger-pointing is the direct result of athletics.

If you would talk to a KU fan about the track bus incident, he or she would probably say you have no evidence to back up your accusation.

If you would talk to a K-State fan he or she would probably say yes — especially since it happened near Lawrence.

Why is the rivalry so strong to cut each other down every chance we get?

I agree it is good to have a rivalry, and I'm all for competition, but accusations as well as the vicious deeds themselves can go too far.

There is no way to prove a Jayhawk fan did the dirty deed. Sorry I couldn't feed the imagination.

But I guess anything is possible.

K-State pitchers walk 12 Shockers

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Thursday night's 11-2 loss to No. 9 Wichita State capped off a tough two days for Wildcat baseball coach Mike Clark.

K-State pitchers walked 12 Shockers last night. The Wildcats blew a 9-2 lead over Oklahoma State Wednesday night, falling 14-13, the winning run scoring on a bases-loaded walk.

Clark had a root canal Thursday afternoon, just a few short hours before losing to the Shockers, a game he tried to have canceled.

"It hasn't been a fun two days," Clark said after his team dropped its ninth game in 11 contests. "It's frustration after frustration."

The latest loss came against the Shockers, now 24-8. And for the second day in a row, the Wildcat pitching did as much for the opposition as did the opponents' hitting.

Wichita State had 11 hits. Twelve batters reached base with free passes. Six of the 11 Shocker runs were scored by batters who walked.

"That's just a matter of throwing strikes," Clark said. "We've got a lot of work to do in that area."

The Cats actually had a brief lead against Wichita State, scoring a pair of runs in the bottom of the fourth.

With one out, first baseman Brian Morrow brought his bat and his 0-for-18 slump to the plate. He blooped a single to short right field, bringing up Jay Kopriva, who also singled.

Scott McFall's single — and a throwing error by the Wichita State catcher — scored Morrow, and Jamey Stellino drove in Kopriva with the Cats' fourth-straight single of the inning. Todd Petering grounded into a double play to end the inning.

And that was the extent of the Cats' offense. K-State would get just one more hit in the final five innings, and Shocker pitchers faced just 15 more batters.

"If we can't get up for Wichita State," Clark said, "we shouldn't be putting on a uniform."

K-State's lead was short-lived. In the top of the fifth, the Shockers scored six runs on just four hits — one off of a bunt — and five walks.

Wildcat starter David Leonhart pitched 4-1/3 innings, giving up five hits and six earned runs. He walked six batters and dropped his record to 1-3.

Spikers to host 1st-ever Big 8 spring tourney

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State volleyball team will be host to the inaugural Big Eight Conference Spring Volleyball Tournament Saturday at the Ahearn Gymnasium.

Coach Patti Hagemeyer said the tournament should help the teams get more experience.

"The reason for the tournament is experience for all of the teams, and to promote the Big Eight top to bottom and not the top two," said Hagemeyer, who is starting her third season as coach.

"We are trying to make an impact in the Midwest that Big Eight volleyball is comparable to one of the best volleyball conferences in the country. Everyone is making the commitment to try to develop those teams that aren't at the top for the opportunity to play in the spring."

Entering the round-robin tournament are Nebraska, last season's Big Eight champion, and Colorado, last year's Big Eight tournament champion.

Each match will last to two games and play to 15 points. The Cats will have five matches — the first one at 9 a.m. against Oklahoma. The Wildcats' next match is against Missouri at 10 a.m., followed by Colorado at noon, Iowa State at 1 p.m. and Kansas at 5 p.m. K-State opted not to play Nebraska because the Cornhuskers don't have enough players.

Hagemeyer said the experience gained from Saturday should help the team.

"It's good for us to play against these programs," she said. "It's an experience that you don't have to worry about winning or losing — just learning what the other team likes to do and remember what they do when next fall. For our development, this is a good time for us."

Hagemeyer said she is pleased with her team's progress.

"Physically, we are a lot stronger, particularly the freshmen because they have spent more time in the weight room," she said.

"Their understanding of the game has gotten better, their appreciation for the defense has gotten better, and defense to us is more than a challenge in a positive way."

"Overall, the improvement has come collectively. The team play is much improved from the fall."

K-State to face several conference foes in meet

Cats looking for invitational to prepare them for KU Relays

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's track and field teams will travel to Norman, Okla., Saturday to compete in the John Jacobs Invitational.

Wildcat track coach Cliff Roovelto said the team is using the meet to gear up for the Kansas Relays, which are April 14-17.

"We're not doing a whole lot," he said. "We're just getting prepared for next week. It's an off week for people doing best events to get prepared for next week."

A variety of colleges will be there, including Big Eight schools Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, as well as Kansas' Barton County Community College.

K-State currently has six athletes leading the conference in a variety of events.

For the women, senior Paulette Staats leads the 1,500-meter run at 4:30.75; freshman Rahma Mateen tops the long jump at 18 feet, 10-1/2 inches, and senior Julie Jackson leads in the javelin at 155 feet and five inches.

Jackson said she has been working up for the big meets.

"The first couple of meets are good meets to see where you stand and what you need to work on," Jackson said. "The KU Relays and the Drake Relays (April 23-24) are pretty big meets."

On the men's side, junior Francis O'Neill tops the 3,000-meter steeplechase list at 8:50.2.

sophomore Percell Gaskins — a football player who is participating in spring drills and won't make the trip — leads the high jump at 7' 2-3/4", and sophomore Aaron Larsen leads in the javelin at 222' 2".

Middle-distance runner Randy Helling said he is using the meet to work on his endurance because he has missed some of the practices recently.

He said there are bigger meets in the future.

"I'm using this meet for an endurance workout," Helling said. "I'm running the 800, then I'm running the 400 for strength and to see how well I can run then come back and run a fast 400."

"My endurance is hurting right now, and that's what I'm working on with this meet."

"We're not doing a whole lot. We're just getting prepared for next week."

► CAT NETTERS TO TEST 3-0 RECORD

The Wildcat tennis team will put its undefeated conference mark on the line this weekend against Oklahoma State. K-State is a perfect 3-0 in the Big Eight and will play host to the Cowboys on Sunday and Oklahoma on Monday.

Both Oklahoma and Oklahoma State are 11-4 and 1-0 on the season.

"Both teams are very tough," Cats tennis coach Steve Bietau said. "We'll have to step it up to win both of these matches."

Sunday's match is scheduled to begin at 1 p.m. at the L.P. Washburn tennis courts. If the weather is bad, the match will be at Ahearn Field House.

► ROYALS DROP 3RD STRAIGHT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Scott Cooper had three hits and four RBIs, and the Red Sox pounded Kansas City 9-4 Thursday night for their first-ever three-game sweep at Royals Stadium.

The Royals are off to another slow start after going 1-16 to begin 1992.

Boston was leading 8-0 after two innings, and every starter except Luis Rivera had a hit off Mark Gubicza (0-1).

► OKLAHOMA STATE TO FORFEIT GAMES

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Big Eight Conference ordered Oklahoma State on Thursday to forfeit all its conference basketball games from the 1991-92 season for using an ineligible player.

The Cowboys were 10-4 in league games in 1991-92 — including two wins against K-State — and won one game in the Big Eight's post-season tournament, also against the Wildcats.

Randy Davis had a problem with his transcript that was not caught by the university, the conference said. Neither the player nor the school was at fault, but the games had to be forfeited because of the significant playing time of the athlete.

Davis, a junior college transfer, played for only that season.

Big Eight faculty representatives and athletic directors voted not to exempt Oklahoma State from the rule requiring the games to be forfeited, because of the amount of time the athlete played.

"Our record stays the same," said Steve Buzzard, Cowboy athletic department spokesman. "It's basically just an asterisk in the record book."

Research concludes most people do not consider paying their taxes a moral issue. Some people will not pay their taxes because they believe they will never get caught.

Dann Fisher, assistant professor in accounting, did not think this sounded right. He has been doing research on the moral issue of taxpayer compliance for two years.

He said past studies show if the benefits of cheating are bigger than the risks of getting caught, then people will cheat on their taxes.

"Taxpayer compliance, in terms of what I am looking at, is motivated by the tax gap," Fisher said. "The tax gap is the difference between the amount of taxes that should have been reported and what is actually reported."

This gap has been growing considerably since the early 1970s, Fisher said — it has tripled in real dollars. This number runs anywhere from one-fourth to one-half of the budget deficit, he said.

"The Internal Revenue Service feels if they could just get people to pay the taxes they are supposed to pay, it would wipe out a substantial amount of the budget deficit," he said.

Fisher's research also examined the moral issue of compliance. He measured moral reasoning, which is the understanding of the nature, function and purpose of social cooperation, and looked at how this is related to taxpayer compliance.

"I had subjects read three tax-paying scenarios and then fill out an objective survey. The subjects rated the importance of different issues in deciding what the person depicted in each scenario should do," Fisher said.

He said he found as education level increased, so did moral reasoning about paying taxes.

People with low moral reasoning were the most likely to not pay their taxes and did this for their own self-interest, he said. People with a medium level of moral reasoning were almost 100 percent likely to pay their taxes because obeying the law was viewed as the morally right thing to do.

Fisher said he also found individuals with a high level of moral reasoning were the second-least likely to pay their taxes. This was due to the fact they felt the laws distributed the tax burden unfairly.

The survey was issued to 396 high school, undergraduate and graduate students and members of the faculty.

"I would encourage anyone interested about taxes to read the book 'The Ultimate Ripoff' by Iris Weil Collett," Fisher said. "It is a good way to learn a lot about the IRS and realize that they are looking for ways to make the process of paying taxes more acceptable through education and assistance."

Career planning marks 40th year

RITA KIDD

They have been making the job search easier for 40 years.

The Career Planning and Placement Center is celebrating its 40th anniversary this year.

"Some changes in 40 years have been the adaptation and orientation to assist a student in the job search and adapting to the job market," James Akin, the center's director, said.

The competition in the job market requires a student to use more resources in locating a job, Akin said.

"Thirty-five or 40 years ago, anybody could interview on campus and get a job. Those days have been gone for 20 years," Akin said.

The center used to advise a student to begin the job search nine months in advance of graduation. Today it advises a period of 13 months, Akin said.

The center was located in the basement of Anderson Hall until about 10 years ago, when the offices were moved to the present location in Holtz Hall, Akin said.

Today, a better job is done of locating bachelor's degree graduates to report on what they are doing, Akin said.

"Knowing what has happened to graduates is a vital part of career planning. We have located 93 percent of last year's bachelor's degree graduates," Akin said.

Some advice can be given to current students on the basis of graduates' experiences, Akin said.

Rosie Ferris, secretary, has been an employee for several years.

"We got out of the basement of Anderson Hall. I think that was a big improvement," Ferris said.

Advancing from ditto machines, mimeograph machines and carbon copies to computers was another improvement during her employment, she said.

"We have about the same number of employees," Ferris said.

"We do a lot more work."

Steve Martin's got soul in 'Leap of Faith'

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL

Collegian

Raise your hands to the Lord and praise "Hallelujah," because Steve Martin as Jonas Nightengale is here to save your soul in his latest movie, "Leap of Faith."

Martin plays a religious scam artist who travels from town to town swindling money from gullible believers during spiritual revivals. His glittery and flashy show has all the works, from the powerful Angels of Mercy gospel singers to the dramatic religious testimonies that "God has saved my soul." He even throws in a miracle or two just to keep the crowd on its feet.

The only thing missing from his act, of course, is honesty, because almost the entire performance is a hoax. His sidekick, Jane, played by Debra Winger, and his crew observe, analyze and eavesdrop to get inside information about the people who attend the shows. Then it appears to be a miracle when Nightengale somehow knows each person's problems and preaches his heavenly advice.

After seeing all this, the believers in the crowd want to donate money to the cause of God and his saving power, so that others may be helped as well.

Martin earnestly throws himself into the typical fast-talking, hand-waving preacher, who frantically dances across the stage and spiritually moves the crowd into frenzied cheers. He uses his actions and exclamations such as, "All you need is faith, my brothers and sisters," which polishes his overall performance.

Nightengale's act seems to be working as usual at their latest stop, Rustwater, Kan., until the local sheriff, Will, and a skeptical waitress, Marva, don't fall for his scam. Will, played by Liam Neeson, tries to get Nightengale to move his act to another town because the people he is preying upon are too poor to throw away their money. Will also falls in love with Jane and wants her to get out of the act and look for something better in her life.

SHOW TIMES

■ "Leap of Faith" will show at 7 and 9:30 tonight and Saturday, and at 7 p.m. Sunday in K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

Marva doesn't want Nightengale to stay either, because she already has had a bad experience with a preacher who had promised to heal her crippled brother.

The situation gets even more complicated when a miracle performed during one of the shows could be the real thing. This possibility scares Nightengale because he has spent so much time fooling people he doesn't know how to handle the truth.

Both Martin and Winger give solid performances in this movie. Martin does more than entertain as the preacher, and he shows Nightengale's growing reluctance about continuing his scam-artist life.

Winger, who has not been in a movie lately, fits comfortably in her character, showing Jane's need to want the money their act provides, yet missing stability in her life — stability Will could provide.

It doesn't take a leap of faith to enjoy this movie — just know that Martin and the rest of the cast could make even the biggest doubter truly believe.

Sex is alive and well in Woody Allen film

ANDREW TOMB

Collegian

Woody Allen's film "Everything You Ever Wanted To Know About Sex — But Were Afraid To Ask" will play at the K-State Union's Forum Hall at midnight Friday and Saturday.

The film is a series of short features parodying questions answered in Dr. David Reuben's 1970's best-selling self-help book of the same title.

The film is classic Woody Allen, with several typical episodes of everybody's favorite sexually repressed neurotic, using his wit and humor to entertain his audience.

The film features several cameo appearances by actors such as Gene Wilder, Burt Reynolds and Lynn Redgrave.

In one of the more memorable episodes, a game show called "What's My Perversion" is played, with a young Regis Philbin of "Live with Regis and Kathy Lee" fame, asking sex perverts questions such as "Do you use whips and chains?"

One of the episodes, a play on new-wave Italian cinema, features Allen as a newlywed, worried about the future of his marriage, as his wife can only be satisfied sexually if they "do it" in a public place.

In perhaps the most elaborate of the segments, we are treated to an inside look at the human body during a sexual encounter.

Burt Reynolds is featured as one of the "officers" in the brain, and Allen himself portrays a hesitant sperm cell. Reluctant to leave the body, he inquires of other sperms "What if it's a homosexual encounter?" and "I've heard reports of the boys banging their heads on rubber after they leave."

My personal favorite quote from the film is Allen saying "Some things about sex are probably best kept unknown, and with my luck, they probably will."

My overall impression of the film? The film is certainly intended for mature audiences. So leave the kids at home. But, if you have enjoyed Woody Allen's earlier films, you should be comfortable seeing this one.

Fans of Allen's more recent films, such as "Hannah and Her Sisters" and "Husbands and Wives," will realize it as one of his less "mature" works, but still a respectable Woody Allen Film. Again, be warned, the film does have strong sexual content ... and 1970s costumes.

EDUCATION

Students study agriculture in Europe

JENNIFER SWANSON

Collegian

Thirty students in the Kansas Agriculture and Rural Leadership Inc. class spent two weeks in March in Europe as ambassadors of U.S. agriculture to Germany, Poland and the Czech Republic.

The KARL program was started in 1987 as a developmental program for adults 25 to 45 years old. Jack Lindquist, KARL president, said.

Members of the class participated to enhance their communication skills and to try to make themselves better leaders.

At the end of the first year of training, class members spent time in Washington, D.C., applying what they had learned on a national level.

Groups of five class members researched the economic, educational, agricultural, political and governmental aspects of six different countries, and the class voted on the top three. Donita Whitney-Bammerlin, KARL student, said.

During their two weeks in Europe, class members met with agriculture-related officials, observed different agricultural industries and examined the possibilities for U.S. agricultural relations with those countries.

The class visited farms and processing plants that had been owned by the government under communism, as well as ministries of agriculture and three universities.

Whitney-Bammerlin said she was surprised at the lack of technology in one school of veterinary medicine.

"They still use porcelain sinks, where we use stainless steel, and their sterilization process is nothing like ours," she said. "It was nothing like our own Trotter Hall, down to the head gates and surgery rooms."

By seeing the difference in agriculture in each of the countries she visited, Whitney-Bammerlin said she learned a lot, especially about the role politics plays in agriculture.

"It was a real crash course in history, government and politics," she said. "It was surprising to find out that they knew more about our history than we did."

Because of the social unrest in that part of Europe, both Lindquist and Whitney-Bammerlin said they were slightly apprehensive about the trip.

"There was anxiety in going to an area where we would spend three-fourths of the time in formerly communist countries," Lindquist said.

The students were put at ease when they were warmly accepted by the people they visited, Lindquist said.

"We were the first farmers and Americans to visit their countries since the fall of Communism," he said. "They were excited that we were there and interested in their past, present and future."

Language barriers weren't really a problem since the group had an interpreter, but even when they were without one, Lindquist said, they didn't have too many problems.

"A smile or a wink says 'hello' and 'I'm friendly' everywhere around the world," Lindquist said.

One thing that was most impressive to Whitney-Bammerlin, she said, was the amount of appreciation the people in the larger cities had for agriculture, as compared to the American urban population.

"They seem to realize where their food comes from and know what it's like not to be able to import food," Whitney-Bammerlin said. "The urban people also seem to appreciate their ancestors' ties with farming."

Being able to see the physical changes from a communistic era to a non-communistic era was also interesting to Whitney-Bammerlin, she said.

"Store fronts that used to be drab with generic names now advertise and use neon signs and bright colors," Whitney-Bammerlin said.

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

And everywhere that Mary went, her oxygen tank would go.

When little Mary Bandar received her formal invitation to enroll in kindergarten along with all the other kids born in '88, her creaky ticker almost needed a jump-start.

Mary Bandar is 104 years old and quickly surpassing the age of some of our nation's most ancient old-growth forests.

As you may have ascertained, the mistake occurred when officials of the school in Winona, Minn., used a computer to find the names and addresses of children born in 1988. Of course, who would have expected coming up with someone born in 1888?

"Boy, wouldn't those kids ever be surprised when they see me coming to school," Bandar said.

You bet they would, Mary. Almost as surprised as you would be after they pummeled you in the recess dodgeball game.

Pete, just stop and smeuh, see the roses, buddy.

When Peter Williams was handed Exhibit A — a glass jar — after a court case last week, he had mixed feelings.

On the one hand, Carl Foster, the guy Williams had wanted to see go to jail, was acquitted. Foster had been charged with aggravated battery after he and Williams had gotten into a slight donnybrook outside a tavern back in February.

On the other hand, Williams did get possession of the glass jar, which contained his nose.

Well, all right, most of his nose.

During their parking-lot scrap Foster, apparently unable to get a few good licks in, bit off a sizable portion of Williams' proboscis. The nose was presented as evidence during Foster's trial.

Here's an excerpt of Williams' court testimony, as taken from official trial transcripts:

Prosecuting attorney: "Mr. Williams, explain the trauma that this despicable incident has left you with."

Williams: "Whed sumbuddy bides off your node, id hurds veddy much. ... I reedy want by node back, peese. I reedy do. ... I'mb gonna kill dat bastid (points at defendant who is rattling plaintiff's nose around in jar)."

It's those damn Communists.

While on the subject of elementary education, let's chat about Pumsy the Dragon, shall we?

People who like Pumsy say the puppet helps children work on their self-esteem through exercises directed by a teacher.

People who do not like the blue-green Pumsy say the puppet hypnotizes and brainwashes children, and contradicts Christian beliefs.

People who like Pumsy say she helps students to reason and helps build confidence in themselves and respect for others.

People who don't like Pumsy, such as Dragon Queen Phyllis Schlafly, say things like:

"It teaches them to look at a dragon as a friend instead of their parents."

So far, parents in eight states, including Kansas, have challenged Pumsy — with little success.

Weekend completely understands the reasoning behind this fiasco. How can we worry about such trifling things such as child abuse and abduction when there's an old sock with sewn-on eyes out on a rampage, hypnotizing America's youth?

Happy Easter, Good Friday and happy birthday, Carl.

Here is a small list of Some Very Important Things that happened on this day, April 9, throughout history:

- 1865 — Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered his army to Union Gen. Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in Virginia. This event marked the beginning of the end of the Civil War and established the huge inferiority complex suffered by many Southerners who will never admit they lost.

- 1939 — World renowned singer Marian Anderson, who died Thursday, performed a concert at the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C., after the Daughters of the American Revolution denied her the use of Constitution Hall because she was black. At the memorial, Anderson sang before an admiring throng of 75,000 rather than the 4,000 capacity of Constitution Hall.

- Birthdays: Silky PJ man Hugh Hefner is 67. Bad-ass singer-songwriter Carl Perkins is a sprightly 61. Actor Dennis Quaid is 39. Golfer and wily Spaniard Severiano Ballesteros is 36. And non-golfer but still wily Weekend page designer Deanna Adams is 23.

Where Have All The Atoms Gone?

STORY BY DAVID EUGENE FRESE • DESIGN BY DEANNA ADAMS

The Eighties. Bad times. "The Day After." Lawrence, a nuclear pile (maybe not all bad). The president: We start bombing in five minutes. Ha. Ha. Big joke.

Our nuclear memories: Gearing up for T-Ball during Three Mile Island. Learning of Hiroshima in middle school. Wondering who to ask to Sadie Hawkins as Chernobyl burned.

I remember a grandfather talking of the damn Russkies and fighting the Cold War. I remember debating in the schoolyard whether it would be better to die in the initial blast of a nuclear bomb or to try to live in the world amidst nuclear winter and two-headed cows as your hair fell out. I remember sitting in front of televisions and memorizing megatonnage and thinking not to look at the blast. I remember watching PBS footage of clouds growing into mushrooms and buildings torn apart by atomic winds.

Salina was once surrounded by nuclear warheads. As was Topeka. Giant Atlas E's and F's unnoticed by the populations except for the days when the Air Force boys would come out and raise the giant gleaming rockets from their prairie homes and fire the engines. Testing. Ready. Preparing.

The philosophy at the time was to protect the air bases Schilling and Forbes from threat of attack. That was 1955.

Today the missiles are gone, replaced because of the obsolescence of liquid fuel and expensive upkeep.

Professor of Mechanical Engineering Hugh Walker tells me this in the basement of Durland Hall next to a fuel pipe removed from one of the old silos. The bases were shut down by the Air Force, and, after taking the communications, fuel and, of course, the missiles, the Air Force sold three of them to K-State in the mid-1960s. Two Atlas F bases — one in Chapman and one in Abilene — and one Atlas E base in Wamego.

"There were proposals to do research with them," Walker said.

"But we never scored the funding." Sounds familiar.

"We wanted to use one as a rocket-test facility because testing rockets makes too damn much noise to do on campus," Walker said.

"Then there was another proposal written to do some car crash testing in them."

The plan was to drop the car into the silo, straight down 175 feet, and have the old elevator that formerly raised the missile to the ready position to bring the car back to the surface for study, he said.

But as financing for the projects was never obtained, the University let the silos go idle until the mid-to-late 1980s, when the University salvaged and stripped out the F sites. They kept the Wamego site until 1991, when the University auctioned it off.

"It was pretty much functional," Walker said.

"Of course, it didn't have the missile in it. Now I imagine it's just a hole full of water."

"Oh no," Dean Eckhoff, professor of nuclear engineering, said. We are in his office in Ward Hall, barely 50 feet from a nuclear reactor.

"Don't compare nuclear missiles to nuclear power." He is almost yelling at me. "That's like comparing the burning of coal to the explosion of dynamite."

He is right, you know. Same process, different effect.

"The only relation is one is strictly controlled and the other is a short burst of energy. Really, there is no comparison," he said.

The reactor outside his window is nothing to worry about?

"Our reactor produces 250 kilowatts of thermal power. Heat," he said.

"Compared to Wolf Creek's output of 1125 megawatts of electricity. Roughly equivalent to 3,500 megawatts of heat energy. That's about 10,000 times of our maximum output."

Wolf Creek, near Burlington, is up and running, yes, that's true. Has been for a while now and has the capacity to produce 25 percent of the energy need for Kansas. Right now the power from the Wolf Creek Power Plant goes as far west as Wichita, as far north as Emporia and southward to the Kansas-Oklahoma border.

The reactor on campus is on eight to 15 hours a week. Eckhoff said it never gets maxed out.

"It's used for operator training and the production of neutrons for radioisotopes," he said.

"We might go up to 50 kilowatts, but we turn it on when we need it and turn it off when we don't."

So I ask him about stereotypes. Stereotypes that nuclear is evil and no damn good. I relate a story of a time when one of my hippie friends was set straight by a nuclear engineering student who told the hippie the press has given nuclear reactors a bad name.

"That's good," he said.

"We were born under the shroud of the mushroom cloud. But there is much more."

Back to the threat of nuclear war. "An accidental launch is a dicey proposition, perhaps more so now that the attention is away from the superpowers," Alden Williams, professor of political science, said.

He is somewhat surprised by the question, the interest.

"The chances of the main scenario, that of an East-West, Soviet-American exchange, are not zero, but much of the apparatus has either been dismantled or discredited since the Soviet Union has broken apart."

FDA imposes tougher labeling rules on contraceptive manufacturers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Food and Drug Administration imposed tough labeling rules on contraceptive manufacturers Thursday, forcing them to spell out a product's inability to prevent sexually transmitted diseases.

The FDA strengthened its regulations as part of a campaign to educate the public, because, it said, high-risk sexual behavior is still prevalent, particularly among adolescents and young adults.

One in four Americans gets a sexually transmitted disease at some time in their life, and there are 12 million new cases a year, according to one recent study. In all, some 56 million Americans are estimated to have diseases spread through sexual contact.

Besides AIDS, those diseases include chlamydia, genital herpes, genital warts, gonorrhea, hepatitis B and syphilis.

Dr. Ruth Merkatz, FDA's special assistant for women's health, said the new labels were needed because there is a great deal of confusion out there about what types of birth control protect against infection.

For instance, Merkatz said one young AIDS victim in San Francisco expressed confusion about how she'd gotten AIDS because she'd always taken birth control pills.

The new FDA rules require some contraceptives to state on the package that the products are intended to prevent pregnancy and do not protect against HIV infection — the virus that causes AIDS — and other diseases. That labeling will apply to oral contraceptives, implants such as Norplant, injectable contraceptives such as Depo Provera, natural skin condoms and intrauterine devices.

On oral contraceptives, for instance, the warning will say:

"This product (like all oral contraceptives) is intended to prevent pregnancy. It does not protect against transmission of HIV infection (AIDS) and other sexually transmitted diseases."

The other warnings are almost identical, but natural skin condoms also will have to tell consumers that to help reduce the risk of sexually transmitted diseases they should use a latex condom.

Manufacturers of latex condoms, the only product now allowed to claim effectiveness against disease, will have to state on each individual condom wrapper that the product can help protect consumers if used properly.

What is he expecting to get as a free party favor anyway?

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I read your column faithfully and enjoy your humorous and witty advice. I don't have a real complicated problem, more of a social question.

I have this party coming up, and I want to ask this guy I work with. I'm pretty sure he would like to go because when I was talking about the party to one of my friends at work, he instantly took an interest.

Although we've never gone on a date, he seems serious about things. For instance, he borrowed my coat on a chilly evening, and he's even gone as far as (jokingly) saying we could get lavaliered, but there's a big problem — he's not greek.

Then, he began to ramble on about if the party involved receiving free party favors, and if that's all he's concerned about, I'd be disappointed.

What should I do? I'm kind of a shy person, making it harder for me to ask him even though he has accepted to go. Of course, I have yet to invite him. He seems like a great guy who has a great voice, and I'd really like to ask him to go and get to know him better.

If he would go with me, should I wait until after the party to give him his ever-so-anticipated free favor? If you were a guy, what would your reply be?

No Free Favors Here

DEAR FREE,

What the heck, ask him to your party — he sounds interested. If he's only in it for the party favor, he's probably a jerk. In fact, I wouldn't even buy him a party favor. Let him buy his own damn shirts.

Don't be shy about asking him — if you're friends at work, go as friends to the party. You don't want to complicate your working environment.

I don't know about this business about getting lavaliered. He sounds a bit touched in the head. I'd be careful. On second thought, you say he's not greek so he's probably OK (just kidding).

many services of K-State. College Council received allocations totaling $60,806. These allocations were divided among the colleges, including the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Graduate School.

The College of Agriculture received $5,176; the architecture and design college received $2,718, and the College of Arts and Sciences received $18,623.

The College of Business Administration received $9,035.50; education was allocated $5,629.50; engineering was allocated $9,438.50; human ecology received $3,863.50; the Graduate School received $5,829, and the College of Veterinary Medicine received $1,252.50.

In new business, a bill that will reallocate money of the Student Activity Fee for academic competition teams was passed.

This fee will adjust the current student activity fee to include the academic competition teams, ensuring their continued participation on a national level.

Also passed in new business was a resolution commending the K-State Debate Team members on their outstanding achievement as National Debate Champions.

In first readings, a bill that would cut the line-item fee for Associated Students of Kansas to zero was introduced.

The bill, to be voted on next week, would result in K-State withdrawing from ASK if approved.

Also, in first readings, a bill addressing freedom of speech in Senate was proposed.

If passed, this bill would amend the Senate By-Laws to state the contents of a motion or speech shall not be regulated.

Another bill in first readings concerned the student health insurance plan.

This bill would approve the Monumental Life Insurance Company as the health insurance policy for the 1993-94 academic year.

If passed, the annual rates for students will be $876; for student and spouse, $2,080; for student and child(ren), $2,024, and for family, $2,880.

A bill that would give a special allocation of $100 to the Amateur Radio Club that, if passed, will fund the purchase of technical books, was held over for action next week.

Nuclear threat in modern times

The supposition, however, that there is no threat of wholesale nuclear catastrophe, or even a small-scale launch, is a bad one.

"Proliferation is still a fact of the modern world," he said.

"I guess in a nutshell that it is an easy assumption that it's all over. Now that Clinton and Yeltsin are good buddies, the threat is over. One thing that hasn't changed is the perception that nuclear weapons are useful for political gain. We still haven't resolved that issue."

The plains of Kansas are now void of warheads. We have a reactor on campus for educational purposes. We have empty silos. We have one nuclear reactor humming away in the southeast.

Those old rumors about unsafe nuclear reactors are somewhat untrue. Those old fears of nuclear war are somewhat vanquished.

So what does it mean? It means we are able to sleep easier in heated homes. It means little brothers and sisters and children will not grow up as we did, eyes glued to the television, awed by the simulacra of nuclear devastation. They will not talk on jungle gyms of the flash and then the sound and the heat searing skin from the flesh and the atomic winds blowing houses from their foundations.

It means we grew up with fears unfounded. The threat is neither zero, nor an absolute attestation. Maybe some day a reactor may melt down. Maybe not. Maybe someone will lob a missile our way. Maybe not. The mushroom shadows are gone, leaving a restive quiet.

Clinton introduces blueprint for nation

Budget of $1.52 trillion promises to slash military spending, boost economy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton unveiled his $1.52-trillion budget on Thursday, a blueprint for 1994 that boosts taxes on the rich and slashes military spending to break the government's deficit-spending habit.

The budget, thick as a fist, fleshes out the skeleton plan that the new president released in February. The biggest change is that the amount of deficit reduction — $447 billion in five years — is slightly lower than what Clinton initially announced.

Clinton's budget projects spending $1.52 trillion for the fiscal year that begins Oct. 1. That increase — 3.2 percent over current spending — essentially keeps pace with inflation.

Before he left office, President Bush put forward a document assuming the same amount of spending for next year. But he was prepared to seek fewer defense cuts, tax increases and spending boosts than Clinton proposed.

Clinton's economic battle plan hews closely to the philosophy he campaigned on last year: more money for low-income students and other initiatives to bolster the economy and create jobs, and an attack on federal red ink led by higher taxes on the rich, energy users and higher income Social Security recipients. These changes would still have to be enacted in legislation.

"The plan flows from the demand of the American people for change and my vision of what America can be if we embark upon an economic strategy of investing in people and putting people first," Clinton wrote to Congress.

"Achieving this change will not be easy, but the cost of not changing is far greater."

Republicans scoffed that in fact, Clinton was merely bowing to Democratic Party dogma.

"It's pretty much what they promised — more taxes, more spending," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan.

"Far from being bold or bringing real change to government that Americans voted for, this budget is nothing more than a return to the failed policies of the past — higher taxes on everyone, more federal spending and bigger government," said Rep. John Kasich of Ohio, ranking Republican on the House Budget Committee.

With record speed, majority Democrats have already whipped a deficit-reduction outline through Congress. It closely tracks Clinton's thinking. Over five years, it would cut deficit spending by $67 billion more than the president proposed.

Combined, the two plans would produce $514 billion in budget cuts by 1998, exceeding the nearly $500 billion that the 1990 budget summit planned over five years.

The $447 billion in reductions Clinton proposed relies on $296 billion in tax increases, one of the biggest revenue boosts in history; $108 billion in defense and domestic program cuts, and $43 billion in lowered interest payments on the national debt.

To save money, the military would reduce its active force of nearly 2 million troops by 108,000. Cuts would be made in support payments to farmers, law-enforcement grants to local governments, NASA's efforts to fly to Mars and Medicare payments to doctors and hospitals.

Candidates outline issues, speak on ideas in Moore Hall

RHONDA WILSON

Collegian

They keep going and going and going. ... Last night, four of the student body presidential candidates spoke to students on the fourth floor of Moore Hall.

Joe Weisenberger, junior in psychology, invited all of the presidential candidates to speak before and after the Moore Hall Governing Board meeting.

Doug Schwenk, senior in physics and pre-medicine, briefly outlined his campaign platform.

Schwenk said his campaign focuses on accountability. He said some of his goals are mandatory faculty evaluations, incorporation of Student Governing Association and student votes on any proposed fee increases.

Schwenk's running mate, Michelle Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering, spoke about their team's strengths.

She said Schwenk's business experience will be an important base for developing relations with Manhattan.

Munson also said her experiences in SGA and other university organizations will be an asset to their campaign ticket.

The second candidate to speak was Fred Wingert, junior in business administration.

Wingert said two of the issues he is concerned with are the book buy-back process in the K-State Union and jobs for K-State Students.

Because faculty turn in their lists of required texts late, students do not get a fair repurchase price, Wingert said. He said he wants to be a facilitator between faculty and the Union to help alleviate this problem.

Jeff Peterson, junior in animal science and industry and Wingert's running mate, arrived late. Peterson introduced himself and also said he would be available for questions later.

The next candidate, Ed Skoog, senior in English, said he wanted to make sure student fees were based on a "producer-consumer" basis.

He said students are not getting anything in return for the $17 they pay for the athletic fee; therefore, he is proposing free tickets for athletic events. He also spoke about the student fees paid to the Union.

"The Union fee is $27, and we can't smoke or drink in it," Skoog said. "We're lucky they let us dance."

Skoog's running mate, Eric Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said he and Skoog were serious about SGA even though they have been seen playing the guitar and making off the wall comments.

Henry also said students should not only vote in Tuesday's election, but they should take a friend with them.

Finally, Marc Scarbrough, senior in electrical engineering, told the audience about two issues that concerned the Mader/Scarbrough team.

He said alleviating the parking problem and increasing the marketability of K-State are some of their goals.

"Companies can't afford to come to K-State anymore," Scarbrough said. "We have to take the K-State names to more companies in a cost-effective way."

Forum participation encouraged

LAURA HEIDE

Collegian

Classes are not canceled today.

However, students, faculty and staff are encouraged to participate in a forum today from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in the Union Courtyard.

The forum concerns the impending Rodney King verdict and will discuss conditions regarding diversity at K-State. K-State President Jon Wefald and other administrators will attend.

The request made by Student Senate to cancel classes was denied by Wefald, so that instructors who prefer to have class may do so.

"This strategy is a more positive one. We are not forcing people to go to the forum but are encouraging the University community to come," Wefald said. "If they happen to have a class that they cannot cancel, we ask them to spend a few minutes in the class discussing the whole diversity issue."

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, will preside over the forum from the main floor of the courtyard.

Microphones will be placed on all three levels of the courtyard for comments.

After the forum, people may break up into smaller groups to continue discussion throughout the afternoon.

"We need to allow students to express their emotion and rage, and to do so in ways that are productive," Franklin said.

"I think we can be an institution to model for other institutions on how to get through this process of allowing people to come together as people."

Wefald said today's forum will provide an opportunity to openly discuss concerns and expectations regarding diversity at K-State, including a recommendation to establish a diversity overlay requirement within the academic curriculum.

"Students from some of the smaller Kansas communities don't have an opportunity to meet and get to know people who are different from them. The diversity overlay requirement would give them this experience," Wefald said.

"It would lead to more understanding between people of different racial and ethnic backgrounds. If we had this kind of discussion in the classroom, there wouldn't be a need for forums like this," he added.

"We need to allow students to express their emotion in ways that are productive."

► FORENSICS TEAM PLACES THIRD IN NATIONAL TOURNEY

The K-State forensics team brought home a third-place national finish late Sunday night.

Dinner, fashion show highlight night's activities

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

The national crowd outnumbered the international crowd at International Night '93, Saturday at Manhattan City Auditorium.

"A lot of planning went into this year's celebration. We have been planning since the semester began," said Motaz Hourani, graduate student in business administration and president of International Coordinating Council.

"It seems like we'll probably do it again," Hourani said.

The night began with dinner — international style.

Dishes from different countries lined the tables, including Chapche from Korea, made of noodles mixed with an assortment of vegetables and spices. Also served were dumplings, a Chinese specialty made of Chinese cabbage and soy sauce wrapped in a flour dough.

The Bangladesh fare, Chicken Biriani, was made of chicken, rice, milk, yogurt and spices. There was Kentucky Fried Chicken-style chicken from Japan, and Yougali made of cornmeal mixed with salt and butter then boiled, from Kenya.

Some people waited an hour before they could be served.

"We planned for like 300 people, but I'm afraid we have more like 400," Hourani said.

Participants could taste the distinct differences in the dishes.

"You can identify the different foods from the various countries," Siddharth Turakhia, junior in mathematics, said. "This helps people to know the foods."

After feasting at the international table, the audience was treated to an international fashion show featuring various countries represented at K-

State.

The audience applauded loudly for most of the fashions displayed. Background music from the countries participating was played as the models walked onto the stage.

Some fashions included Oipao, a traditional Chinese garment made from gray silk with plum blossoms and chrysanthemum, symbolizing gracefulness.

Police department discusses racial problems

REGGIE BLACKWELL

Collegian

K-State faculty and students met Friday in the K-State Union to discuss police brutality and racial discrimination with the Riley County Police Department.

Pat Bosco, vice president of institutional advancement, organized the forum because of concerns many students had about RCPD.

"The concerns mainly stemmed from the March 7 incident in the K-State Union where individuals were fighting at a fraternity party," Bosco said.

The forum was organized in question and answer format, directed toward RCPD. Bosco served as mediator.

Alvin Johnson, director of RCPD, said he wanted to have the forum so he could clear up any misconceptions people may have about RCPD.

Eric Bailey, senior in criminal justice, said he agreed the forum was necessary.

"There was a definite need for faculty and students to get together and discuss problems with the department," Bailey said.

He said he feels the department looks at black people differently than others, particularly large men. Bailey said he thinks RCPD feels threatened by them, so they use extra force.

Michael Quintanar, a sergeant at RCPD, said when officers arrive at a scene they don't know what to expect. He said they may overreact sometimes, but their goal is to de-escalate the problem.

Kristi Dixon, senior in elementary education, said she did not agree with Quintanar because of what happened to her during the March 7 incident.

She said she was struck by an officer with his stick for no apparent reason. She was hit as the officers were trying to disperse the crowd, she said.

Dixon said she was not involved in the dispute.

Johnson said, "If that took place

Card use extends to vending services

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

Students who have a Wildcat Card account can purchase snacks and drinks from vending machines in four buildings across campus, a service that began during spring break.

"It is a test to see whether it is a service our vending customers will use," said Bill Wisdom, vending services manager at the K-State Union.

Bluemont Hall, Ackert Hall, Eisenhower Hall and Cardwell Hall are the test buildings.

Sixteen vending machines will eventually be set up to accommodate the cards. They are hooked up by telephone lines to the main Wildcat Card computer.

When a customer sweeps a Wildcat Card through an equipped vending machine, the amount of the largest priced item appears on the display. The customer then makes a selection, and the display shows the amount of purchase followed by the customer's remaining balance.

"If we have success with this, we will try to expand it a little bit at a time. We won't be able to do the whole campus immediately," Wisdom said.

A Wildcat Card account can be set up on a student's identification card. The normal minimum amount to open an account is $5. Once the account is opened, there is no minimum for additional deposits.

A Wildcat Card can be used everywhere in the Union and for cash operations in housing and dining services. It can be used at the convenience store in Van Zile Hall and at the bakery in Derby Complex.

Vending services has been doing a promotion since the service was added.

"If someone opens a new account with a minimum of $25 or adds a minimum of $25 to an existing account and tells the Wildcat Card office that Bill sent them, we will give them a free T-shirt," said Michael Hatch, computer and electronics coordinator for the Union.

Not all the machines at the four locations are set up for this service. "A lot of schools that have put it into play have experienced a real success with it," Wisdom said.

Every student enrolled at K-State is already in the system since the upgrade last fall. Right now all students are in the Validine ID system because access is checked at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

In Thursday's Collegian there was an article written about my Campaign for Student Body President. In that article, I talked about a plan to make a disk with the resumes of K-State graduates which would be sent to prospective employers.

After reading about Tracy Mader and Mark Seabrook's plan in the Collegian, I thought my idea was significantly different. I have spoken with Tracy and Mark and have come to realize that we are proposing basically the same plan.

I have no intentions of passing their ideas off as my own, and I would like to publicly apologize for any misunderstanding that occurred.

Elections a first for Union Board

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

For almost 40 years, the Union Governing Board has selected and appointed its 11 student members.

This will change Tuesday when the UGB has its first open election.

Student Senate recommended the change as part of the Union fee-increase bill last year. For the $5 Union fee increase to pass, UGB had to make the change to open elections, Jack Sills, UGB director said.

"The board is made up of 18 positions, with four of those being non-voting members," Sills said.

Of the 14 voting members, 11 are students. Three are appointed by Senate, Union Programming Council and the Alumni Association. The remaining eight positions will be elected individuals.

Two of the positions will be carry-over terms of students serving a two-year position, Sills said.

Therefore, 11 candidates are competing for six spots on the UGB.

"The Union Governing Board is simply a policy-making body for the entire Union," he said. "We meet once a month to discuss issues regarding all Union policies."

An open period for outside comments has been part of each UGB meeting. Students can come and voice their opinions during this time and are encouraged to do so, Sills said.

"Our job is to provide the best service we can to the University. We have to look at different ideas and decide if they need to be looked at," he said.

In some ways, the entire campus wasn't informed about the student positions on the board. These open elections give UGB some recognition that it didn't have before, Brad Brenneman, senior in accounting and UGB president, said.

"Our biggest issue right now is getting student feedback. Everyone here is dedicated to serving the student, but it is hard without feedback and input," he said.

When asked about the possible addition of an outside vendor in the Union, Brenneman said it had been discussed.

"There isn't enough student feedback. So, we don't know if it is something really important to the students or not," Brenneman said.

The open elections will encourage a wider range of individuals to apply for positions and should benefit everyone involved, Brenneman said.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. What is financial aid?

A. Financial aid is money available to you and your family to help pay for educational expenses. Its purpose is to supplement, not replace, the amount you and your family pay to meet your total educational expenses.

Q. How do I know what my "need" figure will be? What does my EFC mean?

A. The Federal Government calculates your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) by using a formula established by Congress. Your EFC is based on the information you entered on your Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Your EFC will be the same no matter where you attend college because the same formula is used by all schools throughout the nation. After K-State determines the total cost of education or budget for you, the EFC is subtracted from this amount and the result is your "need" figure. For example:

COST OF EDUCATION	$8000
MINUS EFC	-2000
= FINANCIAL NEED	$6000

If the cost of education is $8000 and your EFC is $2000, you will be eligible for $6000 in need-based financial aid. Your financial need would be met with a financial aid package that combines federal grants, loans, work-study, or K-State scholarships.

Q. What is the difference between grants and loans?

A. • Federal grants, available to students who meet financial need requirements, are funds that do not have to be repaid.
• Federal loans let you borrow money for college at low interest rates. Loans are paid back after you finish college.
• K-State scholarships are awards for students who excel in academic areas, activities, or sports or who have financial "need." They do not have to be repaid.
• Federal work-study jobs give you spending money and work experience. This need-based award allows you to work 10-20 hours per week.

Q. If I didn't qualify for financial aid last year, should I still apply?

A. YES! Even though the priority deadline of March 15th is past, you should still apply for financial assistance. Congress has changed the needs analysis formula, and this will make some students eligible for 1993-94 that were ineligible for 1992-93. Some important changes are as follow:

- The limits of adjusted gross income that a family can earn have increased.
- Home asset values are no longer reported or considered in the formula.
- Farm assets are no longer reported or considered in the formula if the family resides on the farm.
- If the parents and student file either a 1040EZ or 1040A and the parents' adjusted gross income is under $50,000, ALL assets are excluded from the formula for both parents and student.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Now, it's all up to you

THE ISSUE

The K-State administration did a good job encouraging people to attend today's forum without resorting to canceling classes.

Kudos to Student Senate and K-State President Jon Wefald.

In completely unscheduled action last Thursday, Senate passed a resolution by unanimous consent encouraging Wefald to cancel classes after 11:30 a.m. today.

The reason was simple — to allow students to attend a forum focusing on the Rodney King trial and multicultural issues on the K-State campus at 11:30 a.m. to 1p.m. today in the K-State Union courtyard.

Wefald did not cancel classes.

Instead, he sent a message encouraging professors to cancel classes, believing that was the more positive way of doing things.

Wefald also encouraged campus offices to get by with the fewest people available so those workers could attend the forum.

Finally, to those who can't or won't cancel classes, Wefald encouraged taking a few minutes out of class to talk about diversity.

That, folks, is the way it needed to be done.

You now have a choice. You can go to class. You can sit at home and watch reruns of Gilligan's Island.

Or you can come and listen to what K-State is doing right and wrong as we all struggle to achieve a peaceful coexistence.

Senate and Wefald have done their part. They encouraged you to attend, even made it easy for you to attend.

Now, the potential for blame or credit rests squarely on your shoulders.

HEALTH

Lafene serves yet another happy patient

Editor,

A few weeks ago I slipped and fell on the ice, resulting in a "hard crack" to my head. I spent approximately two hours at Lafene Health Center receiving some of the most thorough and timely care I've ever received in any doctor's office.

I want to thank Dr. Neuhaus and the fine nurses, x-ray technicians and anyone else who helped me. I especially want to thank the member who came to the Farrell Library parking lot and helped me to Lafene.

I believe we have very dedicated and qualified medical personnel at Lafene, and they deserve credit for a job well done. Thank you.

Homecoming should involve everyone

Editor,

As a concerned student at this university and someone who believes he has a voice in the matters that affect the people here, I feel something needs to be said about Homecoming and the activities that surround this event.

Homecoming is something K-State has enjoyed on its campus for many years. The University's population has been on a constant rise since it was founded, and today, with a current enrollment of about 20,000 students, it gets more and more difficult to have activities that involve the entire student body. The greek system here at K-State has grown right along with its population. This could be part of the reason for the non-involvement in campus activities.

Homecoming is another event the greek system has somewhat "taken over" in the past, and it seems only to be getting worse. The greeks have made Homecoming out to be one big party, and the other students who aren't greek aren't invited.

After all, the greeks make up only 33 percent of the population on this campus; so what is the problem? Some would say it is the other 67 percent who choose not to get involved — I say they are wrong. As a member of the greek community myself and a participant in the Homecoming activities for years, I see that most people who try to get involved walk away discouraged.

This is not a letter of complaint but one to bring this problem to the attention of those who may be interested.

I feel greek sponsored activities for Homecoming would not only help Homecoming, but would cut through some of the animosity created by the separation that has already been established. This could be a great opportunity for the greek system to show their K-State spirit and the positive influence they can have on this campus.

Homecoming is for the University and is one event that should truly involve all who attend K-State.

RECOGNITION

Article faithfully told story of ceremony

Editor,

I would like to thank Michelle Haupt, reporter, and J. Kyle Wyatt, photographer, of the Collegian for their interesting and thought-provoking coverage of the Classified Senate Awards Ceremony on April 7.

Your articles were accurate and tastefully written, and the photos were perfect. This ceremony means a lot to the classified workers at K-State, who number approximately 2,270. I hope that all the K-State-affiliated offices will someday allow their employees to attend this pride-generating ceremony.

Congratulations to all classified employees at K-State. Winner Viola Bess said it best — "We are all winners."

RESPONSE

Sign doesn't answer all the questions

Editor,

This letter is in reference to the sign hanging from the trees by Lafene Health Center.

It is obvious that this sign is from the so-called "Students for Life." Let me make a slight addition to that sign by asking a simple question — How many times in recent history, including the slave auctions, Nazi Germany and, now, Bosnia, have women been used as breeding machines?

Think about that when you are accusing someone of redefining "human."

Easter

Funny thing. When I woke up this morning it was Easter. Which is odd because of all the days to wake up hungover, all of the other three hundred and sixty five days, Easter is second only to Christmas on the Bright And Cheery Index, the kinds of days on which you're expected to shine not tarnish.

I went down to the river Easter morning and ate fresh apricots. I threw the pits in the river. The river is flooding, and my apricot pit boats were sucked under. They never had a chance.

J.A.K.
GLADNEY

As a little girl I remember my mother, bless and rest her soul, dressing me up in pastels. Easter is a time for pastels and lace, not lace the way we see it nowadays, as a subterfuge that partially covers up a nation of nipples, but lace as an accoutrement to little girls' dresses and also looking lovely with place settings and the good silver, the good china. I remember her bending over and adjusting my shoulder-pads and saying things about how nice I looked and how a little girl didn't have to go around looking grungy all the time. And then to church.

All of the women of the world should start a country. Either by taking one over, one of the ones with Mediterranean climate and running water and movie theaters, or by declaring wherever we go to be a separate state. Which it is in a way. But we don't have guns. Satan, solus, in Paradise Lost: I myself am hell.

Church was always a very modern affair. After the old one burnt down after some of us kids were playing with matches in the piano room, they built a tall one with wide open spaces inside. The hallway to the auditorium and basketball court was like a school hallway, complete with signs on the walls, but these signs always included the whole religious angle. Same message, though. See these cute bunnies? See this orangutan who says Sometimes I sits and thinks and sometimes I just sits? Aren't they docile? You should not misbehave. There is a higher order than the principal.

Last Easter I was hungover also. A wild night of wine, sex and pills preceded. In our odd positions on the sun-room couch, we watched the sunrise. The Hitchhiker's Field Manual, the "complete guide to hassle-free thumb-tripping in North America," says you hear different things about Kansas. Kansas is neither as bad nor as good as it is cracked up to be. You still can't find a good AM radio station (1973) and programs are constantly being interrupted for hog price quotations. It's not quite hilly, but it does have a certain tilt. And Kansas air is clean and Kansas farm girls pretty. Kansas is all right.

Around Wichita and Kansas City, long-haired hitchhikers are looking for trouble. A particularly rough spot is Junction City and the whole of Geary County, where ten-day jail sentences for thumbing rides are not uncommon. I dance at a bar in Junction City. It's very progressive. You just take off your clothes and stand naked on a table and the men give you money. Then you put your vines back on, sit down, and finish your drink. One Kansan suggested avoiding Kansas completely when heading west-east by hitching from the intersection of I-40, 71, and 70 just past Limon, Colorado. Names and numbers: Hays has Kan. St. U. with 4,300 students. It also has the House of Hidden Manna Ph. 628-4832 ... 5th and Main ... Jesus people. Manhattan has Kan. St. U. of Agriculture and Applied Science ... 10,000 students.

Every forsythia is in bloom. Your videotapes are due.

FOUND SCRAWLED ON A SHOWER WALL

HAWKS

We live in a culture of compulsive cleanliness. Everyone seeks always to be clean. I found that I was out of soap last week. No soap.

I meant to get some — I don't like not having soap. But laziness set in — victime de la paresse — and heck, people can live for a week without soap, I thought.

Primates are dirty animals. The chimps, shatting on themselves and those around them, Mangabeys, baboons, slender lorises (Is the mangabey a primate? I don't remember.) get cleaned only when it rains on them, or if they jump in some puddle. That is, I don't think there are studies to support monkey bathing, excepting that one species in Japan, the macaque: Hot springs, you know.

I like my showers hot. Cold is no good. I avoid showering with cold water, though I have found that if I must I will. Steamy water is sensual, it makes you feel good. It opens your pores, you feel nice there inside the womb, and you forget.

Children don't like to take baths or showers. They don't even like to wash their hands. You have to force them, their inclinations would follow their wild cousins, and be dirty.

Innocents, they don't acknowledge the dirt that covers us all, though it is true that children do not smell as bad as adults. It's funny that way: kids who get into everything, still clean after a week.

I thought once that if I were on the street, without anything — no money, no home, no nothing, not even a P. O. box — that I could make a new start, a new life, with a long shower. Then I would be clean, and I could walk into any place and everyone would be my equal. I knew, some people don't have the talent I do, a social skill, dissemblance, being part of a comfortable whole. For comfort, cleanliness is all, the rest is acting. The thing I didn't know then, was how much guilt we put on those who are not clean. They know some sins cannot be washed away. When you sleep in a gutter, others' dirt, the flux of others' lives runs onto you. And they will not let you wash it off. You can never be clean, like them, and free, for you, dirty one, are their soap.

Adolescents smell a bit worse than kids, after a week without a bath. By then, they realize what bathing means. They seek what we all seek — acceptance. And they're vain. Too often overclean, over-make-up-ed, overdone. They don't know juste milieu, how to be inconspicuous.

However, they learn, in time, how to smell just perfect so that they have no smell at all. They clean in the end to feel good, not for others.

And so I needed soap. I tried to wash with my shampoo. It didn't work. I tried not washing, only rinse, and hated it. So I went in quest of soap.

I've seen the ads from corporations fueling our neuroses. They may give what they promise, a feeling, but through Coast we'll never open our eyes, we only delude ourselves with cleanliness. It is the delusion that we pay for. And we pay dearly. I compared the brands just out of curiosity, and found a curious fact:

All soaps are made by three big companies. Our judges, three white men in three black suits. These are the arbiters of cleanliness. For the small price they make us more than apes. Humanity in a three-by-five inch box. They deal in dirt by freeing us of it. Building the fountains where the street people bathe, and, I wonder, without the dirt they see, Proof in commercial willingness to buy, What sins are there for us to wash away?

WORLD NEWS

►Assassination leads to violence

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — Two whites were burned to death by a black crowd and a third had part of his tongue cut out despite appeals for calm Sunday, a day after the assassination of a popular African National Congress official.

The ANC, meanwhile, accused security officials of ignoring requests for special protection for the slain activist, Chris Hani.

But the ANC said his killing would not derail negotiations with the government on ending apartheid. A white man was arrested in Hani's killing.

ANC President Nelson Mandela and South African President F.W. de Klerk appealed for calm in televised addresses, but at least two attacks occurred Sunday.

The ANC accused police of firing on a small memorial service for Hani in the black township of Soweto near Johannesburg, killing one black.

Wand latest device to invade the 'Ville

Metal detector added in attempt to improve security

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

Snookie's Bar has a new addition. A metal-detector wand used to search patrons for metal objects has been added to the Aggieville club.

"The wand was brought in as a precaution," Ken Snook, owner of Snookie's, said.

Snook said rumors someone had a gun in the bar made the precaution necessary.

"Nobody was actually seen with weapons in the bar," Snook said.

Doug Smith, doorman at Snookie's, said there were other reasons to start using a detector.

"There have been numerous beer cans and alcohol bottles found in the bathrooms or distributed in the club that were brought in from outside," he said.

The wand is about 16 inches long and is waved over a person. If there is any metal object present, the wand beeps. It is similar to metal detectors in airports.

If it beeps, the person entering the bar is asked to remove whatever is in his or her pocket or elsewhere on himself or herself, Smith said.

If they refuse to do so, they will be asked to leave, he said.

"I don't force them to take whatever it is out on the spot. They can put it away in their car or take it out, but they're not coming into the club with it," Smith said.

There has only been one complaint about using the detector in the three weeks that Snookie's has used the wand, he said.

Several items can make the wand beep.

"The wand beeped when the doorman went over my hat," Jeannie Arnold, patron of Snookie's, said laughingly. "I looked at him and said, 'Yes, I have a weapon hidden in my hat.' In all actuality, it was the metal on my hat band."

Even with one complaint and the extra time it takes patrons to enter the bar, Snook says the wand is there to stay.

"There's a lot of violence picked up in the Aggieville area, and a lot of clubs are starting to use the metal detector," Snook said.

"I don't force them to take whatever it is out on the spot. They can put it away in their car or take it out, but they're not coming into the club with it."

CDs to have new jewel packaging

Ecological reason most important for change, economic concerns also

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

The next time you go to buy a new compact disc, you might be buying a jewel.

Since April 1, numerous record companies have switched the production of CD cases to a new form of packaging called the jewel case.

"The most important reason for the change is an ecological reason. The cardboard paper used in the old casing is very wasteful," said John Udell, in-house marketing representative for Warner Bros., Atlantic Records and Electric Records.

This was not the only reason for the ousting of the cardboard packages.

The 6-by-12-inch paper used for the older CDs was also very costly, Udell said.

Even though most new releases are coming out in the new jewel cases, it will still take a while for CDs with the old cases to be changed.

"By the first of August, all of the long cardboard cases should be history," said Chris Ilein, assistant manager of Streetside Records.

Ilein said other countries have never had the cardboard casing.

"In Europe and in Japan, they've never had the long cases," Ilein said.

"The reason why I feel that America had never changed in the past is because they are so used to the album art on the cover. People liked to buy the album and be able to look at the group or art. Now they'll buy the CDs with just the clear plastic wrapping."

Udell also said he feels that many people will miss the art on the boxes.

"There are nearly hundreds and thousands of people that will miss the 12-inch CD cover. But then again, it is more ecologically sound to move into the '90s by saving the cardboard and in return saving trees," he said.

The itself change was brought on by the National Association of Retail Merchants.

"NARM got together with different labels and artists such as Sting and Peter Gabriel and came up with this new idea of the jewel cases," Ilein said.

Though the official switch was on April 1, many new releases already bear the new jewel case design.

Jason Schafer-Valerius, assistant manager of Musicland, said he already has received many new releases with the jewel case.

"Since we've gotten the CDs with the jewel cases, we have been putting our own security system in them to prevent theft," he said.

Because of the new casing, Musicland will just have to sell down to what boxes they have left.

"I think it's a great idea. It should have been done a long time ago," Schafer-Valerius said.

Baseball Cats sweep Huskers

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

When it rains, it pours. And though there was no rain for the K-State baseball team this weekend, the runs flooded in for the Cats as they swept Nebraska in a three-game stand at Frank Myers Field.

The Cats got the third win Sunday as pitcher Rob Merriman held Nebraska (12-15, 2-6) to three runs over nine innings, winning 6-3.

Both teams pounded on each other's pitchers, but K-State came away with 14-10 and 19-10 victories Friday and Saturday, respectively.

The three victories give K-State an 11-17 mark, 4-4 in the Big Eight and its first sweep at home against a Big Eight opponent since taking four games from Oklahoma in 1990.

"What a nice weekend," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "For all of the frustrations and all of the stuff we had gone through, I thought we competed well. In all three games, we got after it offensively and made some good defensive plays and, for the most part, we made pitches when we had to."

"I'm real pleased with what we had to do, to play three good ballgames and put ourselves into a position to win all three," he said. "The frosting on the cake was winning them. I was just happy for the way we competed."

But yesterday, the Cats started out slowly. "We kept knocking on the door, and finally we had a couple of base hits," Clark said. "I'm just real pleased with the way we are playing. Hopefully, we'll continue the way we're playing."

With K-State trailing 0-2 in the fifth inning, the Cats tied the game when Dave Hendrix and Hess, who went 3-for-4, had back-to-back singles off Cornhusker starter Steve Boyd (0-3) to bring in Todd Petering and Tim Decker.

Nebraska regained the lead with one run in the seventh. Decker tied the game again for the Cats as he hit his second home run of the season over the right field fence to make it a 3-3 tie.

In the same inning, Jay Kopriva singled in Brian Culp, and Jamey Stellino broke the game open with a two-run double down the right field line, scoring Hess and Brian Morrow.

"After our second at-bat, we said we would pinch-hit him (Stellino) in an RBI situation if we were behind in the ballgame," Clark said. "He did a great job. He pulled the ball. He did what he had to do."

Clark said Merriman (2-3) did a good job on the mound.

"He mixed his pitches a lot better," he said of Merriman's second complete game of the season. "He had to rely on his fastball and changeup, but he didn't have his breaking pitch. He had a quality effort with only one earned run."

Merriman said he was happy with his performance.

"It was the first time in a couple of weeks that I felt good," Merriman said.

"I came out and had good command of my breaking stuff. Brian (Culp) did a nice job calling pitches. We mixed it up pretty well."

Netters fall to OSU for 1st Big 8 letdown

But K-State can avenge 9-0 loss today against OU

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Fresh off a loss Sunday to Oklahoma State, the K-State tennis team will try to get back on track today when they are host to Oklahoma.

The match will be at 2 p.m. on the L.P. Washburn Courts at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"Oklahoma's a very good team again this year," Wildcat coach Steve Bietau said. "We'll have to come to play."

K-State fell 9-0 yesterday in their duel with Oklahoma State in Manhattan.

"We expected to have a tough match," Bietau said. "Everyone played real well, but O-State is a pretty good team."

"I wasn't disappointed, but we just weren't able to step up against them."

The loss dropped the Wildcats to 6-10, 3-1 in conference play, while Oklahoma State improved to 11-5 overall and 2-1 in the Big Eight.

K-State fell a half-game behind first-place Kansas in the conference standings.

"I'm pleased with our record," Bietau said. "But there are still things we need to improve on. Our consistency is one of them."

Eight of the nine matches against Oklahoma State ended after two sets. No. 4 Lindy Neethling was the only Wildcat to extend her match to the third set, losing to Carolina Hadad 6-7 (7-4), 6-1, 6-2.

"In almost every match we played well," Bietau said. "But we just weren't able to sustain it."

The Sooners come to Manhattan with a 12-4 record, 2-0 in the Big Eight. Oklahoma is led by Australian Nicole Kenneally, who has a 15-9 record in the No. 1 singles position.

The Wildcats will continue their home stand Thursday with a duel against 12-6 Kansas.

The Jayhawks defeated Oklahoma State on Saturday afternoon.

"This is definitely the toughest part of our schedule," Bietau said. "But we're reasonably healthy. We need to keep working on our mental consistency."

Amelia Van Der Merwe, who plays No. 3 singles for the Wildcats, said the best thing for the team to do is put Sunday's shutout loss behind them.

"We lost, and there's nothing we can do about it," Van Der Merwe said.

"But we have a new beginning against Oklahoma — it's a new match, and we need to concentrate on them."

"I think we should have a lot better chance than we did against Oklahoma State."

Hiatt sparks Royals to 1st win of season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The music blared for the first time this season in the Kansas City clubhouse, and all it took was a longball from a rookie.

Phil Hiatt hit his first major-league home run with the bases empty in the seventh inning to give the Royals their first win after five losses, 2-1 over the Minnesota Twins on Sunday.

"Look around. You can tell everybody's attitude has picked up," Hiatt said after his home run off Kevin Tapani (0-2).

"It was my first home run and my first win as a Royal," said Hiatt, who leads the team with six RBI after being called up when third baseman Keith Miller was hurt opening day.

"It was a slider," Hiatt said. "I just saw it well, and I hit it pretty good. Now we've got it all together. I just want to be more consistent. That's how ballplayers stay up here. Consistency."

Jeff Montgomery pitched two innings of perfect relief for his first save as the Royals became the last team in the majors to win.

"I'll be honest, I felt a lot of pressure out there," said Montgomery, who saved 39 games last year. "This is a real big relief. Now we can come to the ballpark comfortable. We're not coming to the ballpark thinking we have got to make ourselves win."

The Twins got just five hits off starter Hipiloto Pichardo, Tom Gordon and Montgomery. Gordon (1-0) pitched two innings of two-hit relief for the win. Gordon hasn't allowed a run in seven innings of relief this season.

Tapani gave up six hits and two runs in 7 1-3 innings.

Gene Larkin singled and scored on Terry Jorgensen's double in the first for a 1-0 Minnesota lead.

The Royals tied it in the second when Hiatt singled in Brent Mayne from second.

Curtis Wilkerson was thrown out at the plate on a ground ball to first base in the third inning, the fifth Royals runner to be out at the plate in six games.

GOLF

Wildcat women return to links

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State women's golf team will play 36 holes on the first day of competition in the Susie Maxwell Bering Classic in Norman, Okla.

The tournament is the first for the Wildcats since they won the Southwest Missouri State Invitational on March 30.

It is their last tournament of the regular season before the Big Eight Championship on April 26-27.

The 12-team tournament will be played at The Trails Golf Course, and Oklahoma is host.

The teams traveling to compete in the tournament include Wyoming, Lamar, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas Tech, New Mexico, Wichita State, Southern Methodist, Baylor and North Texas.

K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said the women have been playing well against Kansas, Nebraska and Wichita State.

"I feel they can beat them," Elliott said. "I feel it would be a good win for them."

Valerie Hahn will be K-State's top player with an average of 80.4 strokes per round.

Interim men's and women's assistant golf coach Jack Key said that, despite the shape of the golf course, the team should do well.

"Realistically, there are 11 teams. So, we should finish in the top five," Key said. "The golf course is not in good shape — the fairways are pretty thin. Valerie Hahn — if she scores well here and Big Eight, she'll qualify for regionals."

Dallas Cox will be playing in her first tournament this season. Debbie Chrystal will be playing with an average of 92.6 strokes per round.

Denise Pottle has an average of 82.6 strokes per round. Jacque Wright will be playing with an average of 84.4 strokes per round.

Wright said the tournament is an important one because of the competition.

"We have to play well to finish in the upper half," Wright said. "There's three other Big Eight schools here. So, it's pretty important. Our goal is to get five people playing and posting scores instead of just one or two."

FRESHMEN LEAD TRACKSTERS

The Wildcat track and field team was led by several freshmen Sunday afternoon to a solid showing at the John Jacobs Invitational in.

Freshman Ed Broxterman cleared a career-best height of 7-foot 3-3/4 inches to win the men's high-jump competition. The leap was good enough to make him a provisional qualifier for the national outdoor meet.

Kristen Schultz, another freshman, threw a career-best of 154'5" in the javelin to surpass the national provisional qualifying standard. She finished second.

Freshman Chris Unthank clocked a 9:19.83 in the 3,000-meter steeplechase to take first.

CHIEFS' SNOW ARRESTED

LEE'S SUMMIT, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City Chiefs linebacker Percy Snow faces a possible misdemeanor assault charge after allegedly threatening a group of golfers with a gun after his car was hit by a ball, police said.

Snow was arrested Saturday about 5:15 p.m.

after four golfers complained to police, Lee Summit Sgt. John King said. The golfers said Snow threatened them with a handgun after they went to discuss the damage with him.

In their complaint, the golfers alleged that Snow brandished a weapon and threatened to shoot them.

Walters, Bautista call for reform

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

With construction work going on in the background in Jardine's Thomas J. Frith Community Center, the Charles Walters and Ian Bautista presidential duo prepared for construction of its own for K-State.

They said they consider themselves the trendsetters when it comes to talking about the issues the students want to hear.

Walters and Bautista said they are running on a student reform agenda and believe the students need to be partners with the University.

Multiculturalism and internationalism, housing reforms, long-term financial planning and non-traditional student concerns highlight the pair's recently released pamphlet.

"We can start cultural sensitivity at the university level," Walters said.

Bautista said, "Multiculturalism doesn't mean me, because my skin is brown, or someone else who has a Spanish last name."

"We want to make them more proud about themselves and want to learn about others."

Their plans include a cultural exposure class, a campus-wide

Festival of Nations and a class for freshmen to help them find their backgrounds.

Walters said they want to make K-State a unique multicultural experience ready to meet the demands of the 21st century.

The two want to reform housing because, they said, the rates are going up, and services are going down.

The creation of a secretary of housing, breaking the mold of no students on the housing management teams, and inviting President Jon Wefald and Chuck Werring, director of housing, to spend a night in a residence hall room and one of the Jardine Terrace Apartments are part of their housing reform plans.

With long-term financing, the candidates propose that SGA construct one-, five- and 10-year fiscal management plans. They also want Student Senate to have a six-week mandatory waiting period to discuss and debate student fee increases, with two student forums.

"More than 30 percent of the K-State student body is non-traditional," Walters said. "That is one-third of the student fees."

Walters said they want to create a non-traditional student center, for information exchange and a feeling of cohesiveness.

as you explained it, then we were totally out of line."

Michelle White, assistant program counselor, said RCPD needs to develop an intense program in dealing with people of color.

Veryl Switzer, associate director of intercollegiate athletics, said he feels minorities are sometimes considered the opposition.

"We are in a community where we are the minority and that in turn labels us the enemy," Switzer said.

He said people must remove this stigma by training and awareness.

Bosco ended the forum by asking for suggestions to solve the problem.

Some ideas were establishing a community relations board, setting up a workshop involving officers, and having students and officers talk to various groups on campus.

"The Riley County Police Department has a bad name, and they need to make serious strides to change the perception," Bailey said.

Tax filers running behind this year

"The biggest selling plus for electronic filing is accuracy. The software will not accept many of the common errors in paper filing."

JAMES MANUSZAK INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE

RITA KIDD

Collegian

It's almost here. The last day to file your income tax return without a penalty is April 15.

"The overall number of returns filed nationwide is running 8 percent behind one year ago," said James Manuszak, Kansas Internal Revenue Service public-affairs officer.

This will result in a rush of returns being mailed during the last days of the filing period, Manuszak said. If a person has not filed yet, an expected refund will be delayed longer than normal because of this rush.

Electronic filing, a method to speed up the return process, is being tested in Kansas and several other states. Kansas is one of only three states in the nation where taxpayers can complete both their federal and state filing in a single transmission, Manuszak said.

"If you want to speed things up, try electronically filing your return this year," said Sharon Wurl, Wichita electronic filing coordinator.

It may take the average error-free paper tax return about eight weeks to be processed, Wurl said. Individuals who file electronically can elect to direct deposit to their bank accounts (about 10 days to two weeks) or to receive a check (about three weeks).

"The big selling plus for electronic filing is accuracy," Manuszak said. "The software will not accept many of the common errors in paper filing."

Electronic filing checks computations and eliminates human error, he said. Electronic filing of tax returns is ahead of last year.

To file your return electronically, look for an IRS accepted electronic filer. Usually there is a fee for this service, Wurl said.

"The refunds we are seeing this year are generally smaller than last year's refunds because there were changes to the withholding tables early last year," Manuszak said.

Besides the change in withholding tables, there are other reasons for people to receive smaller or no refunds this year. They may include, but are not limited to, a change in marital status, no longer itemizing deductions, or an increased income or self-employment income, he said.

"I generally tell people that while it's fun to plan how you'll spend your tax refund, don't make any legally binding transactions until you have your check in hand," Manuszak said. "With the changes to the withholding tables early last year, this suggestion is particularly pertinent this year."

"It is just good financial planning to wait to spend the money until a person receives the check," he said.

OU officials report campus crime decrease

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NORMAN, Okla. — University of Oklahoma officials said reported crime at the university's main campus dropped 23 percent in the first year of a new program that emphasizes crime prevention and student cooperation.

Joseph K. Lester, director of the OU Department of Public Safety, attributed the drop to his successful efforts in educating the university community and the assignment of one full-time officer whose sole responsibility is crime prevention.

The university reported statistics on campus crime as part of the Student Right-to-Know and Campus Security Act of 1990. Crimes designated for reporting are homicide, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, burglary and motor-vehicle theft.

From 1991 to 1992, those crimes at OU dropped 23 percent, from 140 to 108, officials said. During the same period, all crimes against people and property on the campus declined from 867 to 695.

Crimes against people and property, when combined with all other miscellaneous crimes, decreased by 7.4 percent.

The reported crimes resulted in 45 students being arrested and 175 being referred for university discipline. The department focuses its efforts on education, and arrests are made only when necessary to protect the welfare and safety of the university community, Lester said.

Residents of all-female dorm want live-in boyfriend out

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Recently, in our all-female residence hall, we have experienced a few difficulties with a male who appears to be living on our floor.

It all started last semester when some girls on our wing noticed this male coming out of his girlfriend's room with a bad case of bed hair and putting on his shoes while his girlfriend walked him to the elevator. Despite the hall's rules about overnight guests and males, no one reported it.

What people do behind closed doors is their own business, but things have gotten out of hand. This male has been seen walking around the hall unescorted and was finally caught using the girls bathroom.

Several females are very upset by this. We feel this violates our privacy. We choose to live in an all female hall, and we don't appreciate having this male live on our floor.

What do you suggest we do about this. Our resident assistant offers no help. So, who should we speak to, or what should we do?

Concerned

DEAR CONCERNED,

You should be upset. You are entitled to your privacy. As you said, you choose to live in an all-female dorm — not an all-female-and-one-chowder-head-boyfriend dorm.

Go meet with your dorm director. Maybe he or she can light a fire under your R.A.'s butt and take care of this guy.

Having a guy stay over once in a while is probably not going to cause problems, but this clown has obviously worn out his welcome. Just another case of people being inconsiderate. And, as usual, nice folks like you and I suffer.

Jury still deliberating civil rights' trial

Request for transcript rejected by judge, case to be decided on memory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Jurors reached no verdict Sunday on the police officers accused of violating Rodney King's civil rights, but they requested a transcript of testimony from one of the trial's most dramatic witnesses.

Soon after they convened on Easter, jurors asked for the testimony of California highway patrolwoman Melanie Singer, who wept on the stand when she recalled baton blows to King's head.

The request came in a note from the jury's foreman, identified only as a real estate salesman in his late 30s, who said during jury selection that an earlier jury's acquittal of the defendants on most charges was no surprise to him.

By the end of Sunday's session, jurors had deliberated some 7 1/2 hours since receiving the case late Saturday afternoon.

Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell, Theodore Briseno and former Officer Timothy Wind are charged with violating King's civil rights in a beating, which the government said was excessive.

U.S. District Judge John G. Davies said he didn't have the transcript jurors wanted, adding, "Even if I had it, I would not have sent it in because that tends to emphasize testimony."

Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven Clymer then suggested the jurors be asked if they were concerned about a particular part of the testimony. But Davies said he was reluctant to ask the jurors anything more.

Davies told jurors at the outset of testimony to rely on their memories and notes and said he would not provide them with transcripts.

Singer, the first person to approach King after chasing him for speeding, testified that King was not threatening, that he acted like a "wiseacre drunk" and that police had no justification for beating him.

At one point, she burst into tears as she described Powell smashing King in the head with a baton. A key defense contention is that King was never hit in the head but instead fractured his face in a fall.

The jury's note, the first since deliberations began, came just after 2 p.m., about two hours after Sunday's session began.

All lawyers and defendants were in the courtroom except for Briseno, who was ill, his lawyer said.

The jury received the federal civil rights case Saturday after a last round of final arguments and spent 2 1/2 hours getting started on their task.

Although the jurors have been sequestered at a hotel since Feb. 25, they knew when they were chosen that world opinion was focused on the case. All of them said they could put aside concerns about public response to their verdicts and decide the case purely on the evidence.

Acquittals on most charges in a state trial last year touched off three days of rioting in Los Angeles that left 54 people dead and $1 billion in property damage.

"I don't think anyone should be condemned because of the threat of a riot," Harland Braun, one of the defense attorneys, told the jurors in a final argument laced with religious references and comparisons of the defendants to Christ being judged by Pontius Pilate.

"If you have the courage to vote not guilty on all these defendants, the public will understand," Braun said.

But a prosecutor called the defendants "bullies with badges" and urged jurors to convict them.

To convict on civil rights violations, jurors must find that the four men intended to inflict unreasonable force on King. In the state trial last year in suburban Simi Valley, specific intent was not a requirement to convict them of assault.

In a poll published Sunday by the Los Angeles Times, 33 percent said a repeat of last spring's deadly riots was inevitable if jurors acquit the four men.

And, although 75 percent of those surveyed voiced concern that another round of unrest could engulf their neighborhoods, 59 percent said they were very or somewhat confident police would quickly quell it.

About 60 percent said they had done nothing to protect themselves in case rioting occurs. Only 4 percent said they had bought guns.

There was also a Japanese traditional summer dress, made of 100-percent cotton worn by males and females regardless of age, and a dress made of a Guatemalan cloth called manta, known to be worn in traditional shopping markets in Mexico.

Part of the entertainment was a song performed in Bengali, the native language of Bangladesh. There was also a martial arts dance performed by a Chinese student and dancing by a group from Puerto Rico.

The Puerto Rican dancers generated tremendous response from the audience, especially when they performed the native meringue dance.

"This is where you learn real culture, not in the classroom," Turakhia said.

Updates of the events were broadcast live on KSDB at regular intervals.

The entertainment segment closed with the audience holding hands singing, "We are the World." This was done as a show of unity among all nations.

"This is a good sign of unity. There are people here whose countries are at war," Turakhia said.

The dance party, in which the audience participated, brought the event to a close. The audience danced to a variety of music provided by different countries.

Forum reviews King case

Concerns about outcome of second verdict discussed

REGGIE BLACKWELL
 Collegian

The verdict is drawing closer. Students, faculty and administrators jammed the K-State Union courtyard Monday to discuss concerns about the Rodney King case.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, was the mediator for the forum.

"It's a tribute to this institution that you can get this much support from faculty, the administration and especially our president, Jon Wefald," he said.

Franklin said each person needs to be proud of what is being done here to address the Rodney King case before the verdict is given. He then urged everyone to speak their minds and let off any frustrations they might have.

"The situation that took place in south-central Los Angeles last year was a release of frustration that's been building up for years in the black community."

ERIC BOWIE
 JUNIOR IN SECONDARY EDUCATION

The difference in the cases is the time spent in prison if convicted, she said. They would have spent a lot longer time in prison if they were convicted on criminal charges.

McLean-Murray said for convictions, the jury has to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, the officers were in direct violations of King's civil rights. They also will have to prove the officers were beating him with the intent to physically harm.

She explained the framework of the jury. There are nine whites, two blacks and one hispanic. All the officers are being charged with police brutality, but they all can receive different verdicts, McLean-Murray said.

At all times during the forum, there were students and faculty lined up behind the four microphones to respond to comments, give comments or ask questions.

Eric Bowie, junior in secondary education, said he thinks the riots in Los Angeles were important to the black community.

"The situation that took place in south-central Los Angeles last year was a release of frustration that's been building for years in the black community," he said.

He compared the violence in Los Angeles to white men being violent in Vietnam and Saudi Arabia.

David Bishop, freshman in physics, said he saved a black man's life and didn't see it as a black-or-white issue during Desert Storm. Instead, his job was to liberate the country, he said.

"I served in Desert Storm, and it's not a white man's world," he said.

Marquez Savala, senior in human development, asked during the forum about the deployment of the National Guard in the Los Angeles area. She said that tactic seems as if it would incite violence instead of prevent it.

McLean-Murray said, in response to Savala, that they're not trying to entice anyone; they are just getting ready to handle any problems that may occur.

Julie Anderson, senior in physical education, asked McLean-Murray about the officers' handcuffs.

"Where was the use of handcuffs during the beating of King? It seemed like to me that the police had ample time and opportunities to place the handcuffs," Anderson said.

McLean-Murray said the officers felt King was not immobilized enough for them to arrest him, and that's probably why they did not use the handcuffs.

The forum also addressed concerns for diversity at K-State. Toward the end of the forum, Franklin said he wanted people to consider solutions to the lack of multiculturalism.

Laura Vetter, senior in philosophy, passed a petition for a proposal for a multicultural class. She said she wants the class to be a part of the K-State curriculum and mandatory for all students.

Harriet Ottenheimer, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, said Faculty Senate is working on a course that would be used to fulfill a multicultural requirement. The course would either come from a class already at K-State or a course that may be developed.

Charlotte Moore, senior in social work, said she and members of Black Student Union proposed a plan last year, and it was rejected. She said she wanted to know how to get it passed this time.

Ottenheimer said the best thing to do is to get to know the faculty senators.

Wefald said he thought the forum was excellent, and it sends a positive message to K-State. He said Rodney King said it best — "can't we all just get along."

▲ Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, watches Beverly McLean-Murray, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, answer questions asked by students and faculty at the Rodney King forum Monday afternoon in the K-State Union courtyard.

◀ The K-State Union courtyard and both balconies were filled Monday afternoon as several hundred students, staff and faculty gathered to ask questions and express concerns regarding the Rodney King civil rights case.

Nation awaits second King verdict

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Hundreds of National Guard troops reported to staging areas Monday, and civil rights leaders pleaded for restraint as a federal jury deliberated the case of four policemen accused of beating Rodney King. Jurors reached no verdict by the end of the day.

Shielded from the public's jitters and the police buildup, the 12 jurors resumed their talks after meeting Easter Sunday afternoon. Late Monday afternoon they headed back to the hotel where they were being sequestered.

They asked U.S. District Judge John Davies if they could take their trial notes back to the hotel. He said no.

Jurors have deliberated for 15 hours since Saturday. They were to resume their talks Tuesday morning.

Scores of TV trucks surrounded the downtown courthouse, while across town, guardsmen banged their rifle butts on the bed of a troop truck in a display of spirit at California National Guard headquarters in Inglewood.

About 600 guardsmen reported to area armories by Monday morning, and the police department put 200 extra officers on the streets at all times in case a verdict in the case triggered violence.

However, operations will be routine until the jury reaches a verdict, both agencies said.

"Unless there is a call for more, they are going to be here going through some drills, training, probably double-checking their equipment," guard Capt. Lisa Corraiva said.

U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno approved up to $1 million in federal funds for police overtime following the verdict, Gov. Pete Wilson's office announced Monday.

Deadly rioting broke out last spring after Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell and Theodore Briseno and former Officer Timothy Wind were acquitted of most charges in a state trial.

In this federal trial, the four white officers were charged with violating the black motorist's civil rights during a beating after a highway chase on March 3, 1991.

Candidates report expenditures

WADE SISSON

Rubber chickens, handshakes and booze may not seem like political tools.

But with most of their candidacies framed by good humor and fun, many of the 16 candidates for student body president and vice president turned another formality of the campaign — the expenditure report — into a prankster's paradise.

The final expenditure reports, which detail the amount each pair of candidates spent on the campaign, were due Monday on the eve of the general election.

Scott Truhlar and Scott Wissman reported spending $1.40 — the approximate cost of two Ices purchased the day they announced their candidacies at Wal-Mart.

Wissman said he also reported 20,000 smiles, three types of handshakes (the full-body shake with a hug, the hearty double-clasp shake and one-hand passer-by shakes), a few jokes, many laughs and a whole lot of fun.

"The bare minimum is kind of what we're after," Wissman said. "You don't have to spend a lot of money to deal with people. Fun doesn't cost anything."

Tim Orindgreff and Tim Madden reported a total of $19.70 in expenditures used to purchase a rubber chicken, three whoopee cushions, one case of Always Save root beer and two Easter baskets.

Siddharth Turakhia and Abdul Ebadi filed their report late, listing $48.77 in expenditures for photocopies, posters, computer-use fees and tickets for International Night.

Turakhia said their campaign will stay well below the expenditure limit of $728 — equal to in-state tuition, excluding any fees.

"I probably will stay under $100 in my total expenditure for my whole campaign," Turakhia said.

The Turakhia/Ebadi campaign has no T-shirts or buttons, Turakhia said. Instead, they have advertised with small, handwritten posters, he said.

The Ed Skoog/Eric Henry ticket reported $137.25, which includes sidewalk chalk, posterboard and markers.

Recycled materials will be used for posters and banners, Skoog said. He said the Skoog/Henry ticket will not have any substantial costs to add, save the cost of numerous bottles of Mescal.

The biggest expense for the Charles Walters/Ian Bautista campaign is the cost of printing their student reform agenda,

NEWS DIGEST

► NUTRITIONIST SPEAKS ON EFFECT OF CALORIC INTAKE ON CANCER

Eat everything, but less of it.

This was the basic message given by David Kritchevsky, former associate director of the Wistar Institute in Philadelphia, in a speech Tuesday in Justin Hall.

At the institute, Kritchevsky has done extensive research into caloric intake and the effect it might have on incidence of cancer.

Kritchevsky's research contradicts recent indications that high-fiber diets and other controlled diets are ways of reducing the likelihood of cancer.

His research has shown that a lower-calorie diet, along with increased exercise, can greatly reduce the possibility of cancer.

"I feel that there is no reason to believe that everyone cannot enjoy the luxury of a total well-rounded diet, but in moderation," Kritchevsky said.

Kritchevsky said he thinks it does not matter which calories are not taken in — only that the caloric intake is not too high.

"My own feeling is that the body is competing with tumors for nutrients," he said. "If there is enough nutrients for both you and the tumor, the tumor wins, but when there are only enough nutrients for you, you win."

"Exercise helps because you are using up energy that might be going someplace else."

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. What is financial aid?

A. Financial aid is money available to you and your family to help pay for educational expenses. Its purpose is to supplement, not replace, the amount you and your family pay to meet your total educational expenses.

Q. How do I know what my "need" figure will be? What does my EFC mean?

A. The Federal Government calculates your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) by using a formula established by Congress. Your EFC is based on the information you entered on your Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Your EFC will be the same no matter where you attend college because the same formula is used by all schools throughout the nation. After K-State determines the total cost of education or budget for you, the EFC is subtracted from this amount and the result is your "need" figure. For example:

COST OF EDUCATION	$8000
MINUS EFC	-2000
=FINANCIAL NEED	$6000

If the cost of education is $8000 and your EFC is $2000, you will be eligible for $6000 in need-based financial aid. Your financial need would be met with a financial aid package that combines federal grants, loans, work-study, or K-State scholarships.

Q. What is the difference between grants and loans?

A. •Federal grants, available to students who meet financial need requirements, are funds that do not have to be repaid.
•Federal loans let you borrow money for college at low interest rates. Loans are paid back after you finish college.
•K-State scholarships are awards for students who excel in academic areas, activities, or sports or who have financial "need." They do not have to be repaid.
•Federal work-study jobs give you spending money and work experience. This need-based award allows you to work 10-20 hours per week.

Q. If I didn't qualify for financial aid last year, should I still apply?

A. YES! Even though the priority deadline of March 15th is past, you should still apply for financial assistance. Congress has changed the needs analysis formula, and this will make some students eligible for 1993-94 that were ineligible for 1992-93. Some important changes are as follow:

- The limits of adjusted gross income that a family can earn have increased.
- Home asset values are no longer reported or considered in the formula.
- Farm assets are no longer reported or considered in the formula if the family resides on the farm.
- If the parents and student file either a 1040EZ or 1040A and the parents' adjusted gross income is under $50,000, ALL assets are excluded from the formula for both parents and student.

Dear K-Stater,

We are running for Student Body President (SBP) and Vice-President (VP). Please take time to read through this short letter outlining our ideas and positions. We think it will be worth your time to do so.

We are running because we are very concerned about ACCOUNTABILITY in three key areas: (1) Student Government should be held accountable for FINANCES; (2) Faculty should be held accountable for their performance; and (3) the SBP and VP should be held accountable to you, the students.

FINANCES

* You should be able to have a say in how much you pay to go to K-State. You'll get it with us in office. We will veto any new student fee or fee increase if you do not approve it in a campus-wide referendum.

* Right now, our student fee money goes directly to the state's bank account, and the state keeps the interest, which is approximately $50,000. We want to incorporate Student Government. Incorporation would allow that $50,000 to stay at K-State.

FACULTY

* You should be able to find out which professors are good and which are poor. You're spending your time and money, so you should have the best. We want to implement mandatory student evaluations of all faculty, and we will publish the results where you can look at them.

* There are too many poor professors at K-State that have tenure. We want to implement a review system so that poor professors will be dismissed.

* You are at KSU to get an education so you can get a job. Good advising is essential to your success. We want to establish standards for advising so that you will be insured of competent advice and plenty of help.

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT/VICE-PRESIDENT

* You should know what we as your elected leaders are up to. We want to work with the Collegian to provide you daily updates and weekly summaries on what student government has done for you.

* You should also have an easy way to communicate your concerns and ideas with us. We will have a forum twice a month where you can talk with us in an open, public place. This forces us to be publicly accountable to you.

OTHER ISSUES

* All of us have lost money at the end of semester book buy-back. We will implement a textbook name-exchange program. If you have a book to sell or buy, we'll put your name, phone number, and the book title in a computer. Then, someone who wants to sell or buy that book can get a printout with your name and phone number. You can then sell or buy the book at a fair price.

* You should be able to declare a minor. We will follow through on getting the minors program implemented as soon as possible.

These issues are what we stand for. We believe that all of these issues will affect you in a positive way and make your K-State education better.

We would appreciate your vote on April 13 and 14 in the Union.

SGA elections begin today

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

It is time to cast your vote. Student Governing Association elections will be from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. today and Wednesday in the K-State Union.

Students must present their valid K-State ID cards to vote.

Polls also will be open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. today at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Mary Farmer, junior in history and SGA elections committee chairperson, said ballots will be collected at 11 a.m., 2 p.m., 4 p.m. and 6:30 p.m. of each day. They will be taken to the KSU Foundation and tabulated by three staff members from the information office.

Farmer said there will be a number next to each name on the ballot. Staff will key this number in when counting the votes.

"It is going to take a lot longer to get the results for this year," she said. "We only have half the people working on it, and they are going to be working non-stop. I guarantee that."

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said the results will be validated by three appointed officials.

Scott, Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., and Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, will verify the votes.

Scott said students must be identified by their colleges and sign a notebook before receiving a ballot.

It is considered a valid election if the total number of notebook signatures and the total number of votes match within 1 percent, she said.

Farmer said, "If they don't match, then it technically has a chance to recall the election."

The candidates will be informed of the results on Wednesday night as soon as possible, she said. The run-off election will be from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. on April 21.

Farmer said the votes will be hand-counted by the election committee and validated by the judges. This is the last year K-State will use the key-punch system when tabulating results.

"We are looking into a validine system for next year, which would allow people to vote wherever they want to," Farmer said. "Right off hand, we would know what college a student is in and make sure he or she got the right ballot. It would eliminate the problem of anyone voting twice."

Crash course in waiting

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Eat, drink, vote and be merry

THE ISSUE

Hey, once again, it is election day.

WE SUGGEST

VOTE

In today's Collegian, there is a section that, if you use it, could prove to be the key to the direction K-State will take in the next year.

And if the special Collegian election section is the key, the only way you can use it is to vote.

We know, we know — every time an election comes around there are always advertisements and editorials screaming the "v" word at you, as if there were nothing else more important to a student.

Well, besides academics, there isn't.

The policies of your school and your campus are on the line. The way your tuition is spent is on the line. The budget of your organization is on the line.

Voting for the president of the student body could benefit you more than voting for the president of your nation.

And what does it take? Perhaps 15 minutes of your time and the knowledge of the platforms of the respective candidates.

Voting seems very impersonal when you're surrounded by a large group of people, all doing the same thing. However, you will probably never have as loud a voice in the future of K-State than at the polling places today and Wednesday.

So, turn around so you can hear us better — VOTE!

SQUARE PEGS

JOHN HART

If you look toward Washington, D.C., during the next few months, you will see an eclipse, not of the sun or moon, but of the hype of the gays-in-the-military hearings shielding the larger mission of the gay-rights movement.

Their goal is simple: legitimize the homosexual lifestyle. Lifting the ban on gays in the military is one way to help tear down the wall of alleged intolerance that prohibits homosexuals from enjoying equal status with heterosexual married couples and equal opportunity in the workplace, for instance.

One issue I want to clarify is that I'm not against the homosexual person but the homosexual lifestyle. There is a very big difference. I know homosexuals, and I don't treat them any differently from heterosexuals. Before you stereotype me as a homophobic bigot, consider that disagreeing with homosexuals is not the same as fearing or hating them. For example, are all people who disagree with George Bush Bushophobics?

The vast majority of Christians do not hate homosexuals. Fred Phelps, the Topeka minister who preaches a ministry of hatred toward homosexuals, does call himself a Christian. Yet, his claim that the Bible teaches God hates fags is as absurd as interpreting Hamlet to be a science-fiction thriller.

A common vehicle the gay-rights movement employs to legitimize homosexuality is biological evidence. They are trying to prove that homosexuality is genetically determined and is morally equivalent to being born blond or brunette. At the present, the evidence is at best inconclusive, although many gay-rights advocates are claiming biological determinism is an established fact. The vast majority of biological and scientific evidence actually provides a better argument against legitimizing homosexuality.

In a 1984 study, the American Psychological Association estimated the average homosexual has in excess of 50 partners a year. In the era of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, why legitimize a lifestyle that is so obviously high risk? It's true AIDS is not solely a gay disease. However, the Centers for Disease Control reports that two-thirds of all AIDS cases resulted from homosexual contact.

"The vast majority of biological and scientific evidence actually provides a better argument against legitimizing homosexuality"

An anonymous gay writer discloses: "You can take away AIDS, and you're still looking at a community that happens to be a diseased community. ... The bulk of your venereal diseases now reside with the gay community."

Joseph Sobran, syndicated columnist, writes: Would nature implant a drive for which there is no apparatus of fulfillment and no survival of the species? Homosexual practices, especially anal intercourse, don't produce life; they induce disease.

It's too soon to conclude whether homosexuality is genetically determined. If that is ever proved to be true, it would still be foolish to legitimize homosexuality. We know genetics plays a significant role in alcoholism, but that isn't reason to say it's okay. Destructive behavior, regardless of the tendencies you're born with, should never be legitimized.

Another tool for legitimizing homosexuality involves gay-rights/civil-rights movement analogies with gay rights attempting to share the moral high ground the civil-rights movement rightfully deserves.

General Colin Powell reveals the anatomy of a bad analogy by stating race is a benign physical characteristic, while homosexuality is a profound behavioral characteristic. Also, you can hide homosexuality much easier than race. Race is definitely not a choice, unless you're Michael Jackson. Homosexuality is a questionable choice.

The reasons for treating homosexuality as an unnatural and immoral lifestyle are not based on mythical religious dogma but common sense. While I don't fear the homosexual person, I do fear society's acceptance of the homosexual lifestyle. My fear is not based on ignorance but education.

If you reject all moral codes and standards, then you have no basis to call anything right or wrong. If homosexuality is legitimized and treated as morally acceptable, then what's wrong with any other "sexual preference" such as pedophilia, incest or bestiality? Are child molesters another diverse group of individuals waiting to be embraced and tolerated?

The homosexual community deserves a lot of compassion for the suffering they've endured. However, legitimizing the lifestyle that has caused, and will continue to cause, both them and society endless pain and suffering is definitely not the place to start.

READERS WRITE

DATE RAPE

Concentrate on the source of the crime

Editor,

This letter is written in response to an April 7 letter regarding date rape.

I don't know how many other women feel this way, but I am sick to death of being told how to avoid date rape.

It's my job to avoid gum disease, parking tickets and using the "F" word around Grandma. It is not my calling in life to avoid date rape — it is the prospective criminal's job to avoid committing the crime.

By telling women that if they are awake, sober and talkative ("being alert, being aware of your tolerance for alcohol and developing strong communication skills"), they can avoid date rape, you are simply perpetuating the myth that if a woman really didn't want to have sexual intercourse with her date, she could have prevented it. Men have been using this excuse for years, and, frankly, it is now, and always has been, hogwash.

When informing the public on how to avoid date rape, please direct your comments toward things that men should do (i.e. listen to women) rather than telling women what they should or should not do.

The burden of avoiding date rape has been borne by the wrong people for too long. Let's take the weight off of women's shoulders and put it where it belongs — on those guilty of committing the crime.

SMUT & SMOKING

Using "condom" zips this letter right in

Editor,

Lately, I have noticed the Collegian is publishing more smut, bad language and dirty thoughts. Cassandra is a good example of this smut. If the students of K-State have sexual problems, write to a smut magazine. They will probably get just as good an answer.

More than half of the letters to the editor that get published have something about smut in them. My question is, "Why doesn't the editor put in more non-smut letters?"

I have tried to get my letter to the editor published about making all buildings on the K-State campus non-smoking. The Drug and Alcohol Education director has done a survey showing the majority of students do not want smoking in the buildings. I support my fellow students in not wanting smoking in the buildings on campus. Smoking inside the buildings causes a health problem for many students. I have had to stop studying in Farrell Library because smoking is allowed in the lobby.

I too pay fees to use the library. I have a right to study in Farrell, in a smoke-free environment.

I am hoping this letter will get published. But since it doesn't say anything about smut, my chances are slim to none.

So, I guess I will have to use a smut word. Hopefully, the word "condom" will be enough.

The Advocate, Baton Rouge, La., on meat and poultry inspections (April 5):

Thanks to Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy, his department may finally modernize the nation's meat and poultry inspection program.

Espy, who has been in office only a few weeks, has seen fit to do what several of his predecessors were unable or unwilling to do — admit that the visual inspection method currently used to certify wholesomeness is simply incapable of detecting the tiny bacteria which can cause serious illness. ...

While most meat is, in fact, safe, the infected meat that killed three children and caused an additional 500 illnesses in Seattle is sad proof that the system needs overhauling. ...

Under previous secretaries and administrations, the department has ignored actual causes of bacterial infection as well as a warning from the National Academy of Sciences that inspection methods were badly in need of modernization.

It will take time, and no doubt will result in far-reaching changes for both producers and consumers of meat and poultry. But Espy's decision to put the health of the nation ahead of narrower interests is commendable and deserves the support of all segments of the industry, as well as the public.

Charleston (W.Va.) Daily Mail on an energy tax (April 5):

Since President Clinton insists upon an economy-slowing, inflation-spurring energy tax, the least he could do is put the tax in the correct place — on consumers, not producers. ...

Furthermore, it will be easier to collect the tax from the utilities that burn ... coal than to get it from the ... mines that produce the coal. ...

Exported coal was already exempted from the tax, for good reason. The United States sells $4.7 billion worth of coal a year to overseas markets — a business that the energy tax would have trashed. ...

Odd, isn't it? Americans will soon pay more for U.S. coal than foreigners do.

A K-State graduate returned to campus after 15 years to talk to students and faculty about multiculturalism.

"I want to help students to understand the importance of race and ethnic relations," said Arthur Evans Jr., professor of sociology at Florida Atlantic University.

He said he wants people to know that in America today, people are still being placed in groups such as class, age, sex and race.

Evans will be speaking to selected classes on campus. He will also be the keynote speaker at the American Ethnic Studies Program banquet.

NATO flights enforce U.N. no-fly zone

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — NATO warplanes patrolled above an overcast Bosnia on Monday to begin enforcing a U.N. no-fly zone in the first flexing of the alliance's military muscle outside its territory.

There were no reports of confrontations, and a top Bosnian Serb commander said his troops had been told not to interfere with the NATO mission.

A French Mirage 2000 jet went down in the Adriatic Sea because of engine failure, said the French Defense Ministry's news service SIRPA. The pilot was rescued safely, it said.

The flights were meant to impress Bosnian Serbs — the faction most often accused of breaking the six-month-old ban on military flights — of new resolve to enforce U.N. resolutions meant to end Bosnia's civil war.

But Operation Deny Flight had more political than military significance. The year-long war has primarily been fought with artillery, tanks and infantry. NATO pilots were under strict orders to shoot only as a last resort.

Bosnian Serbs, who have denounced the NATO operation as more evidence of international bias in favor of Bosnia's Muslim-led government, bombarded the besieged eastern town of Srebrenica with renewed ferocity Monday.

A U.N. official said at least 56 people died in an hour-long barrage, including 15 children.

"It's an attack on civilians. Anything that kills 15 children — that's criminal," said John McMillan, a spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees in Sarajevo. Another 90 people were wounded in the attack, he said.

Allied planes are policing Bosnia from bases in Italy across the Adriatic. Two U.S. Air Force F-15 jet fighters, two French Mirage 2000s and two Dutch F-16s flew the first mission. AWACs surveillance planes operated by

PROGRAMS

Develop group skills in the trees

NEIL ANDERSON

Collegian

Climbing trees and running around the woods may seem a thing of the past, but one Union Program Council activity offers a chance to return to the woods.

The project, Challenging Outdoor Personal Encounters, will be offered to students the weekend of April 17-18 at Camp Jayhawk at Lake Perry.

The activities included in COPE are climbing, swinging, balancing, rappelling and using zip-lines.

"The goal of Project COPE is to bring people together and help them develop group skills," Eric Keating, senior in graphic design and advertising, said.

The camp is run by the Boy Scouts of America, who offer the COPE weekends to everyone.

Keating was a COPE instructor three summers ago.

"Since then, KPL Gas Service has donated equipment to Camp Jayhawk, and it has been redone. It's the number one Boy Scout camp in the nation," Keating said.

He said the two days are divided into low and high course levels. On the first day in the low course level, the group starts with courses that develop group trust.

Each session begins at 8 a.m.

and lasts into the evening. Checkout is at 4 p.m. Sunday.

Keating said one event is a six-foot wall that participants fall off backwards, with the group below to catch them.

Someone who has leadership skills and starts giving responsibilities to others in their group could be given the handicap of not talking, and then the group has to work together to get through the course, Keating said.

Another example is a 12-foot wall everyone must get over, even the people who may have been given handicaps of using only one arm or leg.

On the second day, the high course level, the obstacles get bigger and tougher.

There is an obstacle called the giant's ladder, because it is made of telephone poles, Keating said.

Keating said the group has to climb the ladder and get over it while working together with each other's handicaps. He also said there are at least three safety lines to the obstacles.

The cost is $39 and includes all meals and cabin lodging.

The information meeting for COPE is 7 p.m. April 15 in Union Stateroom 3. Sign-up begins April 16 in the UPC office.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Netters drop 2nd straight match

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Suzanne Sim, K-State's No. 2 player, returns a shot from Oklahoma's Mercedes Fernandez Sunday afternoon at the L.P. Washburn Courts at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Sim lost, but she won her Monday match, beating Oklahoma's Jenny Del Valle 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

K-State falls 7-2 to OU in 6-hour match

Marathon tennis. For nearly six hours, the K-State tennis team slugged it out on the courts of Ahearn Field House with the Oklahoma Sooners.

"It takes a long time to play a match in here," coach Steve Bietau said. Bietau had to move the matches from the six L.P. Washburn Courts to the three indoor Ahearn courts shortly before the 2 p.m. start time because of the rain.

"It makes it a long, hard grind, regardless of the score of the match."

That score gave the Sooners a 7-2 victory over the Wildcats — K-

State's second loss in two days of Big Eight play.

Oklahoma had collected enough points by 6 p.m. for the win, and the fans had long gone home.

But the matches went on, and K-State's Lindy Neethling said the concentration wandered a bit during the six-hour duel.

"You've got to bring yourself back sometimes, because the other girls really need our support," she said. "But sometimes for a whole quarter of the evening you're thinking — bed."

The Wildcats got their two match victories from Suzanne Sim and Evelia Alvares.

Sim beat Oklahoma's Jenny Del

Valle in three sets, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3, and Alvarez defeated Angie Martin in a comeback win.

"They both have great attitudes," Bietau said. "Suzanne has kept us in matches all year long."

"This might be the best win of her career."

"I like Jenny Del Valle a lot in the way she plays," Bietau said. "She's got a strong forehand and moves well, and I don't think that kind of forehand is something that Suzanne's overcome before."

Alvarez dropped the first set, 4-6, but rallied to win the final two sets, 6-2, 6-3.

"Evelia's match was a lot of hard work," Bietau said. "Her serve is still limited, and she has some trouble putting balls away right now."

She's found other ways to get the job done."

K-State's season record dropped to 6-11, 3-2 in the Big Eight. The Sooners improved to 13-5, 3-1 in the conference.

"Oklahoma's a good team," Neethling said.

Neethling and her doubles partner, Sim, lost a three-set doubles match early in the day.

"I think everyone tried, and we had several matches go to three sets," Neethling said. "But when you've got such strong opponents, it can be hard to do as well as you maybe can."

"I think some of us are displeased with the way we played, but I think everyone fought hard, and that's the most important thing."

Wildcat women struggle early

Men's squad to face Big 8 foes in Blazer Invite

TONYA FOSTER

The K-State women's golf team completed a disappointing first round Monday, as the men's squad prepared for its first tournament since placing second in the Diet Pepsi/Shocker Classic on April 5-6.

After one round of play in the 12-team Susie Maxwell Berning Classic, the Wildcat women are in eighth place. K-State shot a 328 in 36 holes yesterday at the Trails Golf Course in Norman, Okla.

The Sooners are leading the tournament with a 12-stroke lead over New Mexico.

Interim assistant golf coach Jack Key said Oklahoma has the home-course advantage.

"Oklahoma is going to be real hard to catch on their own course," Key said. "If you don't hit straight, you can get into high numbers."

K-State is led by Jacque Wright, whose 159 placed her in a tie for fourth.

Wright shot a career-best 74 in the first 18 holes of play, and that score is currently the second-highest mark of the tournament. She entered Monday's play with an average of 84.4 strokes per round.

Key said he is pleased with Wright's score.

"Jacque had a great day," he said. "She hit the ball well. Jacque is beginning to play up to her potential. She didn't really get in any trouble, and she putted well."

Valerie Hahn posted a 166 to tie for 29th.

"Tournament in and tournament out, Val has been our best player," Key said. "I expect Val to be playing better tomorrow."

Dallas Cox is tied for 39th with a 169. Denise Pottle carded a 170 for a tie for 41st, and Debbie Crystal's 181 is good for 54th.

The men's team will be competing today and tomorrow in the 17-team Bent Brook Blazer Invitational at the Bent Brook Golf Course in Birmingham, Ala.

This is K-State's fourth tourney of the season but the last one before the Big Eight championships April 26-27 in Hutchinson.

Among the opponents in the field are Big Eight rivals Nebraska and Iowa State.

K-State has beaten both the Huskers and the Cyclones in tournaments this season.

"It would be nice to beat them again to ensure a place at the NCAA Regionals," Coach Mark Elliott said.

Senior Richard Laing leads the team with an average of 73.3.

Elliott said consistency is what is holding Brett Waldman back. Waldman has a stroke average of 75.7.

"Waldman needs more consistency," he said. "I don't think there is a lack of confidence — we just need to score better and be more consistent."

► KC FALLS TO 1-6 WITH 4-1 LOSS

NEW YORK (AP) — Jim Abbott, looking like the ace the Yankees have been searching for, outpitched David Cone and led New York past the Kansas City Royals, 4-1, Monday in the home opener for the Yanks.

There were 56,704 fans in attendance, a regular-season game record at Yankee Stadium since being remodeled in 1976.

"Couldn't ask for more," Abbott said.

Paul O'Neill went 4-for-4 with a triple and double, driving in two runs.

Abbott (1-1) gave up eight hits and stayed in control by walking none. He threw only 85 pitches — 61 for strikes — and struck out four.

"How about that Jim Abbott?" Cone said. "He was great."

Abbott was in trouble only once, when singles by Brian McRae, Hubie Brooks and George Brett with one out in the sixth scored a run.

Cone, meanwhile, was hurt by errors. He gave up three runs, only one earned, on seven hits in seven innings. He walked none and struck out two.

Cone has lost both of his starts for his new team, even though he has allowed a total of three earned runs. The Royals, who started 1-16 last season, have lost six of their first seven games.

Cat baseball team hoping to overcome rain, Cornhuskers

80 percent chance of showers predicted for game against Nebraska

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The K-State baseball team is scheduled to play the Nebraska Cornhuskers at 7 tonight in the Huskers' Buck Belter Field.

The operative word here, of course, is scheduled.

"It looks pretty darn wet," a meteorologist for KETV in Omaha, Neb., said Monday afternoon. "There will probably be a line of storms by late afternoon."

Indeed, an 80-percent chance of showers is threatening to cancel yet another K-State baseball game. A rainout in tonight's contest would be the 12th for the Cats this season.

"This has been the worst weather I've been around in my entire coaching career," said Wildcat coach Mike Clark, who has been coaching since 1978. "It's just been terrible."

And the most recent rainfall might be the most ill-timed one yet — when the Cats are riding a season-high three-game winning streak. K-State took all three games from this same Husker team during the weekend, scoring 39 runs in three games.

"We needed something like that," Clark said. "Our confidence was down a little bit, and there was a little bit of frustration."

Prior to the weekend series, K-State had lost nine of 11 games.

"It was a good weekend, and, hopefully, we can use that confidence to ride through the rest of the season," Clark said. "We want to keep that going."

The Wildcats are currently 11-17 overall on the season, including a 4-4 mark in the Big Eight. K-State is ahead of only Nebraska and Iowa State in the conference.

The Cornhuskers, 12-15 and 2-6, have lost six of seven games, including four straight. Nebraska lost three times over the weekend, despite scoring 10 runs in two different games.

And Husker coach John Sanders said his team needs to play to get back into the Big Eight race.

"We need to play, and we need to win," he said. "Whenever you lose, and you lose in that manner, that's not good. If we got some sort of resemblance to pitching, we might win one of those games."

The Husker pitching has been so bad, in fact, that the team's cumulative earned run average is 7.05.

Nebraska has given up 11 or more runs in five of the last seven games.

"Whenever you get bucked off a horse, you need to get back on," Sanders said. "And we've been bucked around."

K-State's Scott Dreiling is scheduled to start tonight's contest. Dreiling, a senior transfer, is 1-2 with a 6.49 ERA. He has given up 35 hits in 26-1/3 innings pitched, and he completed one of the four games he started. Sanders said he wasn't sure who would start for Nebraska.

Even though Nebraska's home field has artificial grass, it is not likely tonight's game will be played.

If the game is canceled, the two teams have the option of playing a doubleheader Wednesday afternoon — the two teams already have a game scheduled to start at 3 p.m.

Rule clarification encouraging to K-State

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Perhaps not all is lost after all.

Throughout this season, K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said he thought each team is required to play 20 conference games to qualify for the Big Eight tournament — a number that, with the Cats having five conference games rained out, would have been difficult to reach.

The fact is, however, that teams need only to play 16 games to qualify for the Big Eight tourney.

In seasons past, all seven conference teams — Colorado doesn't play baseball — played each other four times, for a total of 24 Big Eight games. Sixteen of those games, or 67 percent, had to be played for a team to qualify for the Big Eight tourney.

This season, the number of times each team faces each other was increased to five. So, teams are scheduled to play 30 Big Eight games. Clark said he assumed teams would again be required to play in two-thirds of those games

But this is also the first season teams are not allowed to make up rained-out games. As a result, the schools' athletic directors voted last spring to keep the number of required games at 16.

Clark only recently called the Big Eight office and was told,

"Maybe they saw something in the crystal ball," Clark said. "It sure was a good decision."

The Wildcats are 4-4 in Big Eight play and have 16 more scheduled conference games.

Police pedal while on patrol

MICHELLE SMITH

A new breed of police officer is taking over college campuses.

Instead of being confined to steel cars, these officers are free to roam the streets on mountain bikes.

Police departments on campuses around the Big Eight Conference have added bike patrols to their usual police coverage in an effort to increase community-service patrolling.

Duncan Burgess, captain of police services at the University of Oklahoma, said one of the main advantages to the bike patrols is efficiency.

"The bike patrols are more efficient. They can respond to burglar alarms and crimes in process faster than a car," Burgess said. "Cars are restricted to peripheral streets. An officer on the bike can get there just as fast or faster than a car."

The University of Kansas also has a bike patrol. Burdel Walsh, community services officer at KU, said approachability is another advantage of the system.

"An officer on a bike is more approachable than an officer in a car because they are not surrounded by steel," Walsh said.

The bike patrol at KU consists of two officers. They work 10-hour shifts, four days a week.

"These officers volunteered for the assignment. They ride year-round unless they decide the weather does not permit them to," Walsh said.

Charles Beckom, K-State police chief, said the bike patrols are a program K-State is looking into.

"It is a good process, and we would like to do it. We do have some officers who are interested," Beckom said.

"Unfortunately, we do not have the resources or the amount of personnel now."

In addition to the specialized police patrol trail bikes, which cost about $600 each, several pieces of protective equipment must be purchased.

"The protective equipment is not something you just pass around. It is pretty much individualized," Beckom said.

Despite the resource limitations, Beckom said a bicycle patrol at K-State may start next fall.

"We maybe will get some equipment and get started by next fall. We are looking at possibly one patrol, and not even one every day," Beckom said.

Bike patrols on campus would help eliminate a problem that faces everyone who drives to campus, he said.

"It is almost similar to having people out on foot. They have a greater deal of mobility. They can respond quicker," Beckom said. "It would be easier to access places to park, also allowing them to get around quicker. They would not always be looking for some place to park."

Minister suggests banning 6 books in Marysville schools

REGGIE BLACKWELL
Collegian

Vivid mental pictures of intercourse, oral sex, lesbian encounters between 16- and 13-year-old girls and masturbation by both males and females are subjects contained in Ken Follett's books, the Rev. Calvin Reyburn of Marysville said.

At a USD 364 School Board meeting March 8, Reyburn, of the Victory Baptist Church in Marysville, suggested removing six of Follett's books from the Marysville high school and junior high school libraries.

The books are "The Pillars of the Earth," "Triple," "The Key to Rebecca," "Night Over Water," "Night of the Needle" and "Lie Down with Lions."

School board member Don Argo moved to have the books pulled from the library immediately, and Gary Holle seconded the motion. Five board members voted yes, and one person abstained saying she wanted time to consider this action.

"It was a little bit unexpected that night. Everything happened so fast, and the vote was taken," Superintendent William Oborny said.

The quick decision process is what upset school librarian Vicki Pillard. She said the board did not follow proper policy. According to the school's policy on banning books, adverse criticisms of materials in the media center should be submitted to the superintendent, who informs the board.

Allegations submitted should be considered by a faculty committee appointed by the superintendent. This committee is to be chosen from those in the same field as the subject of the book.

The books or materials involved will be suspended, pending a decision in writing by the above committee.

If the committee bans the material, it will be removed from the media center. Appeals from this decision may be made through the superintendent to the board for a final decision.

After numerous complaints from residents in the community and a letter from the American Civil Liberties Union, Oborny said he decided to have a revote. A committee also was formed.

The committee will begin reading the six books and reach a decision when they finish. Possible decisions include keeping the books in the library, removing the books or placing the books on a reserved shelf.

Vietnam 'lied' about POWs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration will ask Vietnam to explain a secret document alleging that Hanoi held 837 more American prisoners of war in 1972 than authorities acknowledged, U.S. officials said Monday.

The officials said they had some questions about the authenticity of the document, which Russian authorities turned over to American POW researchers.

During negotiations on ending American military involvement in Vietnam, North Vietnamese officials said in September 1972 that they held 368 American POWs, according to the document.

But State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said the Russian translation of the Vietnamese document indicated that Hanoi held 1,205 prisoners. As part of a peace agreement signed in January 1973, Vietnam agreed to release all Americans held prisoner, and 591 were subsequently returned to U.S. custody. The last of the POWs came home on April 1, 1973.

The Clinton administration, following the lead of the Bush administration, has linked establishment of normal relations to Vietnamese cooperation on the POW issue.

"The POW-MIA issue continues to be of great concern to the president," said White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers. "There can be no normalization of relations with Vietnam until we're sure the Vietnamese are doing all they can."

The document raises questions that must be answered, said Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs.

A committee report released this year indicated that further information could be found in the former Soviet Union — in documents or in personal testimony, Kerry said in a written statement.

"My understanding is that this new document was only very recently provided to U.S. officials and that it is still being analyzed," the statement said. "Meanwhile, our government should continue to press the Vietnamese government to cooperate fully on the POW-MIA issue."

The document was uncovered in January by Stephen Morris, a researcher for the Harvard Center for International Affairs. It purportedly was written by Gen. Tran Van Quang, deputy chief of staff of the North Vietnamese Army.

Last Thursday, the Russian government turned over a copy of the document to U.S. officials, who are evaluating it on an expedited basis, Boucher said.

He added Gen. John Vessey, who has been working with the Vietnamese on the POW issue since 1987, will raise the issue with Hanoi when he travels there next weekend.

Boucher said the document will be Vessey's first order of business. Myers told reporters at the White House, "We need to know that the Vietnamese are doing all they can on the MIA-POW issue (before) we can move forward."

Morris, arriving Monday at Kennedy Airport in New York, was highly critical of the Vietnamese.

Holding up a stack of 23 photocopies in Russian, he said, "This is incontrovertible evidence, proof that over the last 20 years there have been more than 700 hostages or, in a worst-case scenario, 700 murdered Americans."

"On the basis of this, we can conclude that more than 700 Americans had been held back by the time of Operation Homecoming," Morris said.

"It is very clear by these documents that the North Vietnamese have been lying to the United States for the last 20 years."

There have been numerous reports of sightings of American prisoners in Vietnam over the years, but none has ever been confirmed by the U.S. government.

The administration has come under pressure from some business groups to establish normal ties with Vietnam. The United States has had an economic embargo against Vietnam since 1975.

KU professor faces firing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — In spring 1991, a group of women students set out to change what they viewed as a climate of sexual harassment by male professors at the University of Kansas Law School.

Today, a tenured professor and former justice department prosecutor faces firing because of several misconduct allegations he vehemently denies — from his making inappropriate comments to his having sex with a drunken student.

After nearly nine months of hearings before a university disciplinary panel, criminal law professor Emil Tonkovich and the school's attorney, Rose Marino, will give final arguments May 12.

Tonkovich said his reputation has been ruined and the school damaged by a witch hunt started by the women.

University officials said Tonkovich violated professional ethics and faculty codes of conduct.

Tonkovich, 42, had worked on the government's bribery and fraud case against the late Teamster's President Roy Williams in the early 1980s. He has insisted on fighting the allegations publicly.

At his request, the hearings since last August have been open, along with most documents he and the school have submitted to the five-member faculty panel, which will decide his fate at the university.

Tonkovich declined an interview with the Associated Press, saying it would not be appropriate until the hearings are over. But he pointed to his request for full disclosure.

"I'll just let the record speak for itself," he said.

The record shows three women met with Law School Dean Robert Jerry in April 1991, urging action on alleged sexual harassment throughout the law school, although they at first sought only a faculty workshop on the subject.

But as the number of complaints mounted, a wider group of male and female students urged a university investigation and possible disciplinary action.

Tonkovich contends he was made a scapegoat because of a sexual-harassment rumor frenzy, the ensuing public outcry and his conservative political views, which he says do not jibe with those of some administrators.

Tonkovich, who is engaged to be married to a former student, admits to dating women in his classes. But he said it was not forbidden by the university until the recent surge of complaints, and that other professors have dated students.

But Jerry and former Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Del Brinkman said Tonkovich's total denial of wrongdoing is beyond credulity.

After reviewing 18 complaints naming 17 women, Jerry and Executive Vice Chancellor Delbert Shankel recommended in March 1992 that Chancellor Gene Budig fire Tonkovich.

Tonkovich, who immediately challenged the dismissal, has not been allowed in the classroom since, although he has continued on the payroll.

In the car-sex allegation, the most serious against him, Tonkovich is accused of talking about the importance of grades to influence a drunken woman to perform oral sex on him outside a student party in 1988.

Another statement alleges Tonkovich once stopped lecturing a class, feigned confusion and then remarked that he had been distracted by the skirt of a woman sitting at the front of the room.

Tonkovich, who worked for the federal organized crime strike force in Chicago and Washington, has denied both allegations. He said the car-sex accusation is too old to be taken seriously and that others at the party have rebutted it, contending the woman "had the hots for Tonk."

Nonetheless, another woman's complaint said Tonkovich had a reputation on campus for sexual pursuit of first-year female law students. "With every incoming class, the students ponder who the next Tonka Toy will be," the complaint said.

Forensics team takes third

Members place in national tourney

MEGAN MULLIKIN
Collegian

A speech team has done it again. The K-State forensics team took third place in the 1993 National Individual Events Tournament in Houston this weekend.

The team competed against 105 colleges and universities. To compete in the tournament, a student must be in the top 10 percent in year-long competition to qualify, John Burtis, director of forensics, said.

Last year the team placed fourth. The year before, it was 26th. Burtis said before the past couple of years the forensics team did not do as well because of the lack of support.

"We had fallen off until Dean (Peter) Nicholls and President (Jon) Wefald came to give us support," Burtis said.

"Our goal this year was to be in the top 20, since we did it last year, but I was real surprised when we got third."

The team's coach, Craig Brown, and the other assistant coaches are former speech competitors. Burtis said this is a big advantage for the students to be able to train with someone who has been there.

"The biggest reason we did so well is because Craig Brown, as the head coach and the other coaches had themselves been nationally competitive," he said.

Another reason the team was a success, Burtis said, was because they now have the resources to travel to compete in better tournaments, which gives excellent practice for national tournaments.

Burtis said most importantly the team did so well because of the students' efforts.

"We've got awfully good students. They have one woman who is a sophomore and on her second national championship. And Tim Schultz's winnings were just incredible," he said.

Tim Schultz, junior in radio-television, received a $2,000 scholarship as the national champion overall speaker. He also won a national championship as top overall competitor. Schultz also placed second in impromptu speaking, third in informative speech and fourth in both communication analysis and extemporaneous speaking.

Nancy Letourneau, sophomore in speech, won a national championship in persuasive speaking. She was also fifth in communication analysis. Last year she won a national oratory championship.

Mark Esfeld, senior in milling science and management, also finished sixth in extemporaneous speaking.

Burtis said about 300 students competed with almost 1,200 entries. Fourteen students competed for K-State in 39 events. No other school had as many national entries, Burtis said.

Five other K-Staters place in the top 24 in the nation.

In the finals, sometimes K-State competitors will have to compete against one another.

"They have to compete against each other as well, but because they are such good people, they compete well without a lot of animosity. During practice, student peers listen and make suggestions," Burtis said.

Other colleges in the top 20 included Rice, Cornell, Notre Dame, Arizona State, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Colorado and Bradley, which placed first.

Committee takes Turakhia off ballot

he encountered with housing and dining services regarding allegations of racial segregation in Jardine Terrace.

Walters said he did not list amount on his expenditure report because he didn't think he had to. Walters said he receives free office space in the center because he is the Jardine mayor. He said he only paid the money to make sure his Jardine constituents did not think he was violating his position.

"I was just trying to do the right thing," he said.

The committee then voted 3-2, with two members abstaining, to remove the Walters/Bautista ticket from the ballot.

However, based on new information presented to the committee by Bautista, the committee voted 6-0 to reconsider their action.

Walters and Bautista both said if the committee vote was negative, they would appeal the decision to Tribunal, a judicial body of SGA, possibly early this morning.

Following almost 45 minutes of debate about campaign regulations and how they apply to this situation, the elections committee voted 5-1, with one member abstaining, to put Walters and Bautista back on the ballot.

Student body presidential hopeful Sid Turakhia's name was removed from the ballot Monday night.

Turakhia failed to file a campaign expenditure report by the 5 p.m. deadline Friday. He gave as a reason the fact that he had been busy and sick.

The 1993 SGA Elections committee voted 6-2 to take Turakhia and his running mate, Abdul Ebadi, off of the ballot.

Both remain eligible as write-in candidates.

The ticket of presidential candidate Tracy Mader and vice presidential candidate Marc Scarbrough was also questioned by the committee for possible violations of the rule forbidding distribution of campaign materials at the K-State Union. Walters and Bautista filed the complaint against Mader and Scarbrough.

Following a witness' testimony, the committee voted 6-0 to let the Mader/Scarbrough ticket remain on the ballot.

Candidate expenditures show large variations

Walters said.

Walters and Bautista reported spending $506.59 on buttons, flyers, posters and business cards.

"We promised at the beginning we're running a grass-roots campaign," Walters said. "We mean to stick to it."

Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson reported $598.19, which was spent on T-shirts, banners, copies, photographs and button materials.

Doug Schwenk and Michelle Munson reported $659.91 for badges, chalk, photocopies and posters.

Schwenk said he did not expect the ticket to reach the expenditure limit.

"I don't think we'll spend all our money, but we'll certainly spend enough to do the proper advertising," Schwenk said.

Troy Brock, treasurer of the Tracy Mader/Marc Scarbrough campaign, said he expected the ticket to come close to the $728 expenditure limit.

The Mader/Scarbrough team reported $668.67 in expenditures.

"We'll be up there," he said. "It depends on how much we decide to do."

After the general election today and Wednesday, the two run-off candidate teams will have another budget guideline to follow, Mary Farmer, 1993-94 Election Committee Chairperson, said.

Los Angeles braces for King trial decision

Powell, accused of making the most blows against King, said at the courthouse Monday that throughout the trial he kept asking himself if he and the other officers did everything necessary for their defense.

"I think we did, and I think we will be acquitted," he said. "But that 1 percent that might not be is real worrisome."

In South Central Los Angeles, the neighborhood hit hardest in the riots, some predicted calm, others trouble, as the verdicts loomed.

"Everybody has learned something from last year. We gained nothing as a community," Larry Barnes, 40, a medical technician, said as a police helicopter whirled overhead. "People have faith in the federal government. ... Because we're black and Hispanic it doesn't mean we don't believe in what the justice system stands for."

Paul Riojas, 25, said he believed putting the officers on trial again amounted to double jeopardy. "But if you do it, at least get one of them. ... If they acquit again, it's going to blow up."

The Rev. Benjamin Chavis, newly elected leader of the NAACP, said Monday he was concerned about the buildup of military apparatus in Los Angeles. He compared the heightened alert to the way the United States geared up for war with Iraq.

"Law enforcement officials have the responsibility to keep order," he said. "But what I'm saying is, I want to make sure we don't go too far and wind up doing something that is provocative."

Police Lt. John Dunkin said part of officers' extensive training since last spring involved making sure our response is controlled for any type of incident so we don't overreact.

"We're in a tough position," Dunkin said. "We've tried to remain open, so the public doesn't think we're hiding, that we aren't prepared."

Police were heavily criticized last spring for their chaotic response to the riots that killed 54 people and caused more than $1 billion in damage.

In addition to the 600 guardsmen at armories, at least 5,000 are available in Southern California-based units, Gov. Wilson said last week.

Police began canceling days off and redeploying staff to put about 200 more officers on the streets during each of three eight-hour shifts. Once the jury is ready to announce its verdict, police will be put on tactical alert, in which all officers can be called to work, and less emphasis is placed on non-essential calls, Dunkin said.

At a news conference outside the bustling courthouse, leaders of the black, Korean and Hispanic communities urged people to look beyond the upcoming verdicts and focus on the underlying reasons behind last spring's riots.

"If these officers go to jail or these officers are acquitted it wouldn't make bread any cheaper for single mothers," said Shannon Reeves, western region director of the NAACP. "There are bigger problems for this nation that we must come together on."

SGA Elections

V o t e r s G u i d e

Special section of the K-State Collegian April 13, 1993

Student Body President and Vice President

► Vote for one team.

Improved communication between SGA elected officials and the student body has been a common theme of all of your campaigns. Tell how you plan to improve it.

In your opinion, what is the single biggest challenge facing the new student body president?

Finally, what makes you more qualified for the office of president than your opponents?

The person elected to the vice presidency has a one-time only opportunity to establish a role for future vice presidents to follow. Describe your vision of the vice presidency.

The idea of teamwork has been a recurring theme throughout this campaign. If elected, will the final word come from the president, or will it be necessary for both of you to agree to take action?

Finally, why is your ticket more qualified for the office of the presidency and vice presidency than your opponents?

Charles Walters

Major: Political science, history and international studies
As president, I will conduct regular forums, (mandatory public hearings on all proposed fee increases), personally post and publish SGA proposals and establish Concern-Tele-Line.

Long-term financial management. By fiscal 1995, the state will exhaust existing reserves. Students, not administrators, must move vigorously to cap tuition, fees and wasteful spending.

There are three clear differences between myself and the other candidates: Proven corporate experience, public service record, and leadership as Jardine mayor, and a clear, well-researched plan to guarantee safe, affordable housing, reduce student fees, create more student jobs, expand international and multicultural awareness, found a book cooperative.

Ian Bautista

Major: Political science, modern languages, Latin American studies and pre-law
My vice presidency will set the precedent of an active partner in making decisions on behalf of student interests, and primary adviser for our chief executive.

Since both officials receive the mandate of the students, our administration will make decisions based on mutual consent, just as our campaign team has run.

While I have been involved in student government more extensively than any other candidate, Charles has a variety of valuable experiences from the marketplace, Jardine family housing, and the advantage of viewing our system from the outside. We offer the choice of serious, hard-working, responsible leadership, proven experience, and innovation.

Sid Turakhia

Major: Mathematics
Twenty-four-hour hotline to president, personal mailbox in residence halls, greek houses, department

Establish democratic and market-oriented policies on campus. Boot out socialistic and communistic tendencies. Re-establish trust in SGA.

I want to empower students by giving them the right to choose as in a democracy. For me, students come first. If I can not deliver, I will resign in six months.

Abdul Ebadi

Major: Computer engineering
Support democratic values, work for students' interests and, in absence of the president, take

The final decision will be made by the president in consultation with the vice president after a complete evaluation of students' opinions.

We have no previous political experience, but we don't believe that political experience is necessary in order for us to listen to and solve students' problems. We also believe in "empowering the students" — allowing them to make critical decisions such as how their line-item fees are spent.

Doug Schwenk

Major: Physics and pre-medicine
Off-campus
I'll hold forums twice each month for open communication with concerned students, plus I'll work with the Collegian to provide daily updates and monthly columns.

Accountability for finances. I will veto any new student fees or fee increases if the students do not approve them in a campus-wide vote.

I believe strongly in being held accountable for what I'll do as president. Before attending K-State, I was self-employed contractor, and I want to put my real-world experience to work for K-State students. Above all else, I will listen to students, work hard and do my best for them.

Michelle Munson

Major: Chemical engineering
Greek
I'll take on routine, time-consuming jobs. I'll be placed in charge of specific projects, and I'll research issues so Doug can make better decisions.

The president. I will be responsible for some decisions, but Doug will be accountable to students for what happens in the long run.

Doug's solid work experience as a contractor, teacher and firefighter, along with his various campus group and student government leadership roles, give us the practical experience necessary to do the job well. We believe that K-State students deserve the accountability, honesty and hard work we are willing to give.

Ed Skoog

Major: English
My phone number's 539-3642. I live at 336 N. 16th St. Bring it on over to my house. SGA's gotta become interesting before the student body'll listen. We'll do this.

Entropy is our greatest threat. SGA is a closed system, and we're prepared to blow it wide open, reassemble the pieces and create a students' paradise.

Cut to the chase. This election is Skoog/Henry versus Same Old/Same Old. 'Twas ever thus. During my three years of hanging around, I've fought SGA shenanigans from outside as a columnist, and from inside as senator and finance committee guy. All along, Same Old has talked loud and said nothing. You've never had it so good, and it's time for a change.

Eric Henry

Major: Graduate student in journalism
The precedent I hope to set for the VP position is hard work, active listening and genuine concern for the students of K-State.

We are as much a team as Flatt and Scruggs, Nixon and Agnew, Rocky and Bullwinkle and Salt 'n' Pepa. The word comes from both.

We're the guys who'll give you a howdy on campus, have a beer with you off campus and bust our tails for you in SGA. We're for unity on campus, free admission to all sporting events and a progressive student union. We're serious about this election. Vote for us, won'tcha?

Fred Wingert

Major: Business
To improve communication one must desire to meet and listen to all students. We both have done so the last three years and will continue this in the upcoming year.

The biggest challenge we face is representing all students on major student concerns like book buy-back, jobs/internships and responsible money spending.

Jeff and I are unique candidates in that we were raised on Kansas farms, both of us have lived off-campus and in the residence halls, and have participated in many diverse activities, which enables us to relate to most K-State students.

Jeff Peterson

Major: Animal sciences and industry
Off-campus
Fred and I believe the role of the vice president is to reach out and listen to students and bring issues back to student government.

Teamwork is essential to reach all students. As an advisor to Fred, my input will be an important element in making decisions.

Fred and I work well together as a team. Utilizing different leadership styles based upon our personalities, we will concentrate on solvable issues during our term. Through our experiences, we are able to relate to a large portion of K-State students, and we'll continue to work hard for all students.

Scott Truhlar

Major: Physical science, social science and pre-medicine
Our administration will conduct Student Senate in the food centers and remove the door from the SGA president's office as a symbol of our openness.

In the process of getting to know every student on campus, we expect to have problems remembering everyone's names.

Vice presidential candidate Scott Wissman, and each have the strength of 10 men.

Scott Wissman

Major: Spanish and pre-medicine
To boldly go where no KSU student has gone before. The real power lies within the vice presidency. Exemplify Robert Krause at the student level.

We're going to run a horizontal administration — no power trip. If you hear it from one Scott, you hear it from both. Bottom line.

Nothing is between us and the students. We're delivering fun directly to the students. We combine the virtuoso of KSU Men's Glee Club and the experience of SGA on one ticket. When cut, we bleed deep purple, not mauve or lavender. Happiness is a way of life, not a promise.

Tracy Mader

Major: Agricultural economics
Bi-monthly meetings with college council officers, leaders in the residence halls and greek system. This roundtable format would funnel University-wide concerns to SGA.

Cost of education! Maintaining a balance between the affordability of college and today's financial actions, which will benefit K-Staters now and yet to come.

Experience, proven leadership and real answers. As Ag Senate vice-chair, representing students on Faculty Senate or in Topeka, I enjoy being the students' voice. Cost of education and competitiveness of KSU graduates are problems that affect each student. Our solutions are researched. With student help, they can become reality in the next year.

Marc Scarbrough

Major: Electrical engineering and pre-medicine
The vice president will share committee responsibilities, help communicate with students and be the workhorse to make sure policies are well-researched and implemented.

With equal involvement, the president will have the final word. However, on issues the VP is in charge of, the VP will have the final word.

Ability and interest in reaching out. We have extensively researched our platform and feel our plans for career planning and placement are attainable. Realizing the limitations of a term that is only a year long, Tracy and I have proposals that can realistically be achieved in 93-94. That is what sets us apart.

Tim Orindgreff

Major: Pre-medicine
I support mandatory four-drink minimum happy hours before every SGA meeting and possibly costume themes to break the ice between SGA and the students.

Draw, pitcher, well, shot. I just can't decide.

My lofty moral standards, rigid and uncompromisable values, solemn nature, and my ever so tactful approach to subjects of a feminine nature are ideals I not only believe in, but ceremoniously rehearse. Simply stated, "I'm good enough, I'm smart enough, and doggone it, people like me."

Tim Madden

Major: Advertising
My panorama of the depiction of befitting the embryonic vice presidency includes rituals of zealotry and ebullition along with an aberrant use of livestock.

Ever since Tim and I participated in the 1991 Blue River Pub tag team mud wrestling championship, we've taken trust in each others actions.

Top 10 reasons we're more qualified: 10. We can moonwalk. 9. Dads are bigger. 8. We never inhaled. 7. Expert tree climbers. 6. We forgot to exhale. 5. We're pro-life. 4. We're pro-choice. 3. Both received A's in Music Listening Lab. 2. We'll decrease unemployment. 1. People like us.

Union Governing Board: One Year

►Vote
for four.

What, if any, role is UGB not playing now that you believe it needs to do in order to better serve students?

Tell why you believe you are better qualified than your opponents to be a member of UGB.

Joseph Claeys

Major: Industrial psychology
Under this year's leadership, the UGB has changed its constitution to include involvement with the strategic-planning aspect of the Union management. This is a positive move in the right direction, and next year's members should capitalize on this change to better serve the students.

Proven leadership as a UGB member this past year, I have gained useful knowledge into the innerworkings of the Union management. One important issue that I have been working on is the student response board. Jack Connaughton said it would probably be installed some time this summer.

Michael Smith

Major: Nuclear engineering
I feel that UGB should work to serve the students' needs, be open to new ideas and strive to improve current services.

I am more qualified because I am an active student willing to serve the students' needs. I would like to see the Union become accessible to more students by allowing food to be brought in for special cultural events. I also wish to maintain the college atmosphere within the Union.

Chris Nelson

Major: Economics
I feel that UGB should work to promote itself as a voice for student and faculty concerns. UGB should also work to develop proactive policies.

Through UGB, I want to be more involved in policy-making decisions within the Union. I am a member of Union Program Council and have gained insight in the development and execution of Union programs. I have served on my living group's judiciary board, which has given me good decision-making ability.

David Foster

What, if any, role is UGB not playing now that you believe it needs to do in order to better serve students?

Tell why you believe you are better qualified than your opponents to be a member of UGB.

Major: Milling science
UGB should be more involved with pricing policy and remodeling. I think some items are overpriced and rooms need new carpet and furniture.

I have one year experience on Union Program Council, and I have been a student for four years. I have ideas on how to improve the Union. I would like to see UGB have a marquee installed to improve communication and a student discount on clothing.

Troy Purinton

Major: Math and economics
I believe that the Union Governing Board needs to make itself more accessible to the students' needs and desires: i.e., suggestion boxes, student forums, etc.

During my time here at KSU, I have realized what a great place it is. I am willing to spend the time necessary to make your student union even better. Having been a former employee in the Union, I am ready and willing to accept this new challenge.

Nikka Hellman

Major: Psychology
UGB needs to have more contact with students, and we can accomplish this goal by talking directly with students and addressing their needs and ideas.

I am already an active member of Union Program Council because of my interest in Union programs. I use the Union every day and would like to see change occur. I have the time, experience and dedication to carry out students' ideas for change, improvement and additions.

Union Governing Board: Two Years

►Vote
for two.

What, if any, role is UGB not playing now that you believe it needs to do in order to better serve students?

Tell why you believe you are better qualified than your opponents to be a member of UGB.

Richard Keller

Major: Architectural engineering
UGB needs to promote aggressive marketing of Union services to students and provide research information on student needs to food services.

I have experience in running retail operations and in managing physical operations of large buildings. I understand personnel issues involved in keeping a staff working effectively. My strong consumer interest with my previous work experience will help keep the UGB focused on improving Union services.

Trent LeDoux

Major: Animal sciences and industry
Students need to see more return for their money. I'm open to new ideas and programs, as long as fees do not increase.

New ideas are a dime a dozen. We need someone who will look at all sides of the issue objectively. I believe that I am that someone.

Mathea Waldman

Major: Nutrition and exercise science
I would like to see UGB solicit input from a wider base of students that are concerned, and make some beneficial additions to our Union.

I am involved with a large group of students because of my job as staff in the halls. I am also open-minded and like to work with a long-term beneficial goal when I solve problems. These give me an advantage because I like to work for and with people.

Board of Student Publications

►Vote
for four.

The role of a Board of Student Publications is one that many students understand only partly. Describe how you can educate students about the board.

Tell why you are qualified to serve on the board.

Tim Stevens

Major: Computer engineering
Write-in candidate
The best way to educate students of the board's functions is to publish in the Collegian a summary of the minutes for every meeting.

Students should write my name on the ballot because I believe we should have an active voice in the creation of our newspaper and yearbook. I also believe the Collegian should accurately disseminate information and provide us a forum to explore opposing views on a wide spectrum of issues.

Robert Proctor

Major: Architecture
This is true but I feel that I can make the office wider known by the amount of people I come in contact with.

In the past, I have served on many committees, clubs, and also Student Senate. I also will be a fifth-year senior during my term, giving me the long-term knowledge an office of this kind should be held by.

Shane Keyser

Major: Journalism and mass communications
Write-in candidate
I think publishing an advertisement in the Collegian explaining the Board of Student Publications' duties and powers would be the most effective way to inform the students about the board.

After serving for two years as a desk editor and photographer for Student Publications Inc., I feel I have an understanding of how the various publications operate. Having this knowledge will be very beneficial in selecting responsible people to run the editorial and advertising sides not only of the Collegian, but also the Royal Purple.

Senator office hours and the openness and times of SGA meetings should be advertised. This would encourage student involvement and help solve communication difficulties.

In 50 words or less, what makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Finishing my second year at K-State, I feel that many issues are not being addressed by SGA. It seems that debate focuses on the few and not the many. As a member of the many, I could bring a fresh perspective to SGA and help to improve all of KSU.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have extensive experience and demonstrated leadership skills. I have an understanding of the needs of the students of the College of Human Ecology. I will give ideas and enthusiasm and will show unmatched commitment for this job. I believe the students of human ecology will be well represented by myself as one of their K-State senators.

I feel that I am qualified through my experience as a Senate intern this year. I am a good candidate through my involvement with SGA, such as: Academic Affairs Committee, Lafene Ad Hoc Committee and KSU Lobby Day. I want to voice my college's opinion with a sense of integrity.

I would place numerous suggestion boxes around campus for students to voice their opinions. SGA responses would then be posted in appropriate areas.

Major: Elementary education and speech pathology
Write-in candidate

I plan to improve Student Senate relations by publishing monthly newsletter for education majors and by holding forums for education majors run by education senators.

Major: Secondary education

Right now, it is required that senators do two visitations during their term. These are always done during the second semester, usually after election. We should require more visitations in both semesters of a senators term.

Major: Secondary education

SGA should publicize senators' office hours in the Collegian, increase public forums and visit organizations more frequently. Occasionally, Senate should be held in a public setting.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

My involvement both in an out of the college puts me in contact with many other students, informing me of their opinions and ideas. If I am elected, I will accept the responsibility and work involved to best represent you as a COE senator.

Education senators need to, first, represent education majors and, second, represent the student body. I have the qualities to get things accomplished and therefore make a difference. I have a deep desire to represent my fellow education majors. I would ask they they write me in on April 13 and 14.

I am the only education senator running for re-election. This term, I have worked hard on legislation and committees dealing with issues like parking, Lafene Health Center and SGA incorporation. As a returning senator, I will be able to continue the work started this term, beginning with Lafene Health Center's $2.3 million reserve.

I don't want to be a senator to build my resume. I intend to work to communicate with students so that I represent them, not make decisions for them. In Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, I have gained Senate experience that will allow me to contribute in Senate immediately.

Improved communication between SGA elected officials and the student body is a recurring theme. Tell how you plan to improve it.

Major: Secondary education

I am in favor of the idea to wear name tags on campus to distinguish myself as a senator, also to hold forums in my college.

Major: Secondary education

Effective communications can be attained through dedicated representation. This entails attendance at college council meetings, issue awareness between faculty and SGA, as well as living groups.

Major: Secondary education

The communication gap between SGA and students could be improved by utilizing the Chalkboard, student group interactions and possibly a newsletter.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I served this year as an intern in SGA. I know how things get done. However, being an intern, I had no voting privileges. I have several good, new, fresh ideas to make SGA better.

My dedicated involvement within the College of Education has given me a voice of positive change and development. My abilities as a leader encompass the idea that every student should be encouraged to participate in the progression toward success. Experience counts, but so does the desire to get everyone involved.

Through my involvement in College of Education organizations and activities, I have had extensive experiences working with students for students. I feel I have good insight on enhancing our representation in student senate in order to focus on students for students.

Major: Accounting

My phone number will be available to those who have new, creative and innovative ideas for the College of Business, as well as Kansas State University.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

By being actively involved with different organizations, I have improved my leadership and listening skills so that I can better serve the business students at K-State, and represent them the way they should be represented at this university. I feel that these are important attributes for a student senator.

Debating and compromising issues is what goes into making a good senator. I've learned to compromise through the groups I've been involved in and have the experience of debating the issues through debate and forensics. Vote for someone who can get your ideas pushed through. Vote Chuck Haynes, student senator!

I have held various leadership positions throughout my college career. I am very dedicated to the College of Business, and I strive for not only what is good for the college, but what is best for the college. I will fulfill the duties of office responsibly and effectively.

Clayton Wheeler

Major: International marketing
Group visitations, published senator contact lists and a weekly section in the Collegian of senators views on pertinent issues should improve communication between senators and students.

Jerry Elkins

Major: Accounting and international marketing
I feel a section in the Collegian informing the students at each weeks Senate activities and upcoming activities could be one solution to our communication problem.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

After serving the student body for a full term as a business senator, I feel that my experience as well as willingness to listen are my strongest qualifications. Student concerns are my top priority.

Currently, as a senate intern and Finance Committee member, I have experienced the long meetings, hard work and listening skills it takes to represent constituent concerns. Interning for Speaker of the House Robert Miller this semester, I have made several legislative connections, which could be valuable to KSU.

I have served two terms in Senate, one as an intern and one as a business senator. During my terms, I have gained an unsurpassable amount of experience and knowledge. I have served on the Finance Committee and as the personnel selections coordinator. My personality, experience and desire for the position will make me an excellent choice for Senate.

I think that my past leadership positions, ability to communicate with people and confident personality allows me not only to convey my thoughts in Student Senate, but also the thoughts of those that make up the student body.

A proverb. Dorian says: The problem of communication lies with the individual. If this person does nothing, then the constituents will know nothing.

Major: Finance and MIS
To improve communication, I believe that there should be more referendums for the more controversial issues.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I feel I am more qualified to represent my college because I am open-minded and willing to listen to all sides of an issue. When voting I will try to keep the interest of the College of Business students in mind.

I am currently a junior who is active in several organizations, and I am eager to serve fellow students in the College of Business. I feel my experience has given me the opportunity to talk with classmates and hear what they expect from Senate. I know I can meet their expectations.

I make no claim to be more qualified than my opponents; and my opponents are in no position to say that they are more qualified than I. We are students, not distinguished politicians.

I have served on Student Senate for some time now, and I believe I have gained adequate knowledge of the issues that face this campus. I believe I have enough insight to serve the students in their best interests.

Pat Yayaphat

Major: Architectural engineering
I would section off an area in the Collegian for issues that will be discussed in the next session and ask for reader input.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

As a current senator serving on the Academic Affairs Committee, I have represented student views on issues such as the minors program and plus/minus grading. This, combined with experience on Engineering Student Council, give me both the knowledge and desire to serve my peers as a student senator.

My participation in campus organizations and SGA has given me the leadership and communication skills necessary to research and represent the concerns and needs of engineering students. I have watched the student fee allocation process the last two years, and I assure you that our money will be spent wisely.

In the past year, I have served our campus well with my time and dedication by becoming active in the engineering community. I'm willing to listen to the concerns of my peers and thus apply their concerns to my decision-making. I believe I can serve engineering students completely and professionally.

I present a new line of thought — the student body is SGA's greatest asset. For too long, I have felt SGA wishes to be viewed as the campus' greatest asset, above the student body. I want to work with students for improvements.

Unlike some of my opponents, I've worked in the field of my major. So, I have some insight on what the industry is looking for. This insight is most important when I vote on an issue. I have to understand pros and cons affecting my college.

Major: Architectural engineering
I feel that encouraging more student input and participation in SGA is important as well as dedicated time to discuss issues with the students on a one-on-one basis.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I'm more qualified because I have a fresh outlook, dedication and a commitment to improve Student Senate, its relations, purpose and effectiveness. I believe that I can bring change to an area of service that has become stagnated in the past several years. Vote Rodney Baxter for change!

I feel I'm more qualified than my opponents because I have already served one year on Senate and have the experience it takes to serve my college. I'm very active in many campus organizations, which gives me the chance to receive insight on issues, which may hit the floor during Senate meetings.

I plan to be accessible to students. I will spend time listening to my peers and conveying their ideas and concerns to the Student Senate. I will draw on my experience as president of Goodnow Hall and president of an Engineering Cluster Floor to represent the College of Engineering.

One role of an engineer is to be of service to others. That same role should hold true for senators. Since I find it enjoyable and challenging to listen and be of service to others, I think I can best serve the students of engineering as well as represent them.

I'm really nice guy, and I believe in change, especially dimes and quarters.

I believe the best way to improve communication is by getting involved in college and organizations. This type of involvement stimulates student concern in campus issues.

Trent LeDoux

Major: Animal science and industry

If I am elected, I will hold monthly informational meetings with students and faculty in the College of Agriculture. Communication is a two-way street.

My strongest suit is my knowledge of the legislative process. I am experienced in government, and I firmly believe that I would be an asset in the Senate. I hope to put these traits to work in the area of fee decreases. With responsible budgeting, we can do this.

Karin Erickson

Major: Agriculture Economics

As Agriculture Council President, my most valuable feedback came from visiting with students individually or in small groups. I will continue seeking students' opinions.

Having served the college council as vice president and president, I'm in touch with the direction of and problems facing ag students and programs. I've worked closely with college and University administration and understand student government. Furthermore, I'm not afraid to take a stand on the students and cast a vote for those I represent rather than myself.

Sherry Ahlgrim

Major: Animal sciences and industry

Improving SGA "Question of the Week" and having SGA officials speak to organizations are two of many ways I suggest to improve SGA-student communication.

I've already been actively involved in Senate committee work. So, I'm ready to use my experience to be a spokesperson for your interests. I pay my own tuition and living expenses. So, I have a solid interest in us, as K-State students, getting the most for our money.

Allison Mahoney

Major: Animal sciences and industry

I plan to publicize my office hour to agriculture students and provide postcards addressed to myself for constituents to contribute comments and ideas.

There are many qualified candidates, and I choose not to categorize myself as more qualified than anyone. However, my qualifications extend beyond my SGA experience and leadership skills. I possess a dedication to and an enthusiasm about Kansas State University that all but ensures my effectiveness as an elected official.

Mark Whitson

Major: Agribusiness and animal sciences and industry

Quantity and variety of students and faculty contacted is crucial in communication improvement. Time constraints effect this process. Improved time management of senators is my solution.

My direct involvement with most of the College of Agriculture's departments will be my biggest asset as your senator. I am seeking degrees in both agribusiness and animal sciences and industry while working in Throckmorton Hall, which involves agronomy and plant pathology. I'm also in several campus organizations, which encompass all ag departments.

Lysa Holladay

Major: Animal science

Senators need to be accessible through their classes, office hours, activities and a possible SGA section in the Collegian. Positive, helpful attitudes are the key.

Scott Rottinghaus

Major: Biology and chemical science

I will talk with my constituents and address their concerns and needs while pressing for increased communication and public forums with Arts and Sciences Council.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Over the past two years, my experiences here at K-State have made a great impact on me. I have received so much from the school, and now I would like to give something back. As a senator, I would work hard to represent you to the best of my ability.

Being re-elected, I will continue to vote against all student fee increases because students should not pay for what they are not using. The ability to communicate these ideas on the floor of Senate is vital, and with my strong foundation in public speaking, communication will be my objective.

Having spent the last year as an ambassador to the College of Arts and Sciences, I've had the opportunity to work very closely with issues affecting both the college and its students. Having experienced the college from both the inside and as a student, I feel well equipped to represent it.

The attribute that makes me the most qualified is dedication. If elected, I would work hard to make the activities of the SGA beneficial to my constituents. I would establish a solid communication line between the student and the student government.

First thing — I'm one of two non-greek women currently in Senate. Only two! So it's important off-campus and residence hall students have a voice in Senate. Second thing — the minors program is kind of my baby. So, I'd like to stick around and nurture it to toddlerhood. Vote Wild Turkeel!

Honestly, I am not more "qualified" than other candidates. Sure, I have held leadership positions in numerous activities, possess a decent GPA and have some inspiring ideas, but most opponents also possess these characteristics. I, however, am generally interested in my college. Desire is my greatest attribute.

Serving as the current president of Arts and Sciences Student Council, I have extensive experience in student government. Having led Student Council to become more active and responsive to students, I will put my experience and dedication to work for the students of arts and sciences as a student senator.

Brent Coverdale

Students must be allowed to vote on the fee increases they will have to pay. Also, the Collegian could print simple progress reports on issues like parking.

Jeffrey J. Martin

Major: Anthropology

I will distribute a weekly report and make myself available with office hours, and via telephone and E-mail. Other senators should do the same.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I am more qualified to represent arts and sciences students because of my experience in student government. As a two-term senator, I have worked hard for K-State students. I have helped lobby for K-State needs at the state Capitol. I have also voted against many fee increases, including the athletic fee.

I am currently involved in Senate as an intern. This has allowed me to learn how the Senate works and how to use it to initiate change. As ASK campus director, I have had the opportunity to represent K-State and other regent schools in Topeka.

I'm most qualified for the position because I have two years leadership experience in student government and other campus organizations. My votes on student issues are based on extensive research and how my constituents feel. I consistently vote to keep fees down while maintaining quality in student services. Call 532-5301 with questions and suggestions.

A varied background of activities and experiences enables me to relate to most everyone in some way. I am eager to communicate and work with the student body and their representatives, to listen to their suggestions and ideas and do my best to implement them.

As a reporter and columnist for the Collegian, I've had the opportunity for a closer perspective on campus issues. And as a minimum wage earner throughout much of college, I know what it's like to need cash. I guess I want to hold the credit card for a while.

Like all candidates, I care about K-State and where my money goes. However, I refuse to make promises I can't keep. I quote Bernard Baruch: "Vote for the man who promises least. He'll be the least disappointing." I can only promise to be a hard-working voice for the students.

Volunteering on an ambulance and fire service taught me to think fast and be prepared. Working with many organizations has developed my consensus-making skills, necessary for today's diverse campus with people of different ages, ethnicities and family situations. I am practical problem solving for all students.

I would like to see a monthly open forum for any student who has a concern to come and voice their views straight to us.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

I have had two years of experience on the Finance Committee. I feel I adequately understand the fee structure and will be able to work effectively towards developing long-term priorities for student government that truly serve student. I am prepared to stand for in-depth reviews of current fees.

I'd be more qualified than my opponents because I'm willing to listen to the students. This doesn't always occur. Student Senate's job is to represent students, and that's what my goal would be. I have been around Senate for a year now, and I know what needs to be done.

Most opponents are only running in order to put something on a resume. I'm not. I care about every issue Senate faces, not just because they affect me personally, but also this school in which I have a vested interest. My experience is beneficial for effective representation of the student body.

I am currently a senator, and I am very knowledgeable about current issues in Student Senate. I am a very organized and responsible person and I enjoy working with student government.

Next year will be my fifth year, and I have seen countless promises not being carried out for various reasons. As an active member of residence hall government, I have learned the importance of carrying through on promises. I will bring that same commitment to Student Senate.

I believe that having an open mind is critical. One must be willing to listen. I am ready to do this. Representatives should act on behalf of their constituents, not pursue their own agenda. If you are ready to talk, I am ready to listen.

I was a Student Environmental Action Coalition National Council Representative, 1991-1992. I helped budget over $400,000; built my region's coalition from 15 to over 60 member groups; represented these groups to the National Council by getting their input and ideas before each meeting. I am off-campus and non-greek, Senate's least-represented group.

My participation in campus organizations has given me the leadership and communication skills necessary to hear and represent the opinions of arts and sciences students. By watching fees carefully, I intend to give K-Staters the best experience possible for their money.

I believe that my desire to learn as much as I can about Kansas State qualifies me for Senate. My desire to learn will help me teach other students about Kansas State, so that all people have a desire to be involved in student government.

Last year, I served as as Senate intern. Doing that, I was fortunate enough to be a part of this organization. This gave me the opportunity to learn the inner workings of SGA. Serving on Finance Committee gave me added exposure to all the different groups and their problems.

Improved communication between SGA elected officials and the student body is a recurring theme. Tell how you plan to improve it.

Major: English
Too often, after elections, many senators disappear, never to be heard from again. If elected, I'll encourage all senators to remain accessible the entire term.

Major: Economics
I would rely on constituent approval before voting on key issues and will always have an open ear for students who want to discuss issues.

Thomas True

Major: Radio-television
Communication is important, and it goes two ways. That is why I would take time to visit each department. Not as a guest of the department, but as the representative of the

Jocelyn Viterna

Major: Pre-law, sociology and Latin American studies
A tentative agenda, including phone numbers of senator contacts for each issue should be submitted to the Collegian for student input before the Senate vote.

Stan Stadig

Major: Biology
Through campus mail I would contact everyone I represent to let them know they can reach me with their concerns.

Tyler Brock

Major: Psychology
I plan to improve SGA-student body communication by advertising the Student Senate hotline and posting the office hours of the senators.

Paul Bridges

Major: Social work
At the start of the next semester, I will announce myself as a student senator in my classes and welcome people to approach me with problems or suggestions on any Senate matter.

Liz Ring

Major: History and pre-medicine
I want the Collegian to list the senator's office hours, telephone numbers and the SGA hotline. Additionally, I want to increase public forums and visitations.

David Norris

Major: Pre-med
I would like to see a weekly questionnaire in the Collegian that asks students what their feelings are on the issues at hand.

What makes you more qualified to represent your college than your opponents?

Through my quest for a major, I've sampled a variety of classes throughout our college. Through this, I believe I've established a good rapport with many students. I feel most would agree I'm approachable and not afraid to stand up for what I believe in, however ridiculous it may seem.

I believe that I would be an asset to the student body because of my leadership skills and ability to communicate and reach decisions. If elected, I would assure accountability and see that Kansas State University students are fairly represented not only at K-State, but also at the state level.

In order to serve my college a person must have vision. They must be able to see what is best for the higher good. Arts and sciences is so diverse that only people with real drive can serve it well. I feel that my experience before I attended Kansas State has helped to prepare me for this office. The students of arts and sciences need a person who can get things done.

My internship in the state Capitol has given me a solid understanding of the serious issues facing KSU in the next year — qualified admissions, the Chronister Plan and tuition increases. Combining this with my experience as an arts and sciences ambassador will aid communication between KSU students and the Legislature.

To be qualified to represent the diversity of students you must have experience in service, leadership and scholarship. I have served in the community S.A.V.E. and Mentor Programs, I have experience as a leader in my fraternity and on campus and am involved in honoraries and clubs in my major.

Experience. All through high school I was involved in political and governmental activities. I also was student body president for two consecutive years. Here at KSU, I've also been involved. This year I was a Student Senate intern, and I have been selected to serve on the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee next year. I have the skills and knowledge to be a good senator.

I have been involved in leadership positions since being at K-State and also before coming to K-State. This leadership ability and experience will allow me to be an effective and efficient student representative. Also, the fact that I am dedicated to doing what the students want, I will listen, hear and then act!

A senator must be dedicated, hardworking and organized. I believe I possess these qualities as well as experience. I served as a Senate intern and as a member of the communications committee this year. This gave me the chance to learn and observe how the governing body operates.

There are many qualities which a senator needs to be successful. They are determination, strong leadership, persuasiveness, creativity, innovation and remaining open to suggestions. I have all of these traits. I will listen to the students and make the decisions that they want. After all, it is Student Senate.

L.A. troops prepare for worst

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Barricades went up around the courthouse, and Marines practiced storming a town Tuesday as the fourth day of jury deliberations began in the Rodney King beating case.

Sketch artists were admonished by U.S. District Judge John Davies, who said they were too accurate for comfort in their portrayals of the anonymous jury deciding the fate of four police officers accused of violating King's civil rights.

"Any drawings of jurors or alternates must contain minimal detail and must not render them recognizable," the judge wrote in a court order posted in the courthouse press room.

The city, meanwhile, moved to bolster security.

A crane lowered 3-foot-high concrete barriers into place outside the federal building, blocking the entrance to crowds and vehicles, and a chain-link fence went up around a parking lot across the street. Police said it would be used as a staging area.

"This is part of our preparedness program," Lt. John Dunkin said.

About 600 National Guard troops trained at armories in Inglewood, Burbank, Glendale, Los Alamitos, Van Nuys and Arcadia.

"California guardsmen have been instructed that they are to use any means at their disposal to protect themselves or any other citizen if they are in threat of human death," Maj. Gen. Tandy Bozeman said.

Another military contingent was training 80 miles to the south. About 1,000 Marines at Camp Pendleton stormed a mock town as part of a "just in case" urban assault exercise.

"The 3rd Battalion, 9th Marine Regiment is on standby for any problem up there, and this is a state-of-the-art training facility for them," Cpl. Rick Laemmle, a base spokesman, said.

Hours after Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell and Theodore Briseno and former Officer Timothy Wind were acquitted of most charges in a state trial last April, the city erupted in violence that left 54 people dead and caused $1 billion in damage.

Police, under the leadership of former Chief Daryl F. Gates, were criticized for their delayed response to the unrest, but new Chief Willie Williams has promised protection for the city's 3.6 million residents.

"People need to be calm rather than seeing pictures of men crawling over tanks and armored vehicles," defendant Powell said. Some activists condemned the military and police buildup.

"We think that it's important that people have a continued opportunity to voice opposition," B. Kwaku Duren, activist lawyer, said.

In South Central Los Angeles, U.S. Rep. Maxine Waters handed out letters in her district saying, "It's time to chill."

"If you take to the streets with a Molotov cocktail in your hand, a gun in your belt or a brick ready to throw, you give the police the legal right to kill you," the letters read.

Ballot baffles students

Campaign repetition, eight tickets challenges voters

WADE SISSON
Collegian

So many names, but only one vote.

Having eight tickets on the ballot for student body president and vice president has made voting a challenge for many of the 1,723 voters who turned out Tuesday.

"Last year, there were only a few candidates," Brad Hammond, junior in milling science, said. "There are too many names."

Several voters said perhaps having so many candidates brings the election and the issues to the forefront on campus.

"It brings some awareness, having some campaigns that are just there for the hell of it," Darin Siefkes, freshman in business, said.

Some voters said they had trouble distinguishing one ticket from the rest.

"They all say the same thing. So, it is kind of confusing," Britt Shipley, junior in agribusiness, said.

Many of the voters Monday said they based their votes on which candidate they knew either as a friend or through candidate forums.

"Most of them I hadn't heard much about, except for the ones that talked to us," Joseph Cottam, senior in milling science, said.

Jana Denning, senior in political science and speech, said she voted for a friend, paying very little attention to the campaign.

"Except for the Wal-Mart thing," she said. "That was kind of odd."

Improved communication between the Student Governing Association and the students has been a prominent issue throughout the campaign.

"I think it's a great idea," Jill Hewins, senior in accounting, said. "That's the sole purpose of the student governing union, or whatever it's called."

Several candidates have suggested an SGA hotline might be a way to improve communication, but some voters

Minors program to grace K-State

Faculty Senate enables students to declare by 1994

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Faculty Senate unanimously passed a bill for an academic minors program at K-State Tuesday.

Nancy McFarlin, chairwoman of the Academic Affairs Committee, introduced the bill to Senate.

"The major benefit will be getting recognition for a set of courses many students are taking anyway," McFarlin said.

A minors program also will benefit the University and its departments, she said.

"Departments will be able to define areas for them that the department feels is the core of their discipline," McFarlin said.

For instance, if the College of Business thinks it is imperative for a student to have five specific classes to understand marketing, it can incorporate those classes into its minors program.

Students will be able to formally declare a minor by the spring of 1994, but according to Senate, chances are slim for a minors program to be officially approved by that time.

It is possible, though, that within six to 10 months some departments may have minors programs in place.

By that time, the Office of the Registrar and other University offices will have the capability to record and keep track of students' declared minors.

McFarlin, on behalf of the Academic Affairs Committee, recommended acceptance of the motion for several reasons.

Currently, there are option programs at K-State, which are not noted on student's transcripts, McFarlin said.

Students are also enrolling in handbook about which classes will qualify for minors.

The bill, as it is written, gives departments and students flexibility concerning minors.

Departments will not be required to implement a minors program nor will students be required to declare a minor. The bill will allow departments that are not ready to develop a minors program to have that option at a later date.

A question was raised about whether advising would be required for students to be eligible for a minors program. There were also questions as to whether a student could obtain a minor on their transcript without

Multicultural course sought

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

The second trial of four police officers involved in the Rodney King beating has added a sense of urgency to the need for a required multicultural course at K-State.

As a result, Laura Vetter, junior in philosophy, presented a petition signed by 500 students to Faculty Senate Tuesday.

The diversity overlay would be a range of courses addressing issues such as culture, ethnicity, race and gender, intending to give students a background in multiculturalism.

Marion Gray, professor in history and arts-and-sciences faculty senator, said the idea was suggested to President Jon Wefald in the fall of 1991 by the commission on multicultural affairs.

Gray said even though some courses have to be cut because of funding, this new requirement is important to pursue.

"The issue of diversity is very important," he said.

► WEFALD HONORS DEBATE TEAM FOR NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

The K-State debate team was honored for its second national championship at a luncheon with University President Jon Wefald Tuesday.

"K-State debate team is quickly becoming a dynasty. The record we've built up in years past is second to none," Wefald said. Susan Stanfield, debate coach, said support was a key to the great success this year and in the past.

"At K-State, we have stable support from the administration and also the speech department, which allows three graduate assistants to help coach," she said.

The national winners were Jill Baisinger, senior in history and Spanish, and K.J. Wall, senior in speech.

"I'm very happy. It's what I've strived for over the years. The goal was just win it all," Wall said.

Wall also said he compared the tournament to that of the NCAA basketball tournament.

"After each round, it got harder and harder, and the group we reached in the finals was considered the best," Wall said.

► INFECTED DOCTORS UNLIKELY TO GIVE AIDS VIRUS TO PATIENTS

CHICAGO — New research supports previous conclusions by AIDS experts that the chance of contracting the virus from infected doctors or dentists is remote.

More than 2,500 patients were treated by two AIDS-infected surgeons and a dentist without catching the virus, according to studies appearing in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

A preventive medicine expert who did not participate in the research said the studies should have looked at people with the virus whose infections couldn't be traced to other sources.

"If you are aggressively looking for transmission, you have to start from the other side," said Dr. William Schaffner, chairman of preventive medicine at Vanderbilt University School of Medicine.

ON THE AGENDA

Alcohol decision on hold until fallMARK JONES
Collegian

K-State's Association of Residence Halls will not make any changes to its alcohol policy this year.

KSUARH President Tim Stevens said there was not enough time to make changes to the policy before the end of the semester.

The present alcohol policy allows only 3.2 percent cereal malt beverage in containers smaller than one quart.

A committee was formed by KSUARH in March to look at the possibility of changing the policy.

The committee was started after organizers of Yakfest, a dance at Marlatt Hall, asked for the policy to be changed to allow larger containers at hall functions if the hall's governing board approved.

The committee decided to wait until the fall semester to decide on a policy, Stevens said.

"We want to make the best decision possible," he said.

Any policy changes need to be checked by the University attorney to determine liability issues and compliance with state laws. They also have to be checked to make sure it is within Student Governing Association and University policies, he said.

Marcia Hellwig, KSUARH president-elect, said it is impossible to make any changes now because there will be only one more meeting of KSUARH, and policies can not be changed in a single meeting.

However, she said she does want the committee to start looking now at possible changes that can be made in the fall.

Stevens said he does expect changes to be initiated next semester, and making the changes will be controversial.

CORRECTION

In Tuesday's Collegian it was inaccurately reported that Pam Barnes made a complaint against the Charles Walters presidential campaign.

The complaint was originally made by Caroline Coon, a Department of Housing and Dining Services employee, about door-to-door campaigning at Jardine Terrace Apartments.

While investigating that complaint, Barnes, who serves as a co-advisor from the dean of student life office to the SGA Election Committee, discovered Walters' failure to list $20 on his expenditure report.

This led to the Walters campaign being called before the election committee. He was allowed to remain on the ballot.

The Collegian regrets the error.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. What is financial aid?

A. Financial aid is money available to you and your family to help pay for educational expenses. Its purpose is to supplement, not replace, the amount you and your family pay to meet your total educational expenses.

Q. How do I know what my "need" figure will be?
What does my EFC mean?

A. The Federal Government calculates your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) by using a formula established by Congress. Your EFC is based on the information you entered on your Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Your EFC will be the same no matter where you attend college because the same formula is used by all schools throughout the nation. After K-State determines the total cost of education or budget for you, the EFC is subtracted from this amount and the result is your "need" figure. For example:

COST OF EDUCATION	$8000
MINUS EFC	-2000
=FINANCIAL NEED	$6000

If the cost of education is $8000 and your EFC is $2000, you will be eligible for $6000 in need-based financial aid. Your financial need would be met with a financial aid package that combines federal grants, loans, work-study, or K-State scholarships.

Q. What is the difference between grants and loans?

A. •Federal grants, available to students who meet financial need requirements, are funds that do not have to be repaid.
•Federal loans let you borrow money for college at low interest rates. Loans are paid back after you finish college.
•K-State scholarships are awards for students who excel in academic areas, activities, or sports or who have financial "need." They do not have to be repaid.
•Federal work-study jobs give you spending money and work experience. This need-based award allows you to work 10-20 hours per week.

Q. If I didn't qualify for financial aid last year, should I still apply?

A. YES! Even though the priority deadline of March 15th is past, you should still apply for financial assistance. Congress has changed the needs analysis formula, and this will make some students eligible for 1993-94 that were ineligible for 1992-93. Some important changes are as follows:
• The limits of adjusted gross income that a family can earn have increased.
• Home asset values are no longer reported or considered in the formula.
• Farm assets are no longer reported or considered in the formula if the family resides on the farm.
• If the parents and student file either a 1040EZ or 1040A and the parents' adjusted gross income is under $50,000, ALL assets are excluded from the formula for both parents and student.

Striking a deal

story by Lynn Anderson

The rainy weather failed to dampen the spirit of the Ironworkers Union, whose members picketed for the second day at Throckmorton Hall's construction site.

"We'll be here," Delbert Ubel, appointed steward for the group, said. "It could last a year."

Awaiting the new contract decisions, about six ironworkers are collaborating locally to implement contract changes for Ironworkers Local No. 10, which is based in Kansas City.

Ironworkers there set up pickets last week at the $130-million Bartle Hall construction site and have since begun picketing at a several other sites, including the $75-million Brush Creek flood control project and a major highway project.

"My information is that the pickets were honored completely," said Joe Moreland, an attorney for Local 10 of the Ironworkers. "That work was shut down."

The workers' contract comes up for renewal every three years, with negotiations ensuing over increasing of wages, working conditions, welfare and pension plans.

The contract with Local 10, representing about 900 workers, expired April 1. The Ironworkers are seeking a wage increase of 82-1/2 cents per hour. The Builders Association, which represents 750 contractors, has offered an increase of 40 cents an hour.

The Ironworkers and the Builder's Association each asked for a federal mediator to intervene.

Negotiations are taking place in Kansas City, Mo., with the Ironworkers Local No. 10 combining efforts with the Builders Association of Missouri and Kansas on the new contract. The BAMK organization provides for a large number of the contractors in Missouri and Kansas City.

Although the Throckmorton picketers have been without contract since April 1, they waited until April 12 to strike to see if an agreement might be made.

"We give them a chance before we go on strike," Ubel said.

Without the workers, there had been talk of hiring non-union workers to continue the task of laying down the iron reinforcement necessary for the building's creation.

"If they hire scabs from off the street, they're getting poor quality, and it'll take a lot longer to build the building," he said.

Superintendent of the site, Mike Stanley, said while the union steel workers were doing a good job as a sub-contractor of his, the $21-million Throckmorton will still be finished as scheduled in fall 1994.

Ubel said he thought the results of one-day picketing had already proved advantageous to the ironworkers.

"Several more contractors are signing agreements in Kansas City," Ubel said.

Both Ubel and Stanley said they believed the strike's duration would be cut short, anticipating an agreement among both sides relatively soon.

"We're hoping it ends today," Stanley said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Banning books solves nothing

THE ISSUE

The Marysville school board is considering removing books from school libraries.

WE SUGGEST

Keep the books and teach children a real lesson.

During the years, such classic American novels as "Catcher in the Rye," "Huckleberry Finn," "Slaughterhouse Five" and the "Wizard of Oz" have found their way off library shelves and straight into the trash can.

Add a new chapter in the battle to keep books on and off the shelf.

USD 364 in Marysville first decided to bum-rush its way through proceedings to remove six novels by pulp author Ken Follett from its high school and junior high libraries. These books will never be classics in literature, but that's besides the point. In their hasty action, the school board ignored policy that involves actually reading the marked books.

According to the school's policy on book banning, any material it deemed unsavory is to be first submitted to the school superintendent, who then informs the board. A faculty committee is then chosen, and the material is reviewed. The books are read, and after a long review process a decision is made.

In this instance, the minister of the Victory Baptist Church in Marysville recommended the books be banned because of offensive content. A move was recommended to pull the books by a board member. The decision was passed, and the books were removed.

All this happened in one meeting.

Thankfully, the decision has been changed, and the board members have decided to read the books before tossing them on the bonfire.

However, the fact remains that there are people out there who want to tell others what they can and can't read.

Here's a better idea for USD 364 — keep the books and teach your children something infinitely more important than dirty words: the idea that they live in a free country with real freedoms.

The Parent

"Well, you're not sick. You're pregnant."

The surprise pregnancy. A scary thought for any sexually-active person. A miracle for any sexually-active queer.

Being gay does have its advantages. One wild night of passion can't lead to a lifetime reminder. Skipping a period doesn't mean the little one is on its way.

But what about the gay man or lesbian who does want a child? There certainly are options. Intercourse, which may be harder than actually raising the child. Imagine if you're a heterosexual and, in order to have a child, you would have to have intercourse with somebody of the same sex. Awful lot of visualization classes may be needed before the big moment.

Adoption is an option in the broadest, most optimistic, of definitions. Same-gender couples adopting a child have anything but a romantic experience, particularly here in Kansas. Forms, runarounds, flat-out hate and denial.

That leaves us with one more option. The ol' turkey-baster method. Once again, not too romantic or spiritual.

Cruise down to the local sperm bank, spend the afternoon browsing through the catalog of potential daddies, and then go home and, well, you know. If only Norman Rockwell were around to paint that portrait of America.

But for now that is it, kids. Those are the options.

I've never had a burning desire to be barefoot and pregnant. The thought of having a child quite frankly scares me. It is not that I don't like kids — well actually it is that I don't like kids for the most part — it is just the whole permanence thing. You just can't "sort of" have a child.

Once you have it, there just isn't any getting rid of it. There's the first word, walking, kindergarten, the first car wreck, dating, college, late-night phone calls from jail ... and on and on.

Lately, though, I have found myself much more open to the idea of having a little ball of goo. Maybe it is because it is spring, maybe some sort of growing pain. Hell, it could just be gas.

Aside from the whole miracle component of life, there is something very charming about being able to help shape and mold this little person.

There you are, in complete control of the world that little fella will call home. Creating reality. Being a parent is like being God for the first few years.

To this day I prefer Pepsi to Coke because that is what my parents had around the house. The toilet paper should roll over the top of the roll, never underneath and from the back side. And fresh vegetables are always better than canned.

Ideally, parents would want to give their child an environment from which they could grow and develop on their own. But let's get real. Parents have kids for selfish reasons. They want to continue their lives and leave their legacy.

Parents don't expose children to a myriad of ideas, letting the children determine which ideas suit them the best.

Like decorating a Christmas tree, they dress the things up for church on Sundays. They read them the books they think are the best. They feed them the food they think little kids should eat.

Children are a way for parents to fix their own mistakes. Think about how many times Mommy told you sweets were bad for your health, only to find her snacking on some cookies later that day. Or how you could only watch two hours of television a night. "It's not good for you. Why don't you read a book?" she would quip.

Why don't you read a book? Be it spring, personal growth or whatever, I hope it passes soon. The last thing I want is for some little punk to write a column about me and my quirky parenting skills someday.

KELLY KLAWONN

READERS WRITE

ABORTION

Group denied the freedom to speak

Editor,
I would like to call attention to a recent attack on free speech on our campus.

Students for the Right to Life reserved the banner location by Farrell Library for April 8 and 9. The banner hung there showed three symbols: a slave-auction sign from 1769, a Nazi swastika and a "Keep Abortion Legal" sign. Below these were the words "Three times in modern history the word 'person' has been redefined."

Well, in spite of their right to display this banner, it was ripped down sometime early Friday morning and taken away.

Why was their banner ripped down? What harm was it doing? I think it came down for one reason: It spoke the truth. And someone didn't like that.

That landmark pro-slavery, anti-Semitic and pro-abortion legislation have in common the re-defining of who is a "person" and who is not is a fact that anyone can look up.

In the Dred Scott v. Sandford decision of 1857, it was ruled 7-2 that black people were not legal persons. In 1936, the German Supreme Court, the Reichsgericht, refused to recognize Jews living in Germany as persons in the legal sense. In the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled those still in the womb — blacks, Jews, Native Americans, hispanics, whites, Asian Americans — as not being persons in the legal sense. In the words of Justice Blackmun: "The word 'person,' as used in the Fourteenth Amendment, does not include the unborn."

The fact that our selfish generation has ignored history and condemned our next generation of children to the same dehumanization the blacks and Jews have suffered is an abomination.

It is even more frightening, however, when those who merely bear witness to this terrible truth aren't even given a chance to speak.

RESPONSE

Columnist gets high marks from Rush fan

Editor,
This letter is in response to the article "Square pegs" written by John Hart in the April 13 Collegian.

Bravo, John. Finally, a level-headed columnist supporting his views with fact. I have been thinking almost exactly what you wrote about not being a homophobic bigot, but simply disagreeing with the homosexuals choice to be gay.

I do not hate or fear gays. I just do not agree with them. And I am sick of these people telling me I must like homosexuals. I have every right not to like them. I even have the right to hate them if I choose.

John, you will probably get a bit of mail coming in telling you why you are a homophobic bigot because you are the first to get a conservative view on this subject printed in the paper. Ignore it.

Myself, Rush and millions of other Americans are on your side.

RICHARD ANDRADE

THIS AIN'T NO CIRCUS

I am mocked, mocked by four little kids with big heads and stumpy fingers. Mocked by kids who named their dog Barfy.

I am mocked by Billy, Dolly, Jeffy and P.J. The children of Family Circus hate me, and I hate them. I don't know when this whole thing started, probably when it began to dawn on me that Family Circus was talking to me from pulp newsprint — Billy flipping me off when no one was looking, Jeffy calling me bad names, mean names. They hate me because I've figured out their little la mentira, their big fat lie. The lie that says that nothing is wrong in Family Circus land.

Take Billy, perhaps the most multicultural-aware youth in America, who has a neighborhood friend representing each and every ethnic group in the world, ranging from the Eskimos who live at the house on the corner to the small band of Amazon Indians who just moved into the duplex over on the next block.

But I can hear the protests. "Family Circus is a comic that playfully explores the foibles of family life! It lacks smut! It's wholesome!"

Wholesome, my butt. Family Circus, like fluoride in my drinking water, is scooping the guts out of America and replacing it with substandard lime sherbert. It is a propaganda machine driven by "cartoonist" Bil Keane, whose mission is to turn us into a pablum society, where everyone gives everyone else big Mylar balloons with funny cartoon cats on 'em.

The grating part is, the man doesn't even try to hide it. His is Henry-Ford-Mass-Comic-Production and anyone who has followed FC for even a short period of time knows that there are only four scenarios used by Keane.

1. "Billy Wanders The Neighborhood" — Ah, mischievous Billy. You know what's up when Billy arrives home late to a chagrined parent. Of course, pathological liar that he is, he gets the ball rolling by saying something like "Honest, I came straight home!"

However, Keane's intricately dotted path tells a different story altogether — a clearly marked trail of sliding down other people's slides, petting strange dogs, and just generally making a nuisance of himself. At last count, little Billy could conceivably be charged with 915 separate counts of trespassing — enough to put his derriere in the county lock-up, hiding sharpened spoons in unmentionable places.

2. "Return of the Dead Grandfather/The Not-Me Ghosts" — Keane wastes no opportunity in poisoning easily-influenced innocent minds with favorable references to the occult. Time after time, the shady specter of a long-dead Grandpa appears, often speaking to a living Grandma who is either gifted with supernatural powers (highly doubtful) or is a complete and utter lunatic (very probable).

If visitations by the dead weren't outrageous enough, Keane, a suspected Wiccan, throws in the saucy "Not-Me Ghosts" for good measure. The ghosts are often seen sneaking around the scene of household accidents for which Billy, Dolly, or Jeffy are unjustly accused. As the children are viciously berated by Thel or Bill, one can see a grinning Casper-like "Not-Me Ghost" slipping away from the scene of the crime. It is apparent that the FC house is teeming with poltergeists, and it is only a matter of time before we see blood coming from the faucets or Dolly being levitated out of her bed and flung out into the hall.

3. "Billy Takes Over for His Cop-Out Dad" — Increasingly, Keane has been flaunting child-labor laws by forcing his son, Billy, to draw his Sunday strip while Keane sleeps off the hangover of the the previous night's bacchanal. Billy, who can't draw his way out of a paper bag, ends up desperately relying on his tired trick of crudely illustrating double entendres (i.e. Easter Island — Billy draws an island full of Easter Bunnies. Ha ha.).

4. "Pasghetti" — It is apparently a stipulation in Keane's contract with his distributor that he must have one character mispronounce the word "spaghetti" at least once every ten days. The FC children, whose combined IQ hovers around the level of a melting Fudgesicle, often bandy "cute" mutilations of common English vocabulary. This brazen contempt for our language is no surprise coming from a man who spells his name with only one "l."

"We know what you're up to, buster!"

- ☐ Yes! Count me in on the fight against Family Circus! I am a proud American who treasures properly named pets, correct grammar and the belief that dead people should stay dead!
- ☐ No! I am a cross-dressing social deviant who enjoys Family Circus. My only friend is a canary named Mr. Petey.

Submytion musicians seek auditions, interaction

"A lot of songs were recorded over a long period of time with different members. It's like a collection of Submytion's greatest hits."

TROY SCHUSTER
DRUMMER

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

Sitting in a dining room around a small table, Kansas City-based band Submytion shared its life story.

"A bunch of guys who went to high school together started a band," said Theron Barton, lead singer and only remaining original member.

The name Submytion came from each member putting a name in a hat. The name drawn was Submytion.

The name stayed, but members changed.

Theron and drummer Troy Schuster met each other in college. Troy never had to audition but became a lasting member of the band.

Sound man Kevin "Frosty" Fross started out doing lights for the band.

"I always thought it would be cool to do sound for Submytion, but I never thought I'd do it," Frosty said.

Now they have a light man, John Merryman, whom they met at the Holiday Inn in Topeka, Kan.

Wiz, the bass player, heard Submytion was looking for a bass player from a member from another band and called Troy.

"They saw me play with another band before I talked to him. When I did call, he said he had an audition on Friday and an audition on Sunday and told me to come in and start Monday," Troy said.

The final member of the band is Pauley C., lead guitarist.

"They tried to get me in the band in 1985, but I was going to KU, then I went to GIT (the Guitar Institute of Technology, Hollywood), so I didn't join. Eight years later the offer was still open, so I took it and have been with the band for six months," he said.

The band has taken offers to open for larger acts. Submytion has opened for more than 14 other bands, including Tora Tora, Dream Theater, XYZ, Nelson, Night Ranger, Fog Hat and more.

But they are still playing around the area in Kansas City, Nebraska and South Dakota. They plan to start a Midwest tour this summer. They will play in Manhattan again on May 6, 7 and 8.

They will be selling their compact discs and cassettes also.

"We started with 500 CDs and 500 cassettes," Troy said.

When they played in Manhattan on Easter weekend, they had fewer than 20 left. This was their first release.

"I got the first one out of the box. That was my assignment when I joined the band — learn this. I enjoyed it immensely. Someday it will be a collector's item," Pauley said.

Any other thoughts on the release?

"A lot of songs were recorded over a long period of time with different members. It's like a collection of Submytion's greatest hits," Troy said.

Frosty had his own ideas about the album from a sound man's point of view.

"We had two producers on this album. We have a new album coming out this summer, and we'll be producing it ourselves," he said.

The new album is exciting for the entire band.

"I think the new one is really representative of what we are. It's all the same musicians. It's really heavy," Pauley said.

Theron agreed.

"It is more guitar-oriented."

So with one release out and another one on the way, thoughts of the future come up.

"Hopefully we'll get a record contract," Theron said, then paused.

"We have a deal with Columbia already."

"Not the CD club, Terry," John corrected.

"We only have to buy 8 more CDs in the next three years," Troy said.

Yet, Pauley and Wiz brought in the serious side of the future.

"You can't make plans any further than that. You just have to send out a lot of tapes," Pauley said.

The band members know the future will not be easy.

"I see a lot of fans, a lot of people and a lot of hard work because it ain't all peaches and cream," Wiz said.

There is another serious side to the band, and that is their education. They have a combined seven college degrees within the band.

"We are one of the highest-educated bands in the area," Pauley said.

They joke around a lot, on and off stage, but Wiz said he believes in interaction with the crowd.

"The band is about people, because without them, we'd be a bunch of guys playing with ourselves," he said.

"So many bands don't pay attention to the people. When on stage they do, but off stage they don't. I do both because it should be a convenience to them to be there, not a convenience to me. I really like the interaction — that's why I talk," Wiz said.

The fans are important to them, and to help that interaction they have a newsletter.

"We have about 1,000 names on our mailing list,"

Troy said.

The mailing list is vital, but the band also wants something for their fans.

"We want people to appreciate our music no matter what the light show or anything else is," Frosty said.

Wiz also has some advice for any hecklers who might come to a show.

"My advice to everyone who comes to our show is if you're gonna open your mouth, you better be ready to put something in it, whether it's your foot or your drink, because I'm loaded with comebacks," he said.

Dear K-Stater,

We are running for Student Body President (SBP) and Vice-President (VP). Please take time to read through this short letter outlining our ideas and positions. We think it will be worth your time to do so.

We are running because we are very concerned about ACCOUNTABILITY in three key areas: (1) Student Government should be held accountable for FINANCES; (2) Faculty should be held accountable for their performance; and (3) the SBP and VP should be held accountable to you, the students.

FINANCES

* You should be able to have a say in how much you pay to go to K-State. You'll get it with us in office. We will veto any new student fee or fee increase if you do not approve it in a campus-wide referendum.

* Right now, our student fee money goes directly to the state's bank account, and the state keeps the interest, which is approximately $50,000. We want to incorporate Student Government. Incorporation would allow that $50,000 to stay at K-State.

FACULTY

* You should be able to find out which professors are good and which are poor. You're spending your time and money, so you should have the best. We want to implement mandatory student evaluations of all faculty, and we will publish the results where you can look at them.

* There are too many poor professors at K-State that have tenure. We want to implement a review system so that poor professors will be dismissed.

* You are at KSU to get an education so you can get a job. Good advising is essential to your success. We want to establish standards for advising so that you will be insured of competent advice and plenty of help.

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT/VICE-PRESIDENT

* You should know what we as your elected leaders are up to. We want to work with the Collegian to provide you daily updates and weekly summaries on what student government has done for you.

* You should also have an easy way to communicate your concerns and ideas with us. We will have a forum twice a month where you can talk with us in an open, public place. This forces us to be publicly accountable to you.

OTHER ISSUES

* All of us have lost money at the end of semester book buy-back. We will implement a textbook name-exchange program. If you have a book to sell or buy, we'll put your name, phone number, and the book title in a computer. Then, someone who wants to sell or buy that book can get a printout with your name and phone number. You can then sell or buy the book at a fair price.

* You should be able to declare a minor. We will follow through on getting the minors program implemented as soon as possible.

These issues are what we stand for. We believe that all of these issues will affect you in a positive way and make your K-State education better.

We would appreciate your vote on April 13 and 14 in the Union.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cats head to Kansas Relays

MIKE WELCHANS/Collegian

Ed Broxterman, freshman high jumper, is closely watched by K-State track coach Cliff Rovelto Tuesday afternoon at Ahearn Field House during practice for the KU Relays, which start today in Lawrence.

Only 3 K-Staters will compete in 1st day of events

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State tracksters Troy Adkins, Jason Meredith and Gwen Wentland will be the only Wildcats to compete in the first day of the 71st annual University of Kansas Relays that start today in Lawrence.

Adkins and Meredith will compete in the Jim Bausch Decathlon, while Wentland will compete in the heptathlon.

Track coach Cliff Rovelto said he thinks nearly everyone on the team will compete.

"The men coming into it are pretty healthy, and most of the them are going to be competing," Rovelto said.

"On the women's side, we don't have as near as many athletes that are competing," he said. "We don't have the numbers, but the people that are competing are good."

Rovelto said there are certain areas he is going to watch.

"I've got two concerns — one is that the people who are ready to run fast have a chance to run fast in their individual event," he said. "Secondly, the relay teams that we do have run good, quality races more so than stacking a relay.

"This is a good meet for us. If the weather cooperates, I expect to see some good performances."

The team is looking for good weather, especially Wentland, Rovelto said.

"I've been training for the relay all season," Wentland said. "If the weather is good, I could be a national qualifier."

The weather has affected Wentland's training as well.

"It has hurt," she said. "I'm going to be hurt in some events, like the javelin, because you can't throw a javelin inside. I think my running and jumping won't be affected."

BASEBALL

Last night's baseball game between K-State and Nebraska was rained out. The two teams will play a doubleheader today at the Cornhuskers' Buck Belzer Field. The first game is scheduled to start at 2 p.m. Temperatures are supposed to be in the lower 40s in the Lincoln, Neb., area this afternoon, and only light rain is expected.

Take a kid fishing — you'll never forget it

Last weekend, I thought I would do my good deed for the decade and take a couple of kids fishing.

On the way out to their house, I thought about all the things I could teach them about the great sport of fishing.

I was going to teach them about equipment, knots, water temperature, lure selection and the wonders of the outdoors.

I was going to enlighten them on the different species of fish, birds, amphibians and reptiles. Any animal we saw was going to be a mini-biology lesson (once again, forgive me Spencer) for the kids.

I picked the kids up at their house. Maggie is a kindergartner, full of curiosity and questions. Her older brother, Frank, is the perfect picture of a first grader — wired and ready to conquer. Their mother, Tammy, went along with us, and we departed for Rock Creek, which flowed just behind their house.

That is when my fishing education began. I have read a little on kids and fishing. So, I thought this would be a breeze.

I thought I would simply rig the kids up with worms and bobbers, and I could fish for bass for the rest of the afternoon.

Wrong. For my first lesson, I quickly found out kids have an uncanny ability to tangle fishing line anywhere within 40 feet of them.

Lesson No. 2 — if kids are fishing, they will get snagged. No exceptions.

"I'm stuck." Are the immortal words of a young fisherman.

We got the lines untangled, unsnagged, and we were ready to go. After explaining how to cast, where to cast and when, it was up to the fish. They weren't very cooperative, but the sun was out and we were happy.

I really wanted to explain to the kids that this beat the hell out of going to school, but better judgment prevailed.

There are several things to remember when taking kids fishing.

Bring your patience. Kids don't understand how everything works. You can't explain the physics of a cast and expect them to listen.

Bring simple equipment. Kids don't know a 202 from a spinning reel. Give them equipment that is easy to use and hard to break.

Make sure you take the kids to a place where they are going to catch fish. Take them to a pond with plenty of fish. Preferably the easy-to-catch bluegill, which are also falsely known, to many Kansans, as perch.

Take along some food. If the fishing is slow, the kids will have something to do, and you will have a chance to rest.

Make sure you point out the things you see. Vultures, hawks, ducks and bullfrogs are the kinds of wildlife that you and I take for granted. These animals are a new wonder for kids who sometimes don't notice them. A pair of binoculars isn't a bad idea.

Not only will these kids learn to appreciate the outdoors, they will learn about friendship, fishing and maybe some outdoor ethics. Littering, respecting other sports-folk, catch and release and the like.

And if you install the sense of curiosity about the outdoors, it will be with them a lifetime.

They will learn to appreciate the outdoors, and they will understand why sportsmen and women alike do what they do. They won't grow up to be anti-hunting and anti-fishing fanatics who think fishing is a sin.

Obviously, the final reward comes when children smile at you and ask when you're going to take them again. This is the best reward of all.

I apologize for the cliché, but, "Take a kid fishing."

SPORTS DIGEST

► MEN GOLFERS OFF TO STRONG START

The K-State men's golf team continues its solid play, most recently a second-place standing after the first two rounds of the Bent Brook-Blazer Invitational.

The Wildcats shot a first-day total of 427 and trail nationally ranked Auburn by only a stroke.

Jim Brenneman is pacing the Wildcats with a score of 104. His first-round score of 68 was a career low, and he is in fourth place — one stroke back of first.

Chad Judd shot a 105, and both Richard Laing and Brett Waldman carded a 109.

► WOMEN'S GOLF TEAM FINISHES IN 9TH

The Wildcat women's golf team fell a notch from eighth place to ninth after the final round in the 11-team Eskimo Pie Susie Maxwell Berning Classic. K-State finished with a score of 988, 54 strokes behind first-place OU.

Jacque Wright led all Wildcats with a score of 228. Her score was good enough to tie her for fourth place overall — her best finish ever. Wright also set a personal best with a first-round score of 74.

K-State looking to score in spring signing period

Cats need to replace seniors Collier, Jackson

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

K-State coach Dana Altman is on the prowl.

With the basketball spring signing period beginning today, Altman is hoping to ride the momentum his 19-11 team generated and land players to replace outgoing seniors Aaron Collier and Vincent Jackson.

The Wildcats have three scholarships available, and it's likely all three will be filled in the month-long signing period.

"We're just looking for the best possible player we can get," Altman said.

Altman said that he thinks there are enough players in the program who can replace Collier — Ron Lucas, George Hill, Jerrell Roberson and Hamilton Strickland — and his 9.1 points a game.

Nonetheless, 6-foot, 6-inch Stanley Hamilton — a muscular inside player — is being looked at by the Wildcats. He averaged 19 points and 11 rebounds at Dodge City Community College, and at least one major recruiting analyst labels him as a Collier-esque player with more scoring potential.

But the main concern for Altman, he said, is finding a solid replacement for Jackson, a slashing scorer who plays in-your-face defense.

"With Vince, we don't have anybody like him," Altman said. "We're not very deep at the wing spot, and that's cause for concern. We need to get at least two wing players."

One player that visited the K-State campus is 6-4 Demond Davis. Davis, a wing out of Bradenton, Fla., averaged 19 points and eight rebounds in helping Manatee to a 27-2 record.

Dwight Brown, another 6-4 wing player who Altman is courting, averaged 16 points and six rebounds at Vincennes Community College — the same junior college current Wildcat Ron Lucas attended.

"It is important that we score points a little easier next year," Altman said.

Indeed, K-State averaged a conference-low 70.3 points per game. The Cats' 44.2

field-goal percentage was also the worst in the Big Eight. K-State was 6-0 last season when shooting 50 percent from the field.

"But we're not looking for somebody who scores but doesn't cover," Altman said. "We're looking for people who are good basketball players, and they have to be able to score."

K-State re-signed freshman Kevin Lewis in the fall. Lewis, a true freshman who will have four years of eligibility, sat out this season because of academic problems. He was originally signed in November of 1991.

"He's young, and he's still growing," Altman said. "He's tall and skinny, and he's still growing."

The 6-10 center — who wears a size 16 shoe — averaged 14.5 points, 13.5 rebounds and five blocks a game as a senior in high school.

The Wildcats will have four seniors next season, and three of the five starters will be back. The last two starting positions, Altman said, are up for grabs.

"I try not to pencil in anything," he said. "I try to make sure that everybody gets his shot and has an opportunity. We try not to lock them into anything."

NOTE: Tyrone Davis, a 6-8 inside player from State Fair Community College who was being recruited by K-State, signed a letter of intent with Baylor in November. Davis, along with teammate Jason Ervin, agreed to play for Baylor but chose not to tell anybody.

K-State, along with the likes of Creighton, New Mexico, Iowa State and Nebraska, spent both time and money in recruiting Davis and his 15.8-point average.

The two players, neither of whom could be reached for comment, were apparently afraid that they would be benched had the coach known they signed.

The Associated Press contributed to this story.

Altman happier now than at this time last year

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

What a difference a season makes.

At this time a year ago, the Wildcat basketball team was coming off of a disappointing 16-14 season, a first-round loss in the Big Eight tournament and a second-round loss in the NIT tournament.

There was talk that Coach Dana Altman was overrated, that he was a great recruiter but a bad coach.

Radio call-in shows were flooded with cries for Altman's head.

It wasn't an ideal situation for a coach trying to lure young players into the K-State program.

"It is a little easier now than last year," Altman said. "A lot of people were in a panic a year ago. But I wasn't. I felt like we could have a solid basketball team.

"I don't know what other people were thinking, but you can't concern yourself with that," he said. "A lot of people were upset. But I felt pretty good. I felt like we were going to have a solid basketball team."

Altman's hunch was accurate.

Altman thwarted preseason picks that tabbed his Wildcat team as seventh in the Big Eight, finishing in a tie for third. The Cats posted back-to-back upsets in the Big Eight tournament, beating Nebraska and Kansas before falling to Missouri in the final.

The season was capped with an NCAA tournament appearance, the first in Altman's head coaching career. Despite losing to Tulane in the first round, and finishing the season with a 19-11 record, the post-season berth helped the recruiting process.

"It held the interest of some players when we were recruiting early," Altman said. "And it maybe intensified a look that some of the other players were giving us."

"It didn't hurt us by any means."

And although Altman said he never thought the basketball program was on the decline, he also said that he wasn't sure just how good his team was.

"I knew that if we didn't work hard and we didn't guard, we didn't have the potential to score enough points and out-score people," he said. "We were very honest with the team right from the start."

"We didn't try to present any illusions on what we could and couldn't do. I really didn't know how good we could be or how good we would be. I just thought that if we worked hard, we could go to the NCAA tournament."

Home sweet home, soon

Sorority hopes house will be open for August rush

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The newest sorority on campus will have soon have a place to call home.

Construction on the new Sigma Kappa house began early this semester on Denison Street. The sorority began at K-State a few years ago.

"Sigma Kappa colonized on campus in the fall of 1990," Julie Arnold, Sigma Kappa house manager, said.

"We officially got our charter on January 26, 1991."

In need of a house to accommodate its members, the women of Sigma Kappa began raising money to build the newest greek house on campus.

"We raised the money a number of different ways," Arnold said. "Some of it was donated by parents of girls in the house. Some was donated by alumni. Some interest-free loans were given by alumni. And some came from loans from our nationals."

The location of the house is good for the Sigma Kappa members, Arnold said.

"We felt like this was a good location because it is near other greek houses and close to campus," Arnold said.

"It will also be very accessible during rush in the fall because it is near a number of the other sororities."

Eric Bartholomew, project manager, said his company is accustomed to constructing buildings similar to the Sigma Kappa house.

"This house is just a small project for the Osbourne Company. We just finished Wamego Middle School, which was a $5.5-million project. So we're used to buildings this size."

"The house is set up to accommodate 54 girls," Bartholomew said.

"The rooms will be multi-numbered in the sense that there will be two, three or four girls in a room."

Arnold said there will also be accommodations for the new house mother.

"We don't have enough room for all our members, but whoever wants to move in will probably have a chance. If there is conflicts, it will go by seniority, grades and positions in office in the house," Arnold said.

But as of now, the question is — when will the house be finished?

"The weather has already been a factor as to when we get done," Bartholomew said.

"It has been a bad winter for construction. Hopefully, when this winter season is over, we can get on schedule and be finished by August first, which has been our desired date."

"If we can't get the house completely finished, we hope to at least get the dining room ready for rush in early August, and then get the girls in for the start of school," Bartholomew said.

"We really think it's going to be a beautiful house," he said.

Arnold said the sorority is having some students help with the outside of the house.

"We are also having the landscape architecture students do all of the landscaping," she said.

STATE

Area states to suspend low-level radioactive waste dumping

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — An internal policy committee of the Southeast Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact recommended Tuesday the facility in Barnwell, S.C., stop taking waste from Kansas and four other states on July 1.

The recommendation could mean that generators of low-level radioactive waste, such as hospitals, universities and the Wolf Creek nuclear power plant near Burlington would have to store their waste on site for a time.

The committee recommended that all the states in the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact — Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas — be denied access to the storage facility in Barnwell.

Donald Rabbe, spokesman for the central compact, said a lawsuit that Nebraska has filed to block construction of a storage facility in Boyd County near the South Dakota border is one of the reasons for the decision.

Under federal law, states must form compacts to store radioactive waste or provide their own storage. Nebraska was selected by the compact as the host state for the central states' waste facility.

In the meantime, most states have been storing low-level radioactive waste at Barnwell, operated by the southeast compact.

Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson filed the lawsuit contending that US Ecology, the contractor that would build the facility, did not have the consent of the community in Boyd County when it selected the site.

The recommendation said the central compact must develop a plan of goals, objectives and timetables before July 1 if states wanted access to Barnwell.

"We weren't expecting this, but it is one of the scenarios that could occur," Rabbe said. "I guess what it means is that major generators right now are going to have to store on-site or make some other arrangements."

Charles Jones, director of the environmental division of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said officials of the southeast compact are concerned that central compact states are wavering on their commitment to build a storage facility. He said it appears by its actions that the southeast compact wants to place pressure on Nebraska to drop its lawsuit.

"We've known for a long time that access to Barnwell would not last forever," he said. "I think it's an attempt by the southeast compact to ensure that it would not have the unhappy role it has of being the recipient of the nation's low-level radioactive waste."

Ex-activist teaches people leadership skills

REGGIE BLACKWELL
Collegian

The crowd was sparse, but the message was deep. Charles Barron, president and founder of Dynamics of Leadership Inc., spoke to faculty and students Tuesday night in the K-State Union Little Theatre. The speech was sponsored by the Black Student Union and the Multicultural Center.

Barron is a longtime New York City community activist and organizer, with extensive experience in leadership training and development on the local and national levels.

He is also a former member of the Black Panthers, a social-action group formed in the 1960s to fight racism. He has given lectures and has traveled to more than 40 states in the United States and to countries in Africa and the Caribbean.

Barron is also the author of two biographical sketches on the life of Marcus Mosiah Garvey and of the booklet "Speak Up."

"Our purpose is to look for leadership in the 21st century," Barron said.

He said people are not trained to be leaders, and there are no so-called born leaders. He said the mission of Dynamics of Leadership Inc. is to train individuals to be leaders.

Barron spoke about seven issues that face the black community in the 21st century — understanding influence and power, interracial couples, violence and non-violence, affirmative action, racism, multiculturalism and diversity.

"It's great that Barron touched upon interracial couples, because everyone always wants to keep that subject hush-hush on campus," Rodney Butler, junior in art, said.

Barron's purpose for coming to K-State was not to give a motivational speech, he said — his objective is to educate and train effective leaders.

He outlined his plan.

"There is a science, art and spirit to organizing around issues. The science relates to structure and methodology. The art introduces creativity and imagination. The spirit relates to intuition, enthusiasm and energy," Barron said.

He said everyone needs to develop strategies for winning. He said there are four dimensional strategies — legal action, political action, economic action and social action.

He then said to go along with these strategies, one needs tactics. He outlined 10 tactics — demonstrations or rallies, direct action, boycotts, press conferences, petition drives, phone calling, letter writing, voting, fact sheets and community hearings.

Claudia Streeter, secretary in the multicultural affairs office, said she was not impressed with Barron's plan. She said she was more interested in civil disobedience.

John Kitchings, senior in psychology, said he thought Barron's message was timely for the current circumstances at K-State.

Kitchings said Barron did not just give a speech — he gave tactics and ideas to follow.

Barron ended the workshop with a message.

"The struggle may be long, but the victory is certain," he said.

Refugees flee Serb attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Hundreds of women and children, including dozens of wounded, jammed into trucks Tuesday to flee the misery of Srebrenica, where Serb shelling killed at least 56 people a day earlier.

Of the 650 people who arrived in government-held Tuzla hours later, 47 were hospitalized with various wounds, officials of the U.N. High Commission for Refugees reported.

Robert Johansson, a Swede who drove one of the trucks, said the convoy was stoned by bystanders when it passed Serb-held Zvornik. The refugees were protected by tarpaulin covering on the trucks, he said.

Sarajevo radio reported late Tuesday that the eastern and northern frontlines in the Srebrenica area were being heavily shelled with mortars and multiple rocket launchers.

Those who perished Monday in Srebrenica, a Muslim enclave, included 15 children. At least 90 people were injured, 73 seriously, in the bombardment that coincided with the first patrols by NATO warplanes of the U.N.-imposed no-fly zone over Bosnia.

U.N. officials in Zagreb, Croatia, said they believed the eventual death toll would be much higher because of a lack of medical facilities and supplies.

Srebrenica, packed with tens of thousands of refugees, is one of only three areas held by the Muslim-led Bosnian government in eastern Bosnia.

"I personally hope he burns in the hottest corner of hell," Larry Hollingworth, senior U.N. refugee official in Sarajevo, said of whomever ordered the Srebrenica attack.

"I hope that their sleep is punctuated by the screams of the children and the cries of their mothers."

"Apparently, in the pathological drive to acquire territory, the Serbs are willing to kill anybody to achieve their ends," U.N. High Commission for Refugees spokesman John McMillan said.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said Monday's attacks were a response to Muslim violations of an often-ignored cease-fire that took effect across Bosnia two weeks ago.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug said 19 Serb soldiers were killed and 14 wounded in the Srebrenica area Sunday and Monday. Thirty-one were reported killed Monday and Tuesday.

In other developments:

—U.S. and Russian envoys continued efforts to persuade Bosnia's Serbs to sign a U.N. peace plan, which would deny them land links to Serbian property and to Serb-held parts of Croatia for which they have fought for a year.

—Russia's envoy, Vitaly Churkin, arrived in Belgrade for his third round of talks within two weeks and met with Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

—Reginald Bartholomew, President Clinton's special envoy, met Croat officials in Split and Zagreb. He was expected in Belgrade on Wednesday.

—The Sarajevo aid airlift, suspended Saturday after Serbs moved anti-aircraft weapons near the capital's airport, will resume Thursday, McMillan said.

NATO warplanes, meanwhile, patrolled over Bosnia for a second day in the alliance's first military operation outside its boundaries since it was set up in 1949. Allied pilots were under strict orders to shoot only as a last resort.

The United Nations voted to have the flight ban enforced as part of efforts to pressure the Bosnian Serbs to join the region's Croats and Muslims in signing a peace plan.

Karadzic, speaking on Belgrade radio Tuesday, denounced the NATO flights as intended to force the Serbs to sign something unacceptable that they cannot sign — the U.N.-sponsored peace plan.

The Serbs, who have seized 70 percent of Bosnia, say they would not be given enough territory under the plan.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Matt Wass de Czege, freshman in journalism and mass communications, casts a shadow in the afternoon sun as he goes up for a backside air on the vertical half pipe at the Big Red One skate park in Fort Riley.

Stalled at the top of the mini half pipe, Michael Fasulo, freshman in architecture, pulls out of an ollie blunt back onto the ramp. Although Fasulo doesn't live on the base, he is allowed to use the park because he is a dependent of a military employee.

Sean Beaver's helmet expresses the attitudes of most skateboarders at the Fort Riley skatepark. In order to use the park, one must either be in the military, a dependent of a military employee, or else a civilian employed at Fort Riley.

SKATING HALF THE ARMY'S NEW PIPE

Half pipes, street courses and the proper equipment are all an essential part of the evolving sport of the '90s: skateboarding.

Skateboarding has traveled beyond the '90s and into the year 2000 at Fort Riley's new recreational facility, the Big Red One Skateboarding Park.

Sean Beaver, specialist of outdoor recreation and skater of nine years, said skateboarding is an evolving sport that stresses individuality.

Beaver was a driving force behind the park, using his experience with skateboarding and ramp construction to express the need for a park and offer ideas.

"Skateboarding to me is what I choose to do. It gives me something to do, or else I'd be in the bars or something," Beaver said.

Beaver said he would not have put so much effort into the skate park if he did not believe it is a worthwhile complex.

"There is a high-energy level surrounding skateboarding, and this activity has been wanted for a long time," Beaver said.

Recycled products were used to construct the park, which kept costs down.

Fencing from Camp Funston was salvaged, and the vertical expert half-pipe ramp was bought from Eat Concrete Skatepark in Omaha, Neb.

The skateboard park features a street-course ramp aimed toward beginners, and an intermediate ramp consisting of multiple levels so skateboarders can progress. The advanced half-pipe ramp is aimed at the more skilled skaters.

The skateboard park is open only to military personnel, their families and civilian employees.

Beaver said the park had been under construction for the past 15 months at a cost of about $25,000.

"I hope the weather cooperates so we can make money to cover our costs," Stremel said.

Skateboarders are required to register with the Directorate of Personnel and Community Activities before they are allowed to use the park.

The cost of admission is $2. There is only one requirement: All skaters must wear a helmet and knee and elbow pads for personal safety.

Safety equipment can be rented for an additional $2.

Unlike sidewalks and streets where people usually skate, the skateboard park is a safe, consolidated place

Various heights on the same ramp allow for Wass de Czege to build up speed and pull off an ollie-frontside air on the mini half pipe.

designated solely for skateboarding.

"We put safety down utmost and foremost when we built the park," Craig Stremel, director of outdoor and leisure activities, said.

Beaver said the skateboard park is an area where skaters are welcome to skate without worrying about cars or laws forbidding skating.

One skateboarder who frequents the park said it is a step up from where he used to skate.

"I've been ran off a couple times when I was skating on (K-State) campus," 14-year-old skater Sean Vonnholz said.

Beaver said Fort Riley's skateboard park is special because of its safety features.

Metal pipes are at the top of every ramp, allowing the skateboarder to land on the ramp. Ramp surfaces are smooth to avoid splinters and hard landings.

Opening ceremonies for the Big Red One Skateboard Park, which is located at Camp Forsyth, were March 27.

Beaver was one of 400 people who organized the park's opening day.

Though the skateboard park is in its infancy, its fate remains in question, Stremel said.

Possible plans for the skate park include adding a beginner course, an arcade and having demonstrations by professional skaters, Stremel said.

Beaver said he expects a strong turnout.

"The army's biggest concern is that no one will come," Beaver said. "Mine is that everyone will."

completing a degree.
Aruna Michie, faculty senator and associate professor of political science, said that just because a student has finished a minor does not mean that they have also completed the bachelor's degree.

"It is up to the judgment of an employer to consider if a minor is adequate," she said. "It is not our responsibility to see that a student has finished their degree."
It was also discussed if a minor is a part of the permanent record it is not a threat to the academic integrity of the institution.

Interest needs to be sparked for election remained skeptical.

"Students need to get interested in SGA," Vickie Choitz, junior in political science, said. "No matter how many phone lines they have to Senate, students aren't going to call unless they're interested."
Several freshmen voters said an effort should be made to make new students more aware of SGA.
"I think they should definitely have more communication, especially for freshmen coming in," Sharon Spohr, freshmen undecided, said. "I know nothing about it. It beats me."
Jeff Buck, senior in secondary education, said he thinks students should be more informed about how SGA allocates funding.

"I think that's very important," he said. "I don't know much that goes on in SGA. We should know more about where the money goes."
While voters try to make distinctions between the eight tickets, one voter complained about the lack of issues.
"For something to have been an issue, there has to be discussions and responses between candidates about their positions," Joel Gruenke, graduate student in statistics, said. "That hasn't happened."

Multicultural class necessary

have added new credibility and urgency to the idea, he said.
Students will not be required to take an additional three hours. The diversity overlay, however, will be a requirement for all students to complete their degrees, Gray said.
The proposal is in now the hands of the diversity overlay task force.
Harriet Ottenheimer, professor in social work and chairwoman for the diversity overlay task force, said the task force hopes to have the proposal ready before the end of this semester.
A few colleges have not yet given their input, but most of the work has been done, she said.
After the proposal is presented to the academic affairs committee, the task force will have a public hearing before presenting it to Faculty Senate, Ottenheimer said.
Vetter said she is aware a lot of work has gone into the proposal but hopes her petition sends a message to the Senate that the course is important for K-State.
"This is a necessary thing. K-

State desperately needs this," she said.
The petition calls for the provision of a curriculum requirement in multiculturalism to prepare students for a culturally diverse world.
Vetter said she collected 500 signatures in two days and will go to 5,000 if necessary.
There may be some issue of funding, Gray said, but there will not be a great expense.
A few additional courses may be needed, but as many existing courses as possible will be used or modified to fulfill the requirement.
Universities are constantly adding and dropping courses as the need arises and have always managed to find new resources to do so. This will not take a lot of new resources, Ottenheimer said.
The applause given by the Senate after the petition was presented is a positive indication the Senate will heed the call of the students, she said.

Clinton disagrees with GOP's actions

ASSOCIATED PRESS
WASHINGTON — While President Clinton publicly scolds Senate Republicans for blocking his jobs bill, White House lieutenants are quietly seeking compromise with up to a dozen moderate GOP senators.
Clinton and his aides have decidedly different roles in the White House strategy for striking a deal and freeing the jobs package from a GOP filibuster when the Senate returns next week.
The president began his part Monday by accusing the Republicans of making children hostages in the fight and ignoring high unemployment.
"It is time that we broke the gridlock and stopped making excuses for not doing anything," Clinton said.
Through the end of the week, Clinton has at least one event each day at which he will campaign for his $16.3-billion proposal, including a Wednesday meeting with mayors to discuss summer jobs.
"I guess they want to have this daily tete-a-tete," Senate Republican leader Bob Dole said.
He shrugged off the constant White House criticism, saying Clinton hadn't won over any GOP lawmakers.
In hindsight, White House aides concede the embarrassing scramble to save at least part of Clinton's package might have been avoided had the administration courted moderate Republican support earlier.
Republicans see Clinton's failure to do so as a failure to recognize the blocking power of the Senate's minority.
"For all his reputation as a deal cutter when he was governor, Clinton never had to deal with a sizable contingent of Republicans before," GOP pollster Glen Bolger said.
Ironically, public-opinion polls showed the now-stalled jobs-and-spending package was the most popular portion of the economic program when Clinton unveiled it to Congress in February.

True love for a true peach

DEAR CASSANDRA,
This is in response to "Confused" (April 8). Your letter hit home. I had never been "in love" before either. Last summer, I met a man I instantly fell for. After a few weeks, I just knew I was in love because I didn't have to ask myself whether or not I was in love, I just knew.
I never knew love until then. I have never been happier, and now life is so much sweeter. My boyfriend lives several hours away also (in my hometown). After spending an entire weekend with him, Mondays seem so sad when he's not near. But I think of him and smile and go on with my life until we can be together again.
Congratulations on finding someone who really makes you happy. If these feelings you have for your boyfriend are true, it's probably love. But when you no longer have to ask — then it's true love.
Peachpit

DEAR PEACH,
You are a peach. What a nice letter. In these often sad times, it's refreshing to read a letter like yours. Love's still the best thing going.
Your boyfriend's a lucky guy. I'm happy you found each other.

Movie poster collecting turns profitable

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Next time you go to the movies, look closely at those glossy posters depicting the new adventures of your favorite stars. That glass screen could be the only thing separating you from a poster that could someday be worth hundreds, or even thousands of dollars.

William Adams, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said the hobby of collecting movie posters has become serious business not only for the collectors, but for the motion picture industry as well.

"In the past 10 years the studios have realized collecting was getting popular, and they took control and the price of posters went up," Adams said.

Adams began collecting movie posters before it became popular. He was in high school working at the movie theater in his hometown of Parowan, Utah. He said the posters there were either sold for a small sum, given away or trashed. Seeing some of them trashed made Adams decide he wanted the posters.

"I couldn't see them being thrown away. I had always assumed they kept them," Adams said.

Now, the public can only obtain the posters by buying them from a distributor. Adams said studios such as Walt Disney and Paramount usually charge at least $20 for their posters.

He said the motion picture industry has realized that not only are movie posters promotional items, but they are another revenue source.

"The poster is the first line to the audience. It draws people in and grabs their attention," Adams said. "The posters have also become a source of money for the industry. They will make more than one version of a poster to make more money."

Movie theater employees can still get their hands on posters. Craig Corsini, assistant manager at Westloop Cinema, said employees can take the posters they want, but what is left goes in the office for storage.

In his nearly 20 years of collecting, Adams now owns more than 600 posters.

One of his more valuable posters is the original poster for "Risky Business" that he got while working at the theater, which he said is now worth $200 to $300.

Adams said he usually does not buy posters as investments. He buys posters that appeal to him.

"I like somewhat simple posters with strong design," Adams said.

Adams does buy most of the animation posters as investments because they always go up in price. He said the pre-release for "Aladdin" is already out of circulation, and the "Beauty and the Beast" pre-release poster started out at $20 and is now worth $150.

Posters of big name stars before they became stars can also be worth a lot.

The ultimate movie poster would be "Gone With the Wind," but Adams said the $3,000 price was just a little out of his range.

His posters are filed away in large flat folders, and Adams displays a couple of them at a time in glass frames at his house.

Although Adams does see a lot of movies, he does not always see the movie for every poster he buys or buy the poster for every movie he sees.

"I consider posters and movies separate things," Adams said. "There are some movies that I thoroughly like the poster but wouldn't go near the movie."

Adams said collecting posters has become a serious investment for many, but like a true collector, he has never sold any of his posters.

"If I ever added up how much I have tied up in them then I might be tempted to quit or try to sell them,"

Adams said. "But, as long as I can get them as soon as they come out and before they go up in price, I will keep collecting."

Candidates list narrows; run-off election next week

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Like sitting on pins and needles.

Tension filled the rooms as candidates for student body president and vice president anxiously awaited the outcome of the SGA general election last night.

The phone calls started coming shortly after 11 p.m.

Cheering, laughter and tears filled the room as Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson learned they had received the highest number of votes in the SGA elections.

Wingert and Peterson both remained calm as they spoke to the people who had gathered to hear the news of the voting.

"I'd first like to congratulate all the other candidates for their work, their positive contributions and their positive ideas," Wingert said.

Peterson was thankful, as well.

"We started a step behind in the campaign, but with hard work and dedication, we reached all the students," he said.

"We have a lot of work ahead of us because it was such a narrow margin," Wingert said. "I'd also like to encourage all the students to vote next week."

Wingert and Peterson advance to the run-off election April 21.

Across town, Ed Skoog and Eric Henry also received a phone call telling them they had advanced to the run-off.

"I'm happy and honored and glad all our friends realized we were serious about this despite our flippant and off-the-cuff remarks," Skoog said.

"We weren't in this to be in the run-off. We weren't in this to win the election either. We are in this for what will happen after the election," Skoog said. "There's a lot of work to do. Hard labor and heavy lifting."

Henry said he agreed.

"We think we're the folks that can get the job done," he said.

"We're delighted, and it sure beats getting poked in the eye with a sharp stick," he said.

Both Skoog and Henry said

Transit proposal to be research parking

Proposal to be presented to Finance Committee

MICHELLE ROGERS

A transit proposal, which would create a graduate student position to research the parking problem on campus, will be presented to Finance Committee Sunday night.

The proposal will be presented by Jackie McClaskey, student body president, and Jim Persinger, chief of staff of Student Senate.

This proposal has been in the making for eight months, McClaskey said.

It began in September with talks to the Topeka Transit Authority and meetings with K-State administration, Persinger said.

"We first looked at a community-wide system. That was our first proposal," Persinger said.

In a January meeting, the city decided to remove itself from the proposal because of a transit study that was done in Lawrence, which already has a small transit system and a parking garage on campus.

The city commission said it was economically infeasible for Manhattan according to the Lawrence study, McClaskey said.

"So the scope is back to K-State only, and not the community," Persinger said.

The proposal is a joint effort between students and administration, including Parking Services, Facilities Planning and Student Governing Association.

If passed, the departments of Regional and Community Planning and Civil Engineering would be contacted for recommendations of a graduate student to conduct the study, McClaskey said.

The student would be hired to do a study on the best options that would address congestion and parking on campus, Persinger said.

The student would be expected to look at costs, routes, site locations, campus community acceptance, and any other pertinent information relative to parking.

The position is a full-time summer position that would start in June and last through September.

The student would be paid $2,000 a month, and there would be $4,000 available for operating costs.

A final written report of the results and recommendations would be required by September 30.

"We hope that part of the solution is in place by next fall because of the construction on the southeast part of campus and the closing of Mid-Campus Drive," McClaskey said.

There was some consideration in contracting a professional group to conduct the study. However, there are three factors that prevent that, Persinger said.

The first is time, as it would take longer to hire a professional and get the firm approved, McClaskey said.

The second is money, McClaskey said, because it is more expensive to hire a professional than to hire a student.

For a part-time firm to conduct the study, it would cost $35,000 plus benefits, McClaskey said.

The last consideration is heart, Persinger said.

"We need someone who has been on campus, who's dealt with it, who wants to find a solution," McClaskey said.

Illness stalls jury's deliberations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Deliberations in the Rodney King beating trial were interrupted in their fifth day Wednesday when a juror got sick and went to a doctor.

U.S. District Judge John Davies said he expected jurors to resume deliberations Thursday morning on whether four police officers violated King's federal civil rights in the videotaped beating.

The jury has deliberated 25-1/2 hours. In a state trial last year, jurors deliberated 32 hours before acquitting the officers of most charges. The acquittals sparked riots that left 54 people dead and caused $1 billion in damages.

Davies had summoned lawyers and the police officers to his courtroom for a proceeding but didn't elaborate, prompting a flurry of speculation inside and outside the courthouse about whether the jury had reached a verdict.

The proceeding was delayed for an hour when one defense lawyer couldn't be found. When it began, Davies took the bench and told lawyers he hoped they would stay within 10 minutes of the courtroom at all times.

"I'm speaking of the future, which means, of course, no verdict has been reached," the judge said with a slight smile.

"We do have a problem," Davies said. "One of the jurors appeared to have become ill and requested medical attention." He didn't disclose the nature of the ailment or indicate which of the jurors, whose identities have been kept secret, was afflicted.

Davies said the juror was going to a family doctor, accompanied by a federal marshal. The other 11 jurors returned to the hotel where they are sequestered.

Attorneys said if the juror became too sick to continue, one of three alternate jurors would be chosen by lot to enter the deliberations.

"The real problem is if the new juror gets in there, they have to start all over again," said defense attorney Harland Braun. Assistant U.S. Attorney Steven

► U.N. OFFICIALS DENOUNCE SERBIAN FIGHTERS

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — In exceptionally harsh words, U.N. officials are denouncing the Serb fighters who have killed scores of women and children in their relentless pounding of Srebrenica with artillery.

"Apparently in the pathological drive to acquire territory, the Serbs are willing to kill anybody to achieve their ends," John McMillan, spokesman for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, said in Sarajevo.

About 650 elderly men, women and children escaped the besieged eastern enclave of Srebrenica Tuesday, arriving in this town 50 miles to the southeast with tales of terror.

At least 56 people died Monday in Srebrenica in some of the heaviest shelling in months. The town, packed with up to 60,000 refugees, is one of only three areas held by the Muslim-led Bosnian government in eastern Bosnia.

► PULITZER BITTERSWEET FOR JOURNALIST

WASHINGTON (AP) — For one reporter, winning this year's Pulitzer prize for feature writing was bittersweet. "I'd give anything not to have written it," George Lardner Jr. said of the story that got him journalism's highest award.

The veteran Washington Post reporter won the prize Tuesday for a dispassionate but meticulous account of his daughter's murder last year.

"I'm stunned, elated and sad all at once," Lardner said in an interview following the announcement. "It was the most important story I've ever done, and I think Kristin would be proud."

Kristin Lardner, 21, was shot three times in the head on a Boston street by a former boyfriend who later killed himself. Lardner's story, titled "The Stalking of Kristin," ran six months later in the Post.

NEWS DIGEST

► TAXPAYERS WAIT UNTIL MIDNIGHT

WASHINGTON (AP) — With more taxpayers than usual holding their federal returns until the last minute, the government offered a helping hand to those unable to meet the midnight Thursday deadline.

The Internal Revenue Service is waiting to hear from 45 million couples and individuals. Professional tax preparers estimate several million of those were putting off the chore simply because they were getting smaller refunds or none at all.

CORRECTION

In the College of Business senator section of Tuesday's SGA elections voters' guide, the last sentence was inadvertently left out of candidate Dorian Papadopoulos' second response. The sentence should have been:

"If you vote me into office, all I can guarantee are results."

Also, the photo for Robert Proctor, candidate for College of Architecture and Design senator, was omitted. Proctor's photo did appear as a candidate for Board of Student Publications. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. What is financial aid?

A. Financial aid is money available to you and your family to help pay for educational expenses. Its purpose is to supplement, not replace, the amount you and your family pay to meet your total educational expenses.

Q. How do I know what my "need" figure will be? What does my EFC mean?

A. The Federal Government calculates your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) by using a formula established by Congress. Your EFC is based on the information you entered on your Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Your EFC will be the same no matter where you attend college because the same formula is used by all schools throughout the nation. After K-State determines the total cost of education or budget for you, the EFC is subtracted from this amount and the result is your "need" figure. For example:

COST OF EDUCATION	$8000
MINUS EFC	-2000
=FINANCIAL NEED	$6000

If the cost of education is $8000 and your EFC is $2000, you will be eligible for $6000 in need-based financial aid. Your financial need would be met with a financial aid package that combines federal grants, loans, work-study, or K-State scholarships.

Q. What is the difference between grants and loans?

A. •Federal grants, available to students who meet financial need requirements, are funds that do not have to be repaid.
•Federal loans let you borrow money for college at low interest rates. Loans are paid back after you finish college.
•K-State scholarships are awards for students who excel in academic areas, activities, or sports or who have financial "need." They do not have to be repaid.
•Federal work-study jobs give you spending money and work experience. This need-based award allows you to work 10-20 hours per week.

Q. If I didn't qualify for financial aid last year, should I still apply?

A. YES! Even though the priority deadline of March 15th is past, you should still apply for financial assistance. Congress has changed the needs analysis formula, and this will make some students eligible for 1993-94 that were ineligible for 1992-93. Some important changes are as follow:

• The limits of adjusted gross income that a family can earn have increased.
• Home asset values are no longer reported or considered in the formula.
• Farm assets are no longer reported or considered in the formula if the family resides on the farm.
• If the parents and student file either a 1040EZ or 1040A and the parents' adjusted gross income is under $50,000, ALL assets are excluded from the formula for both parents and student.

K-State Theater brings 'Hamlet' to Nichols Theatre

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

To see or not to see — that is the question for K-State students with the K-State Theater's production of Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

"No two 'Hamlets' are alike," said Charlotte MacFarland, associate professor of speech and director of "Hamlet."

The entire play is 5- 1/2 hours long. MacFarland said she had to cut it, while trying not to lose the power of the play.

She said she believes sometimes it is better to see a production of "Hamlet" without knowing a lot about the play.

"What makes 'Hamlet' great is that there's something in it for everyone," she said. "It's a good murder and ghost story."

She said she also feels it is a powerful and rich story of people really living and feeling.

"With 'Hamlet', you have to approach it moment by moment," MacFarland said.

Although "Hamlet" should be viewed in this way, there is still no reason to shy away.

"People can be intimidated by Shakespeare, but it is very human," said Laura Camien, junior in theater and cast member.

Camien said she has gained an appreciation for Shakespeare and an excitement for it while working on the play.

"Hamlet" will run for seven nights in Nichols Theatre — tonight through Saturday. Next week, it will run Thursday through Sunday. The play will begin at 8 p.m.

"Students get to do it seven times," MacFarland said, "and the students have a chance for growth and change."

MacFarland said she feels that is an advantage over doing a play in McCain Auditorium, which usually runs three nights.

Another advantage is that Nichols

Theatre is a more intimate place to work in, she said.

The cast of "Hamlet" has been working for weeks, with the auditions for "Hamlet" beginning in the fall semester.

"I have gained a better understanding of 'Hamlet' and a better understanding of Shakespeare," said Gretchen Morgan, sophomore undecided and cast member.

"You don't have to talk funny," she said, "you can actually be human."

MacFarland has seen the growth of the cast.

"I think the kids have done a remarkable job," she said.

This growth has also been experienced by other cast members.

"I've learned that there are a lot of different interpretations of 'Hamlet,'" said Skyler Thomas, freshman in theater and cast member.

Thomas said he also feels the play can be painful, in a physical sense, with all the demanding stage work.

Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, holds the title role of Hamlet. For Kelly, the role has not been an easy part to play.

"It's been a monster. Researching and reading, and picking it apart," he said.

MacFarland agrees that the role of Hamlet is not an easy one.

"It's a demanding role," she said.

However, Kelly said he is happy to have the chance to play the part of the Melancholy Dane.

"I'm glad I got the glimpse at it that I did," Kelly said.

According to MacFarland, this production of "Hamlet" has a modern musical score, with a lot of different looks to it as well.

"Feel free to come on the night you want to, because people who have season tickets or tickets don't show or can't make it, and there are open seats to buy," Camien said.

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Polonius, played by Bob McMaster, preaches to his daughter, Ophelia, played by Erin McGinnis, about Hamlet's impending madness during a dress rehearsal Wednesday night in Nichols Theatre. "Hamlet" opens tonight, continues through April 17 and reopens from April 22-25.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

The disarmed voter

THE ISSUE

Current SGA policy bars voters from bringing the Collegian's special election section to the polls.

WE SUGGEST

The section is an objective, important tool for all voters. Let them use it.

With much of the hoopla surrounding the Student Governing Association elections over, it's time to think about making a change in the poll policy.

Current policy bars anyone from entering the polling area with "campaign materials." This includes campaign buttons, sweatshirts, hats and copies of the Collegian that may contain advertisements for, or stories on, one or more candidates.

At this point, the policy is sensible and prudent. It eliminates the situation where a voter could be swayed by the campaign materials of one candidate, without the benefit of being exposed to the materials of others.

However, also banned from the polling area is the Collegian's election section, designed to inform voters of the platforms of candidates for student body president, vice president, Student Senate, Board of Student Publications and Union Governing Board.

This section carried absolutely no advertisements and displayed vital information on every official candidate who responded to the Collegian questionnaire.

Whine, gripe, moan — that's us. Yet the fact remains that what was an objective, informational tool to help voters was rendered virtually sterile and useless because of this policy.

Of course, voters could have tried to memorize the views of all eight presidential/vice presidential candidates or perhaps all 33 Arts and Sciences candidates, but that's not what we wanted.

Next year, let our good intentions have some real effect and let students be truly knowledgeable about for whom they vote.

Next year, allow voters to use the Collegian election section when they vote.

THE GREAT COMMUNICATOR

The roads to Nebraska are torn up this afternoon. There is brown dirt where there was once summer-sticky asphalt. Along the ditches and culverts and old roads being reborn, there are diesel engines and yellow road graders and trucks. I am driving a big white Oldsmobile.

DAVID
FRESE

"Are these things supposed to taste like chicken?" asks my traveling companion. She is sitting in the passenger seat eating a mini Chick-O-Stick.

No, I say. I think they are supposed to taste like peanut butter.

"Omaha," she says. "Seventy-five miles."

I have to tinkle, I say.

"I always wanted to drive a crane," she says.

"All that power."

Do they taste like chicken? I ask.

"Somewhat," she says. "It's in there somewhere."

When's the next town? I ask.

"Do you have to go to the bathroom again?" she asks.

Didn't I say that? I ask.

"Where's the map?" she asks. "I have Chick-O-Stick in my teeth. Crunchy."

Why do you want to drive a crane? I ask.

"Didn't you have it last?" she says.

These are crunchy, I say, biting the Chick-O-Stick.

"They kind of taste like Butterfinger," she says, crawling over the front seat to the back.

"Maybe it's back here. I don't know. They're just so big, able to move all that dirt. I can't find the map."

What's that sign say? I ask. I never knew you wanted to drive a crane.

"These do taste like Butterfinger," she says.

"Crunchy. Sweet-like. Like sugary rocks."

What's wrong with that?"

Driving a crane is fine with me, I say. It is admirable.

"Omaha," she says. "Seventy miles."

A month before, Preacher Man sat with his cowboy-booted feet upon his big brown desk. He had a cold eye for veracity.

"How well do you communicate?" he asked me.

I looked at my traveling companion.

"We communicate very well," she said.

Real well, I said.

"Good," said Preacher Man. "That's the key."

The 70 miles have passed. I am driving the big white Oldsmobile through interior Omaha.

I follow the main roads and see art museums, theaters, people in suits and dresses walking to cars. Taking the side roads, I see gas stations, pawn shops, liquor stores.

There are not many black people in Omaha.

The black people I see are working desks in motels. That is all.

Everyone in Omaha offers you coffee. The overly helpful woman at the tourist information center offers us coffee. The black man at the hotel desk asks if we want coffee.

My traveling companion and I go to a bookstore. Inside: used books, chess players, dust, pipe smoke, 43 copies of "Crime and Punishment," someone in the basement playing a minor scale on a piano over and over and over.

The owner, a man resembling Lurch and George Plimpton with wet lips and without a shave stops us from going to the second floor.

"Excuse me," he says.

Yes, we both say, fearing trouble.

"Would you like," he says, readying the self, "some cof-fee?"

We leave.

Again, driving. There are a lot of people standing on corners in Omaha. Many of them look like they are waiting for something other than to cross. The air is hazy, whether from the foggy spring or smog, I do not know. Inside the big white Oldsmobile, I read aloud the signs on stores.

Vocelka's Gin Bar. Bicycle Bob's. deFreese Manor. Old Marketplace. For Sale 1976 Camaro. University of Nebraska-Omaha. Library.

"Stop," she says.

I touch the brakes.

"No, stop," she says.

Stop what? I ask.

"Reading," she says. "Do you always do that?"

Do what? I ask.

"Read signs aloud," she says. "You're driving me crazy."

I'm sorry, I say. I think it is funny.

"It's not funny," she says. "It's annoying."

Ask I: Do you want to eat?

"I'm not grumpy," she says.

I drive. Quiet. Maybe I am sulking a little.

Again, ask I: Do you want to get something to eat?

"Maybe I am a little grumpy," she says.

Yes?

"Yes," she says.

I begin reading the signs again to myself.

What price? Violence is blind, and many people from all walks of life, guilty or not, can be hurt.

We need to ask ourselves from a humanistic point of view and not through the faded lenses of our own limited viewpoint. What is the solution? I think we will all be able to find there, the correct thing.

New mainframe-repair speed record apparently set

Editor,

In Monday's forum at the K-State Union, the media were criticized again for playing up the negative as news.

Tuesday's Collegian contained a textbook example of how wrong impressions can be created by reporting only the negative.

The whole story (which was not reported) is that a crane at the Throckmorton construction site came into contact with a power line, causing an intense, but brief, electrical disturbance. This interrupted control in the University's mainframe computer, which was then processing student enrollments. Attentive staff restored operation in record time.

But ... students had to wait. The Collegian's only coverage was: Students had to wait "after the mainframe crashed."

Although accurate, the colorful statement leaves the reader to wonder if something avoidable had happened.

Aside from its failure to apply the elements of Newswriting 101, this type of "reporting" does an injustice to K-State staff who could at least have been given credit for being there to fix problems they haven't caused.

Television worth watching

One important difference between men and women is the technique used by either sex to watch television. Women, generally speaking, will stay with ONE channel, whereas men will watch three or four channels (or more) all at one time, with channels flipping back and forth like ducks in a shooting gallery.

This behavioral difference is based upon a well-known sexual principle: Females prefer the security and stability of monogamy, while males prefer variety. The fundamental basis for this principle is essentially biological in nature and can be traced to primitive sexual urges common only to single-celled organisms and man.

I can verify this principle with the following example from my own personal portfolio of Scientifically Verifiable Experiences (SVE).

SVE # 443: While driving my car down the street, accompanied by my wife, we happened to pass a good-looking woman jogging down the sidewalk, which then caused a NOTICEABLE loss of control of the vehicle as I tried to steer the car OFF the sidewalk and back onto the street.

My Wife: "Hey! Would you PLEASE keep your eyes off the skirts and on the road?"

Me: "Who? Me? I was just getting a closer look at the scenery, honey. And wow! Did you see the SIZE of those ornamental shrubs by the front of that house back there?"

Now, had this situation been reversed with my wife driving, she would not have given a male jogger the slightest glance. Of course, any female joggers I might have gandered at while SHE was driving would have been promptly run over without a second thought.

My wife's major criticism of the male TV-watching technique is that there are simply not enough channels worth watching to warrant changing so frequently. So, I decided to once again prove her wrong by keeping a short (but scientifically accurate) diary of my viewing choices recorded on a randomly-selected viewing evening yesterday.

TV ON ... Channel #1:

"... and "Mad Dog" Harry Armpit has The Big Butthead in a delicate wrestling hold — a Half-Sternoflex Gonad Crunch!

Would you look at the blood vessels POPPING out in the The Big Butthead's neck and forehead! I don't know about you, Bill, but I think he's going to lose consciousness. ..."

Channel #2:

"... and in the LAST days The Beast with 10 horns, five tails, 16 mammary glands, 23 eyes, and with FEET made of unleavened bread did SWOOPETH down from the land of Nabob just east of Gosheth about 43 cubits and DESTROYETH all that MAN hath made that was RIGHTEOUS in the EYES of the Lord. Even though this did CAUSEDETH a synthetic, purplish substance to OOOZETH from the Believer's eye sockets, THEY FEARED NOT, for the LORD was with them. ..."

back to Channel #1:

"... this is A.S.S. Wrestling at its finest, Bill. Did you EVER see anyone slip out of a Gonad Crunch by grabbing a handful of hair on his opponent's back? Boy! I ask you Bill, what ingenious technique will these fat slob come up with next?"

Channel #4:

"... this is Jimmy Joe Billy Ray Bob Bubba Bucktooth McCoy here asking you to bring your old clunker down to Shaft City USA. WE WILL BEND OVER BACKWARD to make a deal with you because we are going to BEND YOU OVER AND DRIVE YOU HOME in a brand new. ..."

back to Channel #2:

"... And Lo! Yea, verily, a great sign did APPEARETH in the heavens; a shapely woman CLOTHED like the Sun, with hair of frankincense and a face like Dr. Ruth's. This DID causeth all Believer's teeth to FALLETH out like snow and their TONGUES to swellth up like great big sponges, but THEY FEARED NOT, for the LORD was with them. ..."

I could go on, but I think you get the idea. I rest my case.

What's that dear? How did that big dent, shaped like a tree, get in the front end of the car? Well, you see, I happened to notice these HUGE ornamental shrubs on my way to work. ..."

Source misquoted in civil disobedience story

Editor,

My name is Claudia Streeter, and I was misquoted in an article by Reggie Blackwell that appeared in the April 14 Collegian. To take my comments and print them incomplete and out of context is an injustice to me as well as to your readers.

I said quite a few things in my conversation with Reggie. The gist of which was that I approved of civil disobedience, protests and marches as a tool for change when the normal channels have failed. I believe that to affect any kind of change (positive or negative) you must be heard; you must be recognized; and these tools can be used to gain that recognition.

I do not now and have never approved of violence just for the sake of violence. I believed that the seminar by Charles Barron would teach participants how to organize and use these tools. That is why I attended and why I was disappointed.

Questions not addressed in King trial discussion

Editor,

Monday, I was fortunate enough to be able to attend the first hour of the open forum for the discussion of the Rodney King trial.

It seemed to me the real question was never addressed in that first hour. Perhaps too many people are afraid to address this question, afraid of saying the "incorrect" thing. The question remains, however — what are we, as Americans, able to do to solve this most divisive issue, that of racism in America? Not just the racism of a particular ethnic group toward another, but that exhibited in one form or another by any group.

It seems to me that the solution lies in inclusion, in our acceptance of our diversity, and our coming together as Americans.

Martin Luther King Jr.'s message of inclusion and nonviolence seems to have lost some of its value as a tool in the fight against racism. This saddens me, but there seems to be a legitimate reason for this. Without much imagination, King's message can easily be seen as having been made into a tool for repression by those in power. Repressed people realize that working within the system seems to no longer work.

Would there have been a second trial for Rodney King's civil rights, or attention paid to the plight of the inner cities if it had not been for rioting? I doubt it. As mentioned at the forum, this nation was founded on violence and insurrection. It appears to be working again where non-violence and inclusion have failed, but at what price? Violence is blind, and many people from all walks of life, guilty or not, can be hurt.

We need to ask ourselves from a humanistic point of view and not through the faded lenses of our own limited viewpoint. What is the solution? I think we will all be able to find there, the correct thing.

MUSIC

Country's best play Bramlage

ALICIA MALE

Collegian

K-State students will soon be able to see, live, the 1992 Male Vocalist of the Year.

Vince Gill, who also won the award for Song of the Year at the 1992 Country Music Association Awards, will be in concert at Bramlage Coliseum at 7:30 p.m. Thursday. Mary-Chapin Carpenter will open the show.

"I'm really excited about the show. I think Vince Gill has one of the best male voices in country music today," Amy Casey, senior in marketing, said. Gill has two platinum albums that have remained on the charts for the past three years. His third and newest release, "I Still Believe in You," is on its way to double-platinum and includes the number one hit and title song, "I Still Believe in You."

He has won two Grammys, six CMA Awards and three TNN/"Music City News" Awards. He has received honors for best instrumentalist, best song, best single and best male vocalist.

In his first album, "When I Call Your Name," Gill said he aimed for versatility and then settled into a more clearly defined country style for his second album, "Pocket Full of Gold." That album went platinum and yielded four hit singles.

In creating "I Still Believe in You," his third album, Gill's goal was to combine the very best elements of the first two albums.

Despite all his efforts, some students have other reasons for attending the concert.

"Though I can't say that Vince Gill is my very favorite artist, I do respect his diversity and his originality. I'm really going to see Mary-Chapin Carpenter," Paul Matlack, senior in exercise science, said.

Carpenter was awarded a Grammy for Best Female Vocal Performance and won Best Female Vocalist of the year at the Country Music Awards in 1992.

In 1993, she won a Grammy for best Female Country Vocalist for her hit song "I Feel Lucky."

"She's exciting. She's energetic. She's peppy," Matlack said.

"She puts on a hell of a show."

All seats for the concert are reserved. Tickets are $18 and may be purchased at the Manhattan Town Center, McCain Auditorium, Uptown CD's & Tapes of Junction City, House of Sight & Sound in Salina, the K-State Union, I.T.R. of Fort Riley and the Fountain of Youth in Topeka.

CAMPUS

Dining etiquette displayed

JULIE CORBIN

Collegian

The colleges of agriculture and human ecology, along with the Derby Dining Center, created a dining experience to teach students from both colleges about dining etiquette.

The Gold Room of Derby Food Center was transformed into a dining experience, which included an interview situation, for the 30-plus students of the College of Agriculture.

The students were seated at tables of four and were given a menu, in which all elements of the meal were items to be avoided in a real interview situation.

For the five students in the College of Human Ecology, the evening presented a serving practicum. The students were expected to read the signs given by the dining agriculture students and serve them accordingly.

"It was a practical experience from classroom situations, from two different colleges, along with the assistance of the food centers," John Riley, assistant director of Academic Programs and instructor of Ag Employment, said. "It was meant to be a learning experience."

The food centers were willing to work with the two colleges, and they prepared a totally separate meal from what the dorm students were prepared. The menu included a tossed salad, a pasta buffet, French bread, peas and chocolate pie for dessert.

"It was really nice to have a structured meal where a lot of people who hadn't been exposed to etiquette rules were given the chance," Dustin Nichols, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said. "I've been exposed to them by being in Farm House, but there were things that were done different. It's kind of a trend thing. Etiquette rules change with the times."

During the meal, Pat Pesci, an instructor from the human ecology college who visited the Ag Employment class, walked around answering questions and troubleshooting.

His plans originally were to ask the students questions, but plans were changed as students took the initiative to ask first.

"It was not planned to be formal and stiff. We wanted people to be able to have fun and learn too,"

Riley said.

While students finished their dessert, an open discussion took place to answer further questions, to take suggestions for next year and introduce the wait staff from the College of Human Ecology.

Riley closed by saying it is important to have good manners, but it is also important to have skillful food servers.

"A good dining experience is really a two-way street. It requires good manners and protocol, but also depends on well educated wait staff who can understand the signs being given during the meal," he said.

"They must know when they are needed and when they are not needed. The wait person can make or break a good dining experience."

FLINT HILLS

Trustees ready to negotiate for park

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON— The trustees hoping to create a prairie park from Chase County's Z-Bar Ranch have appraisals in hand and are ready to negotiate.

"We've got our ducks all in order now," the group's chairman, Ross Beach, said Tuesday. "We've got an appraisal, and we've got it backed up with an appraisal from the bank."

The Z-Bar Ranch Board of Trustees plans to meet privately Thursday at K-State, to review the appraisals and discuss buying the 11,000-acre Flint Hills ranch. Sen.

Nancy Kassebaum also is scheduled to attend the meeting.

The group hopes to buy the land with private donations and create a prairie park, perhaps affiliated with the National Park Service.

Beach declined to disclose the land's appraised value while negotiations are under way with Boatman's Bank of Kansas City, which holds the ranch in trust. The bank had asked $4.5 million for the land.

Kassebaum created the 15-member board in 1991 to break a bitter deadlock between Kansans who opposed a new national park — led by Flint Hills ranchers, Republicans and farm groups — and those who most strongly favored it — led by conservationists, Democrats and residents of nearby Cottonwood Falls and Strong City.

The U.S. House last session passed a bill introduced by Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., to create a national park from the Z-Bar Ranch site. The measure died in the Senate, however, in part because of opposition from the state's two Republican senators, Kassebaum and Bob Dole.

Cats tip off spring by signing Hamilton

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Coach Dana Altman went the community college route during the first day of the spring-signing period to fill one of the three scholarships available.

Stanley Hamilton of Dodge City Community College — who was also being courted by Oklahoma and Iowa — signed yesterday afternoon with the Wildcats, said Howie Smith, Dodge City's sports information director.

Hamilton, a muscular player (6 feet, 6 inches, 225 pounds) who averaged 19 points and 11 rebounds for Dodge City, will probably be asked to assist Ron Lucas in filling the void left by outgoing senior Aaron Collier.

"I have a very big hole to fill," Hamilton said. "I think I can fill it and help out a little more."

Hamilton, who does most of his scoring underneath the basket and does very little outside shooting, shot 61 percent from the floor for the 13-14 Conquistadors. He has big-game potential, scoring more than 30 points five times last season.

He is originally from Savannah, Ga., and played a season of basketball at the Maine Central Institute. In his first season with Dodge City, the Conquistadors were 20-12.

Hamilton will have two years of eligibility with the Cats.

"He will be a good addition to K-State," Smith said. "He goes after the offensive rebounds. He times his jumps very well."

"He'll hold his own in the conference," Hamilton's weaknesses include free-throw shooting and ball-handling.

He shot just 53 percent from the charity stripe with Dodge City — especially low considering he's the type of player who draws a lot of fouls.

He also averaged nearly three turnovers a game — again, a disturbing number considering the position he plays.

"I really need to improve my ball-handling and free-throw shooting," Hamilton said. "Once I get those down pat, I think I can be a pretty good player."

And Smith said Hamilton realizes he needs to improve his outside shot, both from the field and the free-throw line.

"He's been practicing since the season was over," he said. "He's been told that if he expects to play at the end of ballgames, he has got to work on his shot."

"He has been working on a 15- to 17-foot jump shot," Smith said. "It would open things up for him from the outside or if he went to the basket."

Collier averaged 9.1 points and 6.6 rebounds for the Wildcats this season. His 50-percent shooting was tops among the Cats' seven leading players.

Lucas finished the season with an average of 4.7 points and 3.1 rebounds a game. He shot 48.6 percent from the floor and led the team in scoring against Sam Houston State.

But Wildcat coach Dana Altman hasn't said Lucas inherited the starting role from Collier.

"I try not to pencil in anything," Altman said. "I try to make sure that everybody gets his shot."

"But Ron has some minutes, and that will help."

The K-State Sports Information office did not release any signings Wednesday, and no other signings were immediately known.

Smith said Hamilton is relieved the process is done.

"He's said he is happy it is over," Smith said. "He said the last month has been hectic for him."

Hamilton visited K-State last weekend and, according to Smith, liked it.

"He felt comfortable about the campus," Smith said.

"When he talked with (Oklahoma coach Billy) Tubbs this week, he told him that K-State had a more of a family atmosphere than Oklahoma."

Gwen Wentland braves rain and low temperatures Wednesday afternoon during the women's heptathlon portion of the KU Relays. Wentland won the high jump competition and is currently in fourth place with 2,807 points.

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Gwen Wentland, who is competing in just her second career heptathlon, is currently in fourth place in the multi-event after the first day of competition at the University of Kansas Relays in Lawrence.

Wentland, along with decathlon competitors Troy Adkins and Jason

Meredith, fought the harsh weather conditions at KU's Memorial Stadium Wednesday.

"Under good conditions, Gwen is in a position to certainly have a personal record and possibly set a school record," interim track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "The events that she has to do well in to score points, such as the high jump and long jump, are greatly affected by the weather."

Wentland won the high-jump portion of the competition with a jump of 5 feet, 10-1/2 inches to bring her score to 2,807 points after day one.

The heptathlon will finish with the long jump, javelin and the 800-meter run today.

In the Jim Bausch Decathlon, Adkins is in fourth place with 3,612 points, and Jason Meredith collected 3,339 points to earn seventh place.

"We had an off-day," Rovelto said. "Troy could still go out and finish with a personal record total because he has improved so much in the events that were his weakest at one time."

"I'm not so concerned with how they place as I am with the scores. I want the scores to reflect what the kids are capable of at this point in their training."

Adkins and Meredith will compete today in the 110-meter hurdles, discus, pole vault, javelin and 1,500-meter run.

GOLF

Wildcat men finish in 5th

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

After Tuesday's first two rounds of play, the Wildcat men's golf team appeared to be in a good position to win the Bent Brook-Blazer Invitational in Birmingham, Ala.

K-State was just a stroke back of nationally ranked Auburn after firing a first-day total of 427, and the Cats were ahead of Alabama, another national power.

But the Wildcats shot a 445 Wednesday afternoon, finishing with a two-day total of 872 and falling to fifth place in the overall standings of the 18-team tournament.

And even though K-State's second-day total was 18 strokes off of its first-day total, Coach Mark Elliott said he was pleased with his team's performance against nationally ranked opponents.

"We've proven we can play with them," he said. "Now it's just a matter of being consistent throughout the whole tournament."

"We have made a lot of strides."

The Cats were lead by Jim Brenneman, a senior from Wichita, who fired a 215. He finished in a tie for sixth place. Brenneman shot a career-best round of 68 in the first day of competition, and his final count left him just one stroke shy of the all-tournament team.

"I feel good about the tournament," Brenneman said. "I feel good about our team. I feel like we've made some great strides."

"I think we are playing well going into the Big Eight."

Chad Judd finished the 54-hole tournament with a score of 216, tying him for 10th. His second-round 69 was a career best.

Richard Laing finished in a tie for 28th place with a score of 222, and he was followed closely by Brett Waldman's 223. Freshman Scott Hovis rounded out the scoring for K-State with a 228, good for 66th.

Alabama won the tournament with a score of 862, and Auburn finished in second with an 865.

K-State finished well above all other Big Eight schools that were in the tournament. Both Nebraska and Iowa State tied for 10th place with scores of 883.

The Wildcat men will next be in action at the Big Eight championship in Hutchinson on April 26-27.

NCAA reduces shot clock to 35 seconds to speed up games

Guarded 5-second rule eliminated by committee

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The NCAA, in an attempt to speed play in men's basketball and reduce excessive fouling in the last minutes, voted Wednesday to reduce the shot clock from 45 to 35 seconds.

Members of the men's basketball rules committee admitted they don't think many coaches will be happy.

"Through the years, if the rules committee had waited for a mandate, there would hardly have been any rules changes," said Hank Nichols, secretary-rules editor of the committee. "We think it will pick up the excitement and take the game to a higher level of continuous action."

The 45-second clock was introduced in the 1985-86 season in a move that virtually eliminated stall tactics.

"The committee believes that 35 seconds on the shot clock will keep game action more continuous, and at the same time allow more conservative teams to still use ball control," Nichols said.

Nichols said the committee voted to keep the three-point arc at its present 19 feet, 9 inches but predicted it will eventually be widened.

"The direction we're going, it will move back, probably sooner than later," Nichols said. Besides chopping 10 seconds off the 45-second shot clock, the committee voted to stop the game clock after each field goal in the last minute of the game and last minute of overtime, and deleted the five-second dribbling violation while closely guarded.

Substitutions will not be allowed to enter the game in dead-ball situations when the game clock stops after a made field goal in the final minute.

Both the men's and women's committees voted that when a defensive player forces a held ball, the shot clock will not be reset if the offensive team retains possession by the alternating-possession arrow.

Southern California coach George Raveling, a member of the committee, said he did not think the 35-second shot clock will bring great change.

"There will be some initial resistance in some pockets of the coaching profession," he said. "But it's the committee's feeling that when you reduce the clock to 35 seconds, eliminate the five-second closely guarded dribbling violation and stop the clock after a made field goal in the last minute, it will help better administer the last one or two minutes of a game."

"Right now, we feel that's perhaps the most paramount problem facing college basketball — what to do with the last two minutes of the game to smooth it out. I don't think it's going to take a great adjustment."

Nichols admitted there was no sentiment among coaches to change the clock, and the committee may be criticized for fixing something that isn't broken.

"In all these years in which we've tried to address the end-of-game problems, we've never come up with the answer," he said. "It's the first move the committee has been able to make addressing the end-of-game situation, which seems to be one of the major problems facing intercollegiate basketball, if you listen to fans, media and everybody else."

SPORTS DIGEST

► CORNHUSKERS SWEEP DOUBLEHEADER FROM WILDCATS

Nebraska's Marc Sagmoen went three-for-five in the second game of a doubleheader — including two home runs and three runs batted in — to help the Cornhuskers take two games from K-State Wednesday at the Buck Beltzer Stadium in Lincoln.

The Huskers (14-15, 4-6) held off a late surge by the Wildcats (11-19, 4-6) the first game and won 13-9. Nebraska came from behind in the second contest to win 6-2.

► ROYAL RALLY IN 9TH FALLS SHORT WHILE KC FALLS TO 1-7

NEW YORK (AP) — Yankee pitcher Bob Wickman came into the ninth with a three-hitter and a 6-1 lead. But in the ninth, he gave up four runs with two outs on Kevin Reynolds' RBI single and a three-run homer by rookie Phil Hiatt, his second.

For the struggling Royals, however, it was too little, too late.

The star of the series was Sagmoen. With Wednesday's three hits, he finished the series by going eight-for-15 with four home runs and nine RBIs and nine walks.

In the first game, the Wildcats were trailing 12-2 in the eighth. But K-State scored seven runs in the final two frames to make the game close.

Wildcat pitchers who took losses in the games were Scott Dreiling, now 1-3 and Dan Driskill, 3-5.

Steve Farr got the last out for the Yankees' first save of the season as New York held on for a 6-5 victory over Kansas City.

Kansas City lost the seventh of its first eight games, while the Yankees won their fourth in five.

"We're not doing much of anything right now," Royals manager Hal McRae said.

TENNIS

Netters to face nationally ranked Kansas

RON LACKEY
Collegian

The nationally ranked Kansas Jayhawk tennis team will be visiting K-State today for a tough Big Eight match-up.

National standings released last week ranked Kansas, 13-6 overall, as 17th in the nation. The Hawks are also first in the conference with a 4-0 record.

This is a substantial test for the Wildcats, who are currently ranked fourth in the Big Eight.

The Wildcats are 3-2 in the Big Eight, 6-11 overall.

With this in mind, K-State coach Mike Bietau said he is ready.

"They've beaten everybody in the conference," Bietau said of the Jayhawks. "They've beaten everyone convincingly. It's an awfully good team. We'll approach that match as we do with everyone."

"We'll set some individual goals and some things to do to get ready for Colorado and the Big Eight tournament."

The Wildcat players also know what they have to do to come out on top.

"The Jayhawks are definitely going to be our toughest match," said Lindy Neethling, K-State's No. 4 seed. "They're undefeated so far. They've beaten Oklahoma and Oklahoma State. So, I think we've got to pull out everything against Kansas."

"We've just got to give it all we've got."

Second-seeded Suzanne Sim said she, too, understands KU's strength.

"That will be a real tough match," Sim said. "We're definitely going to have our chances and opportunities, but they're the best team we're going to play."

"We just need to hang in there."

COMMUNITY

Program teaches change

RITA KIDD
Collegian

Ways to change social relations in the black community were presented during the sixth American Ethnic Studies program Wednesday in the K-State Union.

"An economic gap will result in greater fragmentation and diversity within the black community," said Arthur Evans Jr., professor of sociology at Florida Atlantic University in Boca Raton.

During the 1960s, equal opportunity and employment increased for blacks, resulting in a growing number of middle-class blacks, Evans said.

The new black middle class is upwardly mobile and holds a more secure position in the labor market, Evans said.

Evans said through migration and emancipation, blacks gain a sense of freedom, but without the direction and control previously supplied by custom.

"Work is much more than a means of making money," Evans said.

Besides regular incomes, work gives coherent organization of expectations and goals. Work has a significant effect on attitudes and perceptions of black populations, he said.

"The job becomes part of the person," Evans said.

Blacks have more difficulty working in corporations because black life is further from the corporations and the white managers than white life is, he said.

The exodus of middle-class blacks from ghettos left the black underclass cut off from the rest of the world, Evans said.

"Writers have argued that the black middle class has betrayed their role to the black community, but emergence of a new black middle class is a hopeful sign in the history of blacks in America," Evans said.

Washburn drafts new mission, image

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Washburn University's mission has been misunderstood and may have contributed to its failure to be included in the state university system, its president said Wednesday.

President Hugh Thompson said Washburn is perceived as an anomaly because it serves as a community college by providing associate degrees and also offers baccalaureate and graduate programs. It is the only municipal university in the nation.

"When dealing with the Kansas Board of Regents, it's very difficult for them to look at us in the same light as other regents' institutions," Thompson said.

Washburn officials have drafted a new mission statement, which university officials hope will clear up some confusion.

"I think it's unfortunate that we're not perceived as a resource for the state of Kansas," Thompson told reporters during a luncheon.

Wayne Sheley, vice president for academic affairs, said Washburn will concentrate on offering quality undergraduate instruction.

"We want to be the leading undergraduate institution in the state," he said.

Officials said Washburn serves a student population that includes many older, non-traditional students who work during the day and take classes at night.

A Washburn proposal that would have phased the university into the regents' system was rejected by the Legislative Educational Planning Committee in November. A majority of the 11 lawmakers said they didn't think the state had the money to support Washburn.

Thompson said the university has maintained a low profile, but that will change.

"We're going to have to begin to get our story across," he said.

Thompson said the state should develop a master plan for higher education that includes community colleges and universities.

Until a master plan is developed, the state is going to continue to have problems with governance and financing, Thompson said.

"We're not dealing with an educational problem — we're dealing with a political problem," Sheley said.

Washburn officials said it is just a matter of time before the school is allowed into the system.

Sheley said Washburn was doing well on its own but would eventually need more support.

David Monical, vice president for government affairs, said the issue of Washburn entering the regents' system was a matter of providing a choice for students.

He said public schools also should provide financial and geographic accessibility for students.

"The problem is the Legislature doesn't see there is a crisis at Washburn, and there is not," Monical said. "Our concern is that when tuition reaches a certain level, it will create a barrier."

Presidential hopefuls face run-off election they were honored to be up against such "good folks."

"They are strong leaders, and they will continue to be strong and heard," Skoog said.

At Christopher O'Bryan's, Tracy Mader and Marc Scarbrough waited for the call with the results.

The bar quieted when the call came in announcing Mader had finished in third place by 16 votes.

Mader calmly repeated the information to the crowd.

"Everything happens for a reason. Marc and I weren't meant to be for KSU at this time. What doesn't kill people makes them stronger," Mader said.

After the announcement, Mader and Scarbrough received consolations from their friends.

Mader also said he would wait until the morning when the excitement goes down to get the official count from the election committee before deciding what he would do next.

Charles Walters and Ian Bautista, who finished fourth, were at the Ecumenical Campus Ministry when the call came through.

"We set out with the purpose of education and awareness, and we did that," Walters said to Bautista and a small crowd of campaign workers.

"I hope everyone here continues with what we've started. I don't want to sound like Ross Perot, but we can still push our agenda," he said.

Fifth place finishers Doug Schwenk and running mate Michelle Munson were also disappointed.

They sat in silence with their campaign supporters but said they wouldn't have done anything different.

"I am glad I ran," Schwenk said. "At least I got to see my name all over campus."

"We gave it our best effort."

Munson said she was glad she ran and still hopes to take part in student government.

Both of the candidates said they wish Wingert and Skoog the best.

Total votes cast in the election were 3,475.

Former SGA coordinator of student activities, Sally Routson, said the turnout was about normal for a year without a referendum on the ballot.

STAFF WRITERS RHONDA WILSON, NEIL ANDERSON, WADE SISSON, MICHELLE ROGERS AND KARREY BRITT CONTRIBUTED TO THIS STORY.

Juror's illness brings halt to deliberations

Clymer said he too hoped Davies wouldn't dismiss the ill juror.

Jurors had been deliberating whether Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell and Theodore Briseno and ex-Officer Timothy Wind, all white, deprived black motorist King of his civil rights. An onlooker videotaped police beating King after a traffic stop March 3, 1991.

In South Central Los Angeles, hit hardest by last year's riots, the Rev. Cecil Murray was presiding at a funeral when the judge called participants to court. When it became clear there was no verdict, Murray asked, "Isn't most of life anticlimactic?"

Wednesday began with a strange spectacle at the downtown courthouse. Koon and his attorney, Ira Salzman, arrived wearing Groucho Marx-style gag glasses with fake noses and phony mustaches.

"We're trying to provide a little light-heartedness," Salzman told reporters. He said the masks were given as gifts.

Braun questioned the appropriateness of the disguises during such a serious case. "These men have been pushed beyond human limits to undergo this thing, and it's probably not in the best taste, but they are decent men and under cooler conditions I'm sure they wouldn't have done it," he said.

Also Wednesday, defense attorney Michael Stone confirmed that U.S. Marshal Craig Meacham met with lawyers to discuss plans for their federal building departure after verdicts are announced. Salzman has said he has received 20 death threats because of his defense of Koon.

A helicopter was seen practicing landings on the courthouse roof Wednesday, but Stone wouldn't say whether there are plans for a departure by helicopter.

HOUSING

Hunting for living space not always easy

NICOLLE FOLSOM

Collegian

If students are scrambling to find the perfect house or apartment for next year, their search for quality might take longer than they expected.

"The conditions are really poor," Heath Harding, senior in marketing and business education, said about the dwellings he has looked at the past few weeks.

Harding has seen at least 15 prospective places to live and has found nothing he thinks is worth his money.

"They look like slums," he said.

The carpet is either old or nonexistent, there are holes in the walls, and many windows are not airtight or screened, he said.

"It is so infuriating," Harding said. "They expect you to live like pigs."

Harding, who works more than 20 hours a week, said he thinks it is unfair for students to pay exorbitant rent while trying to put themselves through school, especially when most of the housing available is poor quality.

"I feel like a banker being held up; we're being robbed," he said.

He said he wishes the government valued education enough to do something to encourage affordable, clean housing.

To avoid running into shoddy apartments and houses, Harding suggests contacting friends and acquaintances before beginning the search to find out the type of experiences they've had.

"Talk to as many people as you can," he said.

Trudi Strevey, freshman in pre-nursing, faced similar frustrations when she set out to find a place to call home.

Strevey, who was looking for a one-bedroom, started her search by looking through the classified ads.

"I just mainly made a lot of phone calls," she said.

The apartments she said she found were mostly small, dirty and expensive.

"Most of them were above $300," Strevey said.

What Strevey wanted was something clean, roomy, within walking distance from campus, partially furnished and affordable.

She finally found an apartment that suited her after looking at seven other places, she said.

There are several things to consider before putting a name on the dotted line of a lease.

Julia O'Dell, director of the Consumer Relations Board, which is located in the Student Governing Association office, wishes more students would come to her before starting a search for a place to live, she said.

"I like them to go over a rental-agreement checklist," she said.

The checklist includes rent, roommates, time of occupancy, damages, laundry and more.

Structure is also important to look at, she said.

O'Dell cautions students to be clear about smoke detectors, noise levels, open wiring, plumbing problems and fire escapes.

Leases should be looked over by a friend or a parent before being signed, she said.

"People need to read their lease," O'Dell said. "You should be insistent."

A list of student complaints about specific landlords is maintained by the Consumer Relations Board and is open to the public so students can see if their prospective landlords have had any complaints filed against them.

"It let's them be an informed consumer," O'Dell said.

Salvucci supports planning with value

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

The speaker for the third annual Lapping Lecture on Planning and Development this week has saved 2,000 homes and businesses from destruction.

When Fred Salvucci was manager for Little City Hall in East Boston, he was able to get the city to drop plans for an Inner Belt highway that would have leveled 2,000 housing units and businesses employing about 3,000 people, according to the May/June 1992 issue of "Technology Review."

Salvucci is also responsible for the Boston Central Artery and Tunnel highway project. This project is one of the largest public works ever undertaken in the United States. When the estimated $6.5 billion project is done, it will almost double Boston's Interstate 93 capacity.

"Fred has been a real strident supporter of community values and not allowing certain values to be lost in the community planning process," said Richard Forsyth, director of the Center for Planning and Design Innovation for the College of Architecture and Design, and chairman of the college lectures.

Salvucci is a senior lecturer in the Center for Transportation Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He will speak on "Community Participation, Planning and Urban Design in the Boston Central Artery Tunnel Project" at 2 p.m. today in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

The lecture is sponsored by the College of Architecture and Design, the University of Missouri-Kansas City and the Economic Development Corporation of Kansas City.

The lecture was started in honor of Mark Lapping, dean of the College of Architecture and Design at K-State from 1984 to 1989 who is currently dean of the Rutgers University Faculty of Planning, Forsyth said.

The joint sponsorship of the lecture series is due to the good relationships Lapping helped K-State establish with UMKC and the Economic Development Corporation. Because of this joint sponsorship there is also a lecture at UMKC, he said.

ESSENTIALS

Love is everything on your list, not a list of responsibilities

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I would like to respond to your column printed on April 8 titled "If you believe it's love, it is."

Your answer to the letter breaks my heart because it so evidently reflects the lies our society has been taught to believe as truth.

Love is not just a feeling, and this idea has permeated our society. This flippant answer can be used to explain why it is all right to have sex with one partner after another and then blow it all off with the excuse, "I just didn't love him anymore."

It also explains how a 15-year marriage can go up in smoke because, "it just didn't feel right anymore."

If love is just a feeling, and you get married, what happens when you don't feel like you love him anymore? Get a divorce? No. That is not how love or marriage was created to work.

Love is not just a physical attraction. What happens if the good-looking guy you "love" is in a car wreck and now he's ugly? Do you not "love" him anymore? That, my friend, is not real love.

Real love is a dedication to a person "for better or worse." It is a willingness to stand by a person no matter what, even to the point of dying. "Greater love has none than this — that he lay down his life for his friends." Love doesn't just make you feel good.

Unconditional love is loving and caring for a person, despite the fact that we don't like everything they do. It is a willingness to sacrifice for the other person's benefit. Real love is patient and kind. It doesn't envy, boast and isn't proud. It isn't self-seeking, rude or easily angered, but always trusts, hopes, protects and preserves. Real love never fails.

A Reader

DEAR READER,

I agree with you that love and promiscuity do not go hand in hand. I also agree that love and marriage, sadly, are mutually exclusive for many people.

Love is all the things you eloquently list: trusting, protecting and honesty.

But please don't wrap love in the serious garb of duty, responsibility, social mores and morality. You can try, but love won't allow it.

Love is a carefree butterfly that can light on even the most unsuspecting person without sweet warning.

You question my advice to the woman who wrote asking if the wonderful feelings she had was love. Sure, I said. Why not? Far be it from me to give some person who is falling in love a list of responsibilities, duties and tragic hypothetical love-testing examples to bring them down.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Ohio prisoners threaten to kill hostage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — Inmates threatened to kill one of eight prison guard hostages Wednesday unless authorities met demands that reportedly included firing the prison warden and hiring more black guards.

Later Wednesday, food and water were sent in to prisoners at the maximum-security prison for the first time since the riot began Sunday, officials said.

Seven inmates have died in the standoff at the Southern Ohio Correctional Facility in which about 450 inmates were barricaded in a cellblock on the northwest side of the prison.

Also Wednesday, Gov. George Voinovich activated 500 Ohio National Guard soldiers to assist at the prison in south-central Ohio, about 70 miles south of Columbus.

Early Wednesday, barricaded inmates had issued a threat in a message scrawled on a sheet hung from a cellblock window. The banner said inmates would kill a hostage in 3-1/2 hours if 19 demands they presented to corrections officials were not met.

Prison officials did not know whether any hostages had been harmed, said Sharon Kornegay, a spokeswoman for the Ohio Department of Rehabilitation and Correction.

"We have no positive confirmation of the death of any hostage," she said. "Our negotiating team says it's impossible to confirm the condition of the hostages."

Kornegay refused to answer questions about the inmates' demands and would not comment on a report published Wednesday in the Daily Times of Portsmouth.

The newspaper, quoting unidentified sources, said inmates are demanding the dismissal of prison Warden Art Tate and most unit supervisors, better jobs for black inmates, more black guards, relaxation of day-to-day restrictions and contact with the media.

Prison authorities have said they have received conflicting information about whether the rioting was racially motivated.

Six of the victims, all beaten to death during rioting Sunday, were white. A seventh victim, who was found dead in his cell in an adjacent cellblock, was black. The cause of his death hasn't been released.

Tessa Unwin, another corrections department spokeswoman, downplayed the inmates' threatening message as "a standard threat they've been issuing." Previously, prison officials had denied that inmates had threatened the safety of eight guards held hostage since the siege began on Sunday.

Inside the prison, inmates still were being denied electricity, authorities said, but food and water were sent in for the first time since Sunday.

Officials said that in return, they hoped the inmates would allow two of the hostages to receive prescription medicine that was delivered with the food.

"It was a good-faith gesture on our part," Kornegay said. She declined to specify the type of medicine or the health problems of the two hostages but said negotiations were continuing.

Prison officials wouldn't say how many National Guard soldiers were being used and described the measure as "precautionary." Until Wednesday, the law enforcement force at the complex was made up mainly of state Highway Patrol troopers and prison guards.

In another development, corrections officials reversed an earlier decision to put a lid on news briefings, announcing that they would begin hourly briefings and planned to install sound equipment to help broadcasters.

Officials have restricted air travel over the prison, partly to keep helicopters carrying television camera operators from flying over.

Early Wednesday, a law enforcement helicopter crashed while patrolling the prison complex. The pilot and a passenger — both law enforcement officials — were slightly injured; a third officer broke his leg running to the crash site to help. The cause of the accident was not known.

Vince's mellow country blues

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

There's a paradox here. Sure Vince Gill has two platinum albums. Sure he's won awards aplenty, and sure his latest album "I Still Believe in You" is on it's way to double-platinum.

The problem here is Gill's songs. They're sad. Fine when your sitting at home feelin' a little blue. The man talks to you in his words and you feel better.

But if you want a night of Gill live you might be left a little dry. Leaving your seat to dance in the aisles is tough when his music has you pinned.

This was the predominant problem last night as Gill took the stage in Bramlage Coliseum. Great musicians, great songs, but a bit depressing live.

With hits such as "Pocket full of Gold," and "Look at Us," Gill personified the sad cowboy. His tense voice pushing problems at you, and mellowing your concert mood.

This is not to say, however, that a trip to Gill's show is a lesson in Suicide 101. The man's talent simply lies in the realm of the low-key love song.

With songs such as "That's all Right Mama," "Nothing Like a Woman," "One More Last Chance," and the recently released "No Future in the Past," Gill brings to the stage a songwriting ability and crooning mellow voice that has the sharp ability to captivate audiences, while still forcing them to reflect on forgotten memories.

However, like all things good and proper, there was a balance here. Gill brought a friend and the limits of the Bramlage foundation was tested.

Mary-Chapin Carpenter pulls energy out of thin air and doesn't pull you to your feet, hell, she drags you. She is simply one of the best in the business, and to see her live you soon realize why — there is just no peak to this woman.

She drags a little bit of country and a little bit of folk out of the closet, kicks it in the butt and hands it to you with a kiss.

Lyrics, backed with a smooth talent for a live sound, Carpenter captivated the audience from the first cord.

Songs such as "I feel Lucky," "Passionate Kisses," and "Down at the Twist and Shout" kept the audience at a feverish peak throughout. If one song shined though however it was "I Take My Chances." A melody with a message, Carpenter gets extra personal with her music and explains what life is all about.

The pinnacle of her performance, however, was an impromptu serenade of unwitting security guard Eric Stonestreet, sophomore in Sociology, who presided over the front row. Dousing him with her affection, she not only shows an openness to live performance, but a genuine relaxed attitude towards her audience.

Last night's concert goes saw Carpenters energy mixed with Gill's mellow melodies. Hard stuff to beat. If you missed the show, you missed a glorious lot.

CMA Female Vocalist of the Year Mary-Chapin Carpenter receives a kiss from guitarist John Jennings while singing "Passionate Kisses" as she opened for Vince Gill Thursday night.

Salaries to increase with tuition

"The Legislature, in reviewing our budget, said out-of-state tuition should be higher, and they took $1 million out of our budget."

RAY HAUKE
DIRECTOR OF PLANNING AND BUDGET FOR THE REGENTS

In-State tuition to increase, beginning fall 1993

WADE SISSON
Collegian

The Kansas Board of Regents tentatively approved tuition increases for fiscal year 1995 on Thursday.

The Regents Tuition and Fees Committee, which will not make a formal presentation until next month, currently recommends the board raise in-state tuition at K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University by 9 percent, Jackie McClaskey, student body president, said.

The tuition increase would begin in the fall of 1994.

The tuition committee also recommended a 5-percent in-state tuition increase for Fort Hays State, Pittsburg State and Emporia State universities, she said.

An across-the-board, out-of-state tuition increase of 13 percent was also suggested by the committee.

One year ago, the board recommended both in-state and out-of-state tuition be raised 6 percent for research institutions and 8 percent for regional universities.

The Kansas Legislature, however, deemed otherwise by encouraging an additional 2-percent increase in out-of-state tuition.

"The Legislature, in reviewing our budget, said out-of-state tuition should be higher, and they took $1 million out of our budget," Ray Hauke, director of planning and budget for the board, said.

The tuition committee recommended the additional tuition created by the increases be used for faculty salary increases.

"For the first time," President Jon Wefald said at the board meeting at Emporia State, "we can get faculty salaries to a competitive basis."

"This plan could be the light at the end of the tunnel," he said.

Student Body President Jackie McClaskey, in her Students' Advisory Committee report, spoke about three remaining initiatives — the transfer policy, faculty evaluations and campus safety.

Attempting to improve the advising process for regent institutions, the board considered requiring ACT scores of high-school students entering universities.

McClaskey said SAC supports the requirement.

"We hope this will be only the first step in looking at the problem of advising," she said.

The board also passed a proposal to finance renovations to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex by issuing $8,665,000 in revenue bonds.

The bonds will be repaid by funds from the Recreation Complex Student Fees.

Also passed was K-State-Salina's proposal to build a dormitory on campus.

Jury still deliberating King verdict

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — A juror whose illness had halted deliberations in the federal Rodney King beating trial rejoined the panel Thursday for a sixth day of talks. The jury reached no verdict by day's end.

The federal jury now has deliberated longer than a state jury did last year before acquitting four police officers of most assault charges in King's beating. Since Saturday, the federal panel has deliberated for 33 hours, an hour more than the state jury spent.

Wednesday's deliberations were cut short when a juror fell ill and went to a doctor. No information about the illness was disclosed, and the jurors haven't been identified.

Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell and Theodore Briseno and ex-Officer Timothy Wind, all white, are charged in the federal trial with depriving black motorist King of his civil rights during the March 3, 1991, beating after a traffic stop.

After the state verdict was announced April 29, three days of rioting left 54 people dead and caused $1 billion in damages.

To prevent another riot, community leaders have taken to the streets urging peace when the verdicts are read. Hundreds of additional police officers patrol the city, and the National Guard is standing by.

Meanwhile, for the third time in two weeks, U.S. District Judge John G. Davies criticized reporters covering the trial and threatened for the first time to shut down the trial press room.

He contended a TV reporter violated a court order by broadcasting a closed-circuit, press-room speaker feed of proceedings in the courtroom Wednesday. Unlike many state courts, federal courts don't allow cameras or recording equipment in trials.

Davies initially ordered media lawyers to show why the press room shouldn't be closed. But after KCBS-TV reporter Bob Jimenez and a lawyer met with the judge, Davies sent word that he had rescinded that order and would reinstate Jimenez' trial credentials, which he had lifted

STUDENT SENATE

Senate debates Lafene hours, bike racks

Athletic-ticket-sales policy gets first reading

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

A bill that would allow Student Governing Association to purchase bike racks was in question for more than two hours of Student Senate Thursday.

The bill, which will be voted on by Senate in next week's meeting, would allocate $4,925 to SGA for the purchase of 10 bike racks, 100 signs — indicating dismount zones, caution zones, and no bike areas — and 20,000 bike route maps with new rules.

Also in first readings was a bill that would establish a revised athletic-ticket-sales policy.

If passed, this bill would set up specific guidelines for the sales and distribution of basketball tickets.

A proposal to modify operations at Lafene Student Health Center was also addressed in first readings.

This proposal would modify and enhance the operation of Lafene by extending the general medical clinic hours until 8:30 Monday through Friday, and Saturday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The extended hours would include a physician-on-duty in the facility, open pharmacy, medical records and cashiers, and a laboratory and X-ray technician on-call.

If passed, the proposal would eliminate an "after-hours" charge of $8 and a charge to call in physician, laboratory and X-ray personnel, whose after-hours fees are currently $15.

Also in first readings was a special allocation to the K-State Water Ski Team.

This allocation would allow the water ski team to purchase women's jump skis, a required replacement safety helmet and a new trick rope.

A bill that addressed the student health-insurance plan was passed.

This bill adopts the Monumental Life Insurance Company as the health insurance policy for the 1993-94 academic year.

The annual rates will be $876 for student only, $2,080 for student and spouse, $2,024 for student and children and $2,880 for family.

The Amateur Radio Club received a special allocation for $100 for the purchase of technical books, which are updated every 3 to 4 years.

A freedom-of-speech bill, proposed by Rob Rawlings, junior in economics and arts and sciences senator, failed.

The bill would allow the contents of a motion or speech to be unregulated during Senate.

At press time, Senate resumed debate about the reallocation of the Associated Students of Kansas line-item fee. This bill would reduce the line item for ASK to zero.

On a vote of 34 to 13 to 1, an amendment, proposed by Phil Anderson, instructor of speech and faculty senator, was passed that reallocates the 75-cent-per-student line fee collected for ASK to the academic competition teams.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. What is financial aid?

A. Financial aid is money available to you and your family to help pay for educational expenses. Its purpose is to supplement, not replace, the amount you and your family pay to meet your total educational expenses.

Q. How do I know what my "need" figure will be? What does my EFC mean?

A. The Federal Government calculates your Expected Family Contribution (EFC) by using a formula established by Congress. Your EFC is based on the information you entered on your Free Application for Federal Student Aid. Your EFC will be the same no matter where you attend college because the same formula is used by all schools throughout the nation. After K-State determines the total cost of education or budget for you, the EFC is subtracted from this amount and the result is your "need" figure. For example:

COST OF EDUCATION	$8000
MINUS EFC	-2000
=FINANCIAL NEED	$6000

If the cost of education is $8000 and your EFC is $2000, you will be eligible for $6000 in need-based financial aid. Your financial need would be met with a financial aid package that combines federal grants, loans, work-study, or K-State scholarships.

Q. What is the difference between grants and loans?

A. •Federal grants, available to students who meet financial need requirements, are funds that do not have to be repaid.
•Federal loans let you borrow money for college at low interest rates. Loans are paid back after you finish college.
•K-State scholarships are awards for students who excel in academic areas, activities, or sports or who have financial "need." They do not have to be repaid.
•Federal work-study jobs give you spending money and work experience. This need-based award allows you to work 10-20 hours per week.

Q. If I didn't qualify for financial aid last year, should I still apply?

A. YES! Even though the priority deadline of March 15th is past, you should still apply for financial assistance. Congress has changed the needs analysis formula, and this will make some students eligible for 1993-94 that were ineligible for 1992-93. Some important changes are as follow:

- The limits of adjusted gross income that a family can earn have increased.
- Home asset values are no longer reported or considered in the formula.
- Farm assets are no longer reported or considered in the formula if the family resides on the farm.
- If the parents and student file either a 1040EZ or 1040A and the parents' adjusted gross income is under $50,000, ALL assets are excluded from the formula for both parents and student.

Professor identifies protozoan in local waters

ROBBIE SPEARS

Collegian

Two K-State biology professors have found a protozoan called cryptosporidium in several Kansas waters, including Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Cryptosporidium causes a self-limiting disease, which most people get and get over in about a week, said George Marchin, associate professor of biology.

"The sickness one would receive from the protozoan would not be lethal. One might have a fever episode and some diarrhea," he said.

The protozoan is the same that contaminated Milwaukee's drinking water last week and made nearly 2,000 people sick. Residents got the go-ahead to begin using their tap water again without boiling it Wednesday.

"There has been cryptosporidium in the Manhattan area before there were even people. It's been here forever," he said.

Marchin and Steve Upton, associate professor of biology, said they did research funded by the Kansas Waters Resources and Research Institute from 1989 to 1991 that found the cryptosporidium in a variety of surface waters.

"We looked at the Kansas river, the Milford Reservoir, the Tuttle Creek Reservoir and some other small farm ponds. We basically found cryptosporidium in most of the water supplies," Marchin said.

Marchin said the protozoan can be found more or less frequently, following a seasonal rhythm.

"You might not find it in the winter, but you would find it in the summer," he said.

Of the samples taken from Tuttle Creek, Marchin said the majority of the water samples did contain the cryptosporidium.

Animals and other humans are the sources of the protozoan, he said.

Marchin said the Milford and Tuttle Creek reservoirs pose infection problems for swimmers or anyone who swallows the water.

Although many people believe cryptosporidium can be killed by chlorination and iodine concentrations, Marchin said filtration is the proper way to get rid of the protozoan.

"You could use iodine and chlorine in massive concentrations, but the concentrations required to kill the cryptosporidium would also kill the person," he said.

However, Manhattanites don't have reason to worry, Marchin said. The organism occurs quite often, and Manhattan's drinking water is safe because of its good filter system, he said.

"People shouldn't worry too much about it. It's everywhere in a lot of surface water," he said.

"Manhattan's water comes from well water, and well water doesn't contain cryptosporidium because the water is filtered by the soil and sand," he said.

Upton also said Manhattan's water is safe.

"They have a good filtering system, probably as good as any other midwestern towns have," he said.

Banner's message angers students

LYNN ANDERSON

Collegian

A pro-life abortion banner was stolen from between Lafene Health Center and Farrell Library. The controversial message of the banner is suspected to be the reason for its April 9 theft.

The banner drew a comparison between a 1769 slavery bill of sale, a Nazi swastika, and the phrase "Keep abortion legal." The three pictorial references were summarized in a sentence beneath them, which stated, "Three times in modern history the word 'person' has been redefined."

has been redefined."

"I felt it was extreme," Susan Schultz, junior in environmental design, said. "It put people that had had an abortion on the same scale as the Nazi and slave traders, which I found unnecessary."

Schultz said she was glad to hear it had been stolen.

"It was a little too dramatic," Jill Grosland, sophomore in business administration, said.

Students for the Right to Life President Amy Heffern, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education, said the organization had originally wanted to display the banner in lieu of the group's awareness week. She said the members suspected the banner might cause a response from the student body.

"People don't just rip a banner down for no reason," Heffern said. "We assume it was stolen because people didn't like what was said."

The members of the organization said they wanted to educate the K-State community about abortion, euthanasia and infanticide, Heffern said. She said the sign's message stressed that slavery and the killing of Jews were completely wrong.

"Abortion is really the same thing," Heffern said. "All exclude a minority."

Associate Dean of Student Life Susan Scott said the office had received numerous complaints from students, who expressed anger about the implications and offensive message of the banner. The secretaries and student assistants reported several disgruntled callers, Scott said.

Checking into the legality of the banner, Scott said there were no rules or regulations outlined within the University Activities Board Constitution that could prevent the sign from its continued display.

"I reviewed the contents of the sign with the University attorney and student attorney," Scott said. "There was nothing that prohibits its display."

The organizations decision to hang the sign was protected by the right to free speech in the Constitution, Scott said.

There are still no leads as to the whereabouts of the reported stolen banner, owned by Students for the Right to Life, Heffern said.

"A NOT-TO-BE MISSED TREASURE."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

This was no minor victory

THE ISSUE

After years of waiting, K-State will finally have a minors program.

Praise glory be. K-State joins the ranks of the educationally advanced.

We may have a parking problem.
We may not have smoking in the K-State Union.

We may have mediocre water fountains.
But K-State now has a minors program.

On Tuesday, Faculty Senate unanimously approved the proposed academic undergraduate minors program. There wasn't a nay in the house, and for that we applaud.

The minors program issue has been on the table, under the table and even behind the table for years. Literally years.

It was a hot tamale in 1969 — way back before many K-State students were out of their tie-dyed Pampers, and before others were just a glimmer in their daddy's hippie-glazed eyes.

And now it has finally passed. Wow.

It took a lot of persistence on the part of the students to get it through. We thank those who helped provide this opportunity for K-State students — from today and yesterday.

We now have a minors program, K-State, and the sweet smell of success, if not spring, is in the air.

Columnist missed some Easter points

Editor,
I read Brad Seabourn's 1993 "Easter Special" and found it interesting that he carefully avoided explaining how he rationalizes the miracle Christians celebrate at Easter.

He might have explained why he does not believe there really was a man known as Jesus Christ who was crucified and whose body disappeared. Or, he might explain why Jesus' followers would dispose of the body and then spend the rest of their lives suffering persecution and martyrdom to perpetuate the lie he had been resurrected.

Perhaps, Brad has thought of a logical motive for someone else to hide Jesus' body.

MINORS

Many need thanks for passing of program

Editor,
This letter is regarding the minors program Faculty Senate passed on April 13.

I am currently a senate intern and very concerned with this issue. I have had a lot of students come up to me, praising Student Senate for the job "they" did on the minors program.

To all K-State students, if you want to thank someone for the minors program, thank Student Body President Jackie McClaskey and the Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate, Steffany Carrel. Both have done outstanding jobs representing our student body.

In my opinion, the minors program will be a definite asset to K-State. As a student who is very much in favor of the minors program, I thank you President McClaskey and Steffany Carrel, on behalf of the other "concerned students."

HOMOSEXUALITY

Hart needs to look up self-determinism

Editor,
In response to John Hart's "Square pegs" column of April 13 — lesbians usually do not have anal intercourse. However, if they choose to, do you believe they really care what you think?

John, it's called self-determinism. Look into it.

Not homophobic, but rather "heterosexist"

Editor,
This letter is in response to John Hart's column of April 13.

I am not going to call Hart a homophobic bigot; I am going to call him a heterosexist. I feel it is important for me to publicly disagree with Hart because there are many people on this campus who would disagree with him but are silenced by the fear that they would be identified as homosexual. As I'm engaged to be married, I don't have to worry about that.

Hart cited a study by the American Psychological Association, which estimated that the average homosexual has an excess of 50 partners a year. He doesn't tell us what the APA based its estimate on, nor does he tell us how many partners the average heterosexual has in a year. Maybe Hart's energy could be more constructively channeled into promoting responsible sexual practices in his own community.

Hart uses the statement, "Homosexual practices, especially anal intercourse, don't produce life; they induce disease." Yet kissing can transmit mononucleosis, hugging can transmit lice, and vaginal sex can also transmit disease, but we don't classify those behaviors as unnatural or immoral.

At some point, humans recognized sex as a form of expression of love and emotion, which gives it a purpose beyond "survival of the species." If homosexual sex is an expression of love or emotion, then it is not any less natural than any other form of sexual expression that does not lead to pregnancy and childbirth.

It is the intolerance of heterosexuals, like Hart, who have brought suffering to the homosexual community, not the "homosexual lifestyle." It will also be heterosexuals, like Hart, who will be the last to recognize what gays, lesbians and bisexuals have always known — that their sexuality is as legitimate as anyone else's.

Human race in danger due to bad attitude

Editor,
John Hart's article on the gay lifestyle was a breath of fresh air. Today, as I began to read Kelly

Klawonn's article, I thought to myself, "Here we go again, same old crap," until I came upon this: "Being gay does have its advantages. One wild night of passion can't lead to a lifetime reminder."

Klawonn, in this quote, proved Hart to be 100-percent right. Thanks Kelly, now we know for sure who to blame for AIDS epidemic. Like Hart said, the average homo has 50 sexual partners per year.

It's Kelly Klawonn's type of attitude that will destroy the human race. How can we be expected to accept the homosexual lifestyle when you behave like this?

ELECTIONS

Voters who need help aren't capable people

Editor,
I am writing in reference to the April 15 editorial about voter poll restrictions.

The author felt the information on the candidates, put out by the Collegian, should be an exception to the rule. Those voter poll restrictions were put in place for good reasons. Might I suggest the Collegian spread out its coverage of the candidate views on election issues in order to allow greater exposure and retention? The day the Collegian printed its voting tool was missed by people who couldn't get a paper and ignored by people capable of developing their own viewpoints, not needing to be hand-held through the voting process.

THE LOVELY FOUNDATION OF FAITH

Let me tell you something: I am a man. But I have a hard time breaking a solid body electric guitar. Sure, the neck snaps off easy enough, but the body stays intact. You're making a lot of noise as the strings break loose. You even cut your hands.
Then the neighbors start looking at you.

Sunday afternoon I heard it. Diet Pepsi was using a Van Halen tune in a commercial.

I found myself so ... disillusioned. I was pissed at the world and looking for a little redemption. The beer in my fridge helped.

You see, I had loved Van Halen. Now their music had been sold out to everyone.
As I worked on a Foster's, the world slowed down and gave me focus to think. I'd quit smoking the day before, so I raised the can to my lips a little more often.

I was looking for an answer, some deeper truth to the human experience. An answer above the psycho-babble of collegiate gossip. Something as yearning as a Bob Seger tune without the K-Rock ties.

I knew it was impossible, knew I would die spiritually unfulfilled.

Then I saw her down the street.

She was one of the older ladies who walks her dog in my neighborhood. The skin hung loose from her face. I figured she was three times my age and must have known so much more about the commonality of the human experience.

"Tell me," I wanted to say, "Tell me what it's all about, would you? Give me the key to understanding."

She was nearing my corner now, and for a moment I spaced off.

This is what Machiavelli said:

"Men are less hesitant about harming someone who makes himself loved than one who makes himself feared, because love is held together by a chain of obligation which, since men are a sorry lot, is broken on every occasion in which their own self interest is concerned; but fear is held together by a dread of punishment which will never abandon you."

So, Machiavelli said fear was a greater motivation than love. More specifically, though, I figured fear of life without love is the motivation. And the anxiety of this fear produces hate.

Goddamn.

OK, so the main reason we see so much hate and blatant self-interest on the planet is a lack of faith in love. The only thing we believe in is that fear.

Look around you to see the hateful effects of that fear. Men who don't keep faith in women turn misogynistic. The upper class, in fear of falling to poverty, looks down on the poor. Rush Limbaugh, insecure of any kind of change, lambastes it all.

All these hateful people are running around like chickens with their heads cut off because, just like some Poison song, they don't have anything to believe in. If only they could have something, I thought.

The old lady and her dog slowly made their way to the edge of my lawn. I knew I'd have to think fast so I could discuss my new-found revelation with her.

I remembered that love and deception are both built upon a foundation of faith. So, I'd need something definite to build that faith on.

What could be stronger than mortal character? Oh, of course, I realized, I'd been ignoring the answer my entire life.

Frisbee! Yes, the Frisbee, the flying disc. It's the best invention, a gift from the Big Dude.

Hey, you can throw a Frisbee. You can use it as a hat when it rains. You can drink out of it. And, if you're into dope, they make great rolling trays. So I hear.

Not to mention, it's a passive sport, free from the unchecked aggression of humanity. You could only measure love, I determined, by using a Frisbee as a base.

I was so happy, and I wanted someone to share this news with. The old lady was by the drive now. I sat down my beer — now empty — and rose from my position on the porch.

I walked toward her, crunching through the wet grass, unshaven and unshowered. My flannel blew open in the wind, and I felt goosebumps form on my knees.

She looked up from her dog to me and back down again. She wore sci-fi sun glasses. I knew I'd have to speak soon.

"Pardon me, ma'am," I said when I got closer, "I just wanted to ask you something ..."

She looked down at the dog again. It had started urinating on my mail box.

It was a quiet sound.

SHANNON WILSON

When Fred Salvucci was presented with the idea of putting Boston's central artery system underground more than 20 years ago, he said he thought it was crazy.

Salvucci is responsible for the Boston Central Artery and Tunnel highway project. This project is one of the largest public works ever undertaken in the United States.

He asked what he was supposed to do while construction was under way, he said at the third annual Lapping Lecture on Planning and Development.

"Should I put a billboard on the edge of town that reads, 'City closed for renovations. Come back in a decade?'" Salvucci said.

The complexity of the project made it seem impossible to accomplish without shutting down the city, he said.

"There is a way to build a substitute before taking down the original," Salvucci said.

The Boston project's biggest problem proved to be the duality of planning, Salvucci said.

"When we made a presentation that was good for the environment, then the highway people said we must be building an urban beautification project," he said.

On the other side, he said the environmentalists were saying this project has transportation benefits, so it must have environmental faults.

The planning commission found itself caught in a Catch 22, he said.

Another problem people face when pushing an agenda is once an interest group is happy it disappears, Salvucci said.

"People don't become active and come to meetings, if they are happy," he said. "They come if they are unhappy."

People who work on projects need to remember that everyone sees and interprets things differently, Salvucci said. If any group interprets the project poorly, the planners could be in trouble.

Professors who attended the lecture said they believed Salvucci gave students good insight.

"Students learn skills at K-State. Salvucci is able to give them insight into the politics of urban design problems," Tony Barnes, professor of landscape architecture, said.

"When you build a highway, you aren't just building a highway. You have to deal with a lot of other aspects," Barnes said.

A project can have an effect on lifestyles, economics and environments, he said.

Volunteers to be recognized

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

Volunteers across campus will be recognized April 19-23 as a part of Community Service Week.

At K-State, time will be set aside to recognize students, faculty and staff for their efforts in volunteerism and service throughout the year.

Tandy Trost, senior in community health and nutrition and director of the Volunteer Clearinghouse, said close to 500 students are doing some form of community service. This doesn't include students volunteering independently, greek philanthropies or staff and faculty members.

As a part of National Youth Service Day on April 20, a Service Fair will be featured from 9 a.m. until 2 p.m. in the K-State Union Courtyard. Information tables and representatives from campus and community service agencies will recognize volunteers and promote volunteer opportunities available in the community.

Any organization involved with community service projects is invited to have a booth at the Service Fair.

David Saunders, junior in mechanical engineering, said Alpha Tau Omega fraternity and Delta Delta Delta sorority will have a booth to provide information about the "Miracle Mile" project to promote Childhelp USA.

"We take community service pretty seriously," Saunders said. "We have a goal of over 1,000 hours of community service."

Volunteers will also be recognized with a reception from 7:30 to 9 p.m., April 20, in Union 212. Aileen Cray, executive director of United Way of Riley County, and Marvin Kaiser, associate dean of arts and sciences, will be the speakers.

Cray said she will give a brief presentation on how student participation has an effect within the Riley County community.

"Some of the volunteer organizations rely heavily on the student population," Cray said.

Kelby Halone, graduate student in communication, said many people do service projects without ever getting recognized.

"We want to let them know what they do is necessary," Halone said. "This is an opportunity to target volunteers and say 'Thank you' for your contributions."

A service information table will be set up on April 16 and 19 in the Union.

Organizations interested in displaying a booth at the Service Fair may contact the Community Service Program.

K-Staters receive 4 Goldwaters

REGGIE BLACKWELL

Four K-State students have won the $14,000 Goldwater scholarships.

These awards bring the total to 15 Goldwater scholarships won by K-Staters since the program began in 1989. K-State's record is the best among the nation's public universities.

"This is the third consecutive year that K-State students have won four Goldwater scholarships," President Jon Wefald said. "Our students competed against 2,000 nominees for the 233 scholarships. Much of this continued excellence in developing student scholars at K-State can be attributed to the outstanding efforts of scholar adviser Nancy Twiss."

K-State's winners are Keith Loseke, sophomore in mathematics and electrical engineering; Michelle Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering and biochemistry; Scott Rottinghaus, sophomore in biology and chemical science; and Tanya Williams, senior in chemistry and biochemistry.

Loseke worked with a professor at Hutchinson Community College and discovered an original math formula, which was published in Mathematics Magazine. His senior year in high school he was recognized by USA Today as one of the top 20 seniors in the nation.

Munson conducts research on genetic recombinations associated with cancer with Beth Montelone, assistant professor of biology.

Rottinghaus also conducts research in virology and oncology in K-State's Division of Biology.

"I was really excited to hear I won the scholarship," he said.

Williams, a chemistry and physics lab instructor, has made a research presentation to the Kansas Academy of Science.

Williams said she really couldn't believe it when she found out she won.

"It really hasn't sunk in yet," she said.

She said after she graduates next year she would like to begin studying binding proteins to DNA.

K-State was among a few universities to have four or more winners. Others with four included Duke, 14; Montana State, 16; Stanford, 11; and California Tech, 6. The Goldwater Scholarship was set up by Congress in 1989 for science and math students.

KU Relays hit full stride

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Gwen Wentland, Cat heptathlete, fights for the lead as she prepares to enter the final turn of the 800-meter run Thursday at the KU Relays. Wentland finished third in the race.

Wildcats preparing for Big Eight championships

DEREK NELSON

Collegian

The K-State track and field squads travel to Lawrence this weekend as the 68th annual KU Relays move into high gear.

Three Wildcat athletes — Gwen Wentland, Jason Meredith and Troy Adkins — competed in the first two days of events.

Wentland had a solid second-day performance to earn a third-place finish in her second-ever heptathlon.

Meredith finished the decathlon in fifth place with 6,482 points, and he won the 1,500-meter run.

Adkins fell to 10th after a knee injury kept him from competing in the final two events.

The relays, one of the most prestigious track and field meets in the country, will be used as a stepping stone for the team's progress toward the Big Eight championships.

"The main thing is to keep improving for the Big Eight meet," Wildcat assistant coach Todd Trask said. "We're still training hard, and we haven't backed off. There are lots of relays we have to prepare for."

Trask said he also expects the meet to be some relief for the athletes.

"It's nice because the kids will be running a lot of relays, and they can have more fun working with each other and preparing for them," he said.

With some Wildcats, though, the coaches are looking for more than participation.

"With Paulette (Staats), an individual title in the 1,500-meter run on Friday is very realistic," he said. "We're looking for a win, not necessarily a great time out of Paulette."

She's on the border of breaking through with a great race."

The women's distance runners have been the backbone of the team this year. Staats has won or finished second at all three meets in the 1,500. Jennifer Hillier has also placed high in the 1,500 and 3,000.

The women's throwers have been led by a familiar face — Shanele Stires. The Lady Cat basketball player is taking to the field events.

"It's hard getting used to throwing again," Stires said. "The other girls have put in time and I haven't been able to do that. The transition has been difficult."

So far, Stires has had little trouble changing sports. In her first meet of the year, at the Arizona Shootout in March, Stires won the shot put and placed third in the discus.

"I'd like to be performing at the level I was before, but honestly, I'm not there yet," she said. "I'm working hard to get back, but it takes time — and I haven't had that."

The men's team will also face some challenges at the meet.

The men have also been led by the distance runners. Francis O'Neill has won the mile and twice won the 800-meter run this year.

"The distance runners will finally get an opportunity to run the races they've been training for," he said.

Mike Becker will compete in his first 10,000-meter run of the season.

"This has been a relief week for the distance runners," Trask said. "They all should be relaxed and ready to go."

And interim coach Cliff Rovelto said the weekend will give K-State a chance to excel.

"The bottom line is that this is a good meet for us," he said. "If the weather cooperates, I expect to see some good performances."

Altman fills 2nd void

Wing man Noland led Three Rivers juco with 21 points a game

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Wildcat coach Dana Altman went back to the source that yielded current Wildcat Anthony Beane, signing Three Rivers Community College's leading scorer, Belvis Noland, Thursday afternoon.

"I hope Dana gets as much out of him as he got out of Beane," Three Rivers athletic director Gene Bess said.

"I think Belvis will do well," he said. "The kid is an impact player. He's a really good offensive player, and he's an excellent athlete."

Noland, a 6-foot 4-inch, 210-pound wing player, brings with him some impressive credentials.

He averaged 21 points a game last season, leading the Raiders to a 32-2 record. He also grabbed 7.7 rebounds a game, dished out 2.1 assists and shot 51 percent from the field. He was a 69-percent free-throw shooter and a 38-percent shooter from three-point range.

"He can about do it all," said Beane, who played with Noland for one season at Three Rivers. "He can shoot it, plus he can go to the hole. He's very athletic, but what I really like about him is that he really works hard."

"In practice or during preseason, he gives his all. And that's what makes him a good player."

The Wildcats desperately needed an outside scoring threat, someone who could make up for the 13.7-point average that outgoing senior Vincent Jackson is taking with him.

Bess — who is also the head basketball coach for the Raiders — said Noland excels from the 15- to 17-foot range.

"He likes to shoot," he said, laughing. "And he's a good shooter."

But K-State also needed to replace Jackson, who routinely drew the opponents' strongest offensive threat, on the defensive end. And Jackson averaged a team-high 1.4 steals per game.

With Three Rivers, Noland led his team with 111 steals — an average of 3.3 per game.

"Belvis is much like Vincent," Beane said. "He works really hard. He can score, and he can play defense. He'll be a great replacement for Vince. He's a really good defensive player."

"He's going to be a good addition to our team."

Bess said that, without question, Noland is a prime candidate to be a starter for the Wildcats next season.

"If I didn't think he could go in there and start, I wouldn't have encouraged him to go there," Bess said. "When I counsel a kid, I tell him to go some place he can start. And I think he could play anywhere."

Noland was also recruited by New Orleans and Tusculooosa.

Noland will have two full years of eligibility at K-State.

But, according to Bess, Noland will have to take a full load of summer courses in order to be eligible for the fall semester.

Bess said that Noland has some "academic challenges ahead of him."

"But Dana is well aware of that, and they were able to work that out."

K-State concerned about team's concentration, hopes to regroup

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Thirty games into K-State's baseball season, Wildcat coach Mike Clark finds himself worrying about something that shouldn't be a factor two months into the season — concentration.

"This is the first time in a while that I've been concerned about our intensity," he said. "And that's a concern. You can't let that become a habit."

K-State will try to iron out its intensity problems Sunday afternoon with two non-conference games against Wayne State at Dean Evans Stadium in Salina.

The game against Wayne State was originally scheduled to be played in Manhattan, but K-State's March 6 game scheduled for Salina was rained out. Clark said that since more than 1,000 tickets were sold for the previous game in Salina, he wanted to give the Salina fans a chance to see Wildcat baseball.

Wayne State, another team of Wildcats, is 6-14 on the season. The Wayne State Cats are batting just .233 as a team. Couple that with a team ERA of 4.51, and it should be a welcome break from the Big Eight schedule for K-State.

"It's probably a good weekend to be off," Clark said.

The source of Clark's latest frustration is a doubleheader sweep

Wednesday afternoon against the Cornhuskers in Lincoln, Neb. K-State gave up 19 runs in the two games, and the Cats collected a total of just 11 hits.

The two losses came just three days after the Cats finished a three-game sweep of that same Nebraska team in Manhattan.

"We went out and didn't play with the same confidence," Clark said. "I think maybe we lost a little respect for the team. Maybe we thought that if we just showed up, we could win."

BIG EIGHT STANDINGS

CONFERENCE	OVERALL
	W	L	PCT.	W	L	PCT.
Kansas	8	3	.727	27	7	.794
Oklahoma St.	9	6	.600	20	9	.690
Oklahoma	7	5	.583	23	12	.657
Missouri	5	5	.500	18	11	.621
K-State	4	6	.400	11	19	.367
Nebraska	4	6	.400	14	15	.483
Iowa State	2	8	.250	8	13	.381

"I don't think the games were played at the level they needed to be," he said. "Last weekend against Nebraska, we came out enthusiastic. Wednesday, it just wasn't there."

Clark isn't the only one who noticed a lack of enthusiasm. Todd Pentering, a senior transfer, said much the same thing.

"We may have gone into that series thinking we just had to go onto the field," he said. "That wasn't the case."

Pentering said that the team's 11-19 record — which includes 13 to teams that have been ranked in the top 25 — might be getting to some of the players.

"After losing so many of those games, I think that got some of us down," he said. "There we were going into the Big Eight season with a losing record and not playing very well."

Pentering may have had more than one reason to have been discouraged about the second series with Nebraska. After K-State's three-game sweep of the Huskers — in which Pentering was four-for-12 with five RBI and seven runs scored — he was named the Big Eight's player of the week.

In the second series with Nebraska, he was zero-for-nine.

"I guess it got to my head," he said.

At any rate, the Wildcats have a chance to get back on the right track against Wayne State, a team that has played just one Division I team this season.

Will those Wayne State Cats be just the team to help K-State find the winning ways?

"I hate to say that," Pentering said. "But I think they might be."

Amelia Van Der Merwe, K-State's No. 3 singles player, looks toward the rafters for her serve during her match against Mindy Weiner. Van Der Merwe lost, 6-4, 6-1.

Despite a hard-fought effort, the Wildcat tennis team was unable to defeat the Kansas Jayhawks in Ahearn Field House last night.

The Jayhawks controlled the contest, taking all six of the singles matches and all three of the doubles matches.

And although the numbers don't look good, assistant coach Neili Wilcox said the Wildcats played well.

"Everybody fought pretty hard," she said. "They played a lot better than the score reveals. The score doesn't tell the whole story."

Player Suzanne Sim agreed.

"This is one of the best teams we've played," she said. "I don't think you can call this a blow-out just on the score."

The Wildcats are stepping up their level of play, Wilcox said.

"Right now, they're the best in the conference," she said. "They have a lot of depth. They're solid all the way through."

Coach Steve Bietau said that KU was a difficult match-up.

"I thought KU played pretty good today," he said. "The last time we played a team of this caliber, it was Notre Dame. I thought that these matches were even more competitive."

"Their top three are all capable of winning against anyone. Their bottom three are solid, too. That's a pretty good threat out there."

Wildcat senior and No. 1 seed

Susana Labrador fought a long and hard match that ended in a tough loss.

She was defeated by Rebecca Jensen, 7-6 (7-4), 4-6, 6-1. Jensen, who is currently ranked 15th in the nation, had trouble with Labrador early but was able to prevail in the third.

"That was Susana's best tennis of the year," Bietau said. "It was a great effort on her part."

"In her third set, she missed a few shots, and Rebecca simply played better."

K-State is now 3-3 in the Big Eight and 6-12 overall. The Wildcats will be wrapping up regular-season play when they play host to the Colorado Buffaloes at the L.P. Washburn Courts on Saturday.

Royals stage 9th-inning comeback for 5-4 win

McRae makes game-saving catch, delivers winning hit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Brian McRae wanted to talk about his game-winning hit, but everybody else wanted to talk about his game-saving catch.

"It kept us in the ballgame. It gave us a chance when I didn't think we had a chance," said McRae, whose Royals won for only the second time in nine games after starting last season 1-16.

"I kept telling myself, 'he's not going to get me out. Some way, I'm going to get in the run,'" said Brain McRae, whose infield single climaxed a five-run ninth inning by driving Phil Hiatt in from third with the winning run.

"I knew that once I hit it in the hole, that (Yankees shortstop Spike) Owen didn't have a chance on me," McRae said of his infield hit, which came off Steve Farr (0-1).

With the Royals trailing 4-0, McRae saved at least two and possibly three runs with a bases-loaded circus catch off Pat Kelly to end the Yankees eighth.

"Greatest catch I've ever seen," said Mike Macfarlane, whose two-run homer tied the game in the ninth.

Yankees starter Jimmy Key held the Royals scoreless on three hits over the first eight innings, but the Royals attacked Steve Howe and Farr for five runs on seven hits and a walk in the ninth, to make a winner of Frank DiPino (1-0).

In the Royals' ninth, Wally Joyner singled, Hubie Brooks doubled, and Kevin McReynolds' pinch-double scored two runs and knocked out Howe, who started the ninth for the Yankees.

Macfarlane greeted Farr with an opposite-field home run to tie the score, and Hiatt and pinch-hitter Chris Gwynn singled with one out.

After Greg Gagne flied out, moving Hiatt to third, McRae beat out his infield hit.

Key walked one, struck out four and allowed only one Kansas City runner to reach third over the first eight innings while the Yankees built their 4-0 lead off Kevin Appier and DiPino.

Bernie Williams' RBI fielder's choice made it 1-0 in the third. Paul O'Neill's sacrifice fly and Matt Nokes' RBI grounder made it 3-0 in the sixth.

DiPino hit Nokes with an 0-2 pitch and the bases loaded to force in another run in the eighth before McRae's catch ended the inning.

Notes:

■ Jeff Montgomery now has the save in both Royals wins this season.

■ Hubie Brooks is now four-for-eight against the Yankees this year, with two doubles.

■ Royals pinch hitters are five-for-nine this season, with two walks and five RBIs.

■ Jimmy Key has now thrown 20 scoreless innings for the Yankees.

■ New York's Wade Boggs has reached base eight times in his last nine at-bats, with six hits and two walks.

■ Yankees relief pitcher Steve Farr has allowed three home runs in 2-2/3 innings this season.

Basketball fan sinks $1-million bucket

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — An average fan found out late Wednesday night how it feels to earn $1 million for making a basket.

And how did he get his once-in-a-lifetime shot? It was the shoes.

Don Calhoun, 23, of Bloomington, Ill., got the money by sinking a 76-foot shot during a fan promotion at the Bulls—Miami Heat game at Chicago Stadium.

Under rules of the promotion, Calhoun launched his shot from the opposite free throw line — three-quarters of the length of the court.

"Initially, I was going to shoot it off my chest, but one of the cheerleaders said that it was best to throw it in a baseball pass, and that's what I did," he said.

The ball hit nothing but net.

Calhoun, an office supply salesman who plays basketball at the Bloomington YMCA, said he got his ticket to the game from a friend.

He said he was picked to take part in the promotion when he walked into the arena.

"As soon as I walked in, a young lady came up to me and said it was the shoes," he said. "She liked the shoes I was wearing."

His shoes were bright yellow.

Bulls players, who slapped him on the back, hugged him and gave him high-fives, said they were impressed with the shot.

"Maybe I can get a loan to pay off my fine," said Scott Williams, assessed $6,000 for fighting in Monday's game at Detroit.

"God works in mysterious ways," Bulls star Michael Jordan said. "With one shot, he makes more than a lot of guys in the NBA."

Bands not so hip after technical obstacles

New York group plays Liberty Hall; young fans dig the Dignable Planets

DEBORAH WHITSON
Collegian

They were cool like dat. Dignable Planets, a hip-hop/jazz group from New York, played Liberty Hall in Lawrence Tuesday night, to the delight of a somewhat youthful crowd.

DP's music is hard to put into any one category. So the age range and variety of its fans should not have been a surprise.

The show opened with a rap group that needed serious sound-check help.

The group, Groove Garden, consisted of two female rappers, a DJ, a drummer and a bass guitarist. The DJ, an essential part of any rap group, was completely drowned out by the drums and bass.

The women had good voices (I think) but even though their lips were moving, we had no idea what they were saying. The fans crowded onto the floor didn't mind. They were really enthusiastic about something, but maybe it was just being out on a school night. They were slam-dancing, anyway.

Liberty Hall is a refurbished opera house, complete with red velvet seats in the two-level balcony. It holds only 750 and seats only 350. The lower level is first-come, first-serve standing. Most of the crowd was on the floor.

Finally, Dignable Planets took the stage.

Ladybug, Doodle Bug and Butterfly, the three vocalists who are the heart of the group, began with "It's Good to Be Here," a lively cover from their CD. Unfortunately, they were plagued with some of the same sound problems as the rap group.

Talent made up for it.

The horn section, consisting of a trumpet and a saxophone, was the perfect complement to the trio's velvety-smooth, fluid voices. They are also blessed with a bassist who has magic fingers. The crowd was treated to numerous solos from each musician.

Besides the instruments, the trio is backed up by a DJ. He was unheard through most of the set, but midway through, they let him go.

He put on an early '80s rap retrospect with '70s sampling that was a big hit with the crowd.

The group went through all the songs from their CD, lingering over "Swoon Units" and "Nickel Bags." Doodlebug did a socially responsible rap number toward the beginning of the show, as the other members sat around the stage. It was casual almost to the point of dozing off.

The show finished with the group's top-40 song, "Cool Like Dat." Finally, we knew the words. And the crowd sang along, sticking to the format of the CD.

A two-song encore seemed to satisfy the crowd, and the bugs were off to the next stop on their coast-to-coast tour.

The only drawback to the concert was the sameness of the DP's songs. The beat and instrumentals rarely vary in their songs, making them really tiresome. True DP fans don't mind, but an occasional ballad or more upbeat tempo would broaden their horizons and improve their repertoire.

But look for this group to have longevity in a business that embraces a new "rap sensation" every 10 minutes.

Smatterings

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

I don't think we were this stupid when we were children.

This always happens: The end of the week is upon us and we're wailing and gnashing our teeth, biblical style, because we have no material for Smatterings. Then like manna plummeting down from on high, biblical style, in they pour.

Here is one Mexican-food restaurant's tragic story.

Taco Bell, those Good Samaritans who decided to let Willie Nelson work for all the taco shells and pico de gallo he could eat, are before the firing squad.

Monday, the chain asked customers to return their Lowly Worm and Huckle Cat finger puppets, as well as the Rocky and Bullwinkle inflatable balls that were part of their new promotion.

The grave and dire puppet-recall action was necessitated because three children, get this, got the puppets stuck on their tongues.

As you mull that one over, figure out this one. The inflatable balls were yanked because several children complained of dizziness.

What next? Recess being abolished because "several children complained that there wasn't enough shade outside and they felt temperatures were getting a tad warm?"

See if maybe the Crips will come back to paint.

While on the subject of our nation's fragile children, let's touch upon their equally fragile self-confidence levels.

The Girl Scout group of Omaha, Neb., just wanted to do a good deed. They just wanted to be liked, gosh darn it.

So, in the spirit of cleaning up graffiti in their city, they all trudged down to a pedestrian underpass that looked particularly like a scene from the opening credits of "Welcome Back, Kotter" and began to paint. They painted and sang songs, and painted and played hop-scotch and painted some more.

Then, they stepped back to look at their community beautification project and smiled. They liked it.

The neighbors, however, did not. They said the new colorful designs that the fifth-graders painted looked worse than the graffiti that was there before.

In fact, one man who lives near the underpass offered the city $500 to clean up the site.

The rumor that an angry mob of Girl Scouts dragged the man from his house, beat him senseless, overturned his car and set it ablaze, has not been verified.

The Polka and Spinach festivals start today. Run for the hills, folks.

Today, Spike Milligan turns 75. Who the hell is Spike Milligan, all you nostalgia-vacant youths are saying.

Listen closely: Spike Milligan is a comic actor, quite popular in the days when our parents tied fox tails to their cars' radio antennae. Still, that's no reason not to be acquainted with his comedic legacy.

Born Terence Alan Milligan in 1918, in India, Milligan was the founding member of the BBC radio series "The Goon Show." He later had a spectacular career in Britain and in America.

Milligan's more recent film credits include: The Magic Christian (with Ringo Starr), The Magnificent Seven Deadly Sins, Monty Python's The Life of Brian and Mel Brooks' History of the World — Part I.

If you need to know more, ask one of your older professors.

The Grand Triumvirate of Festivals, equivalent to the lining up of the planets, occurs today with the kick-offs of the Polka Weekend (Monticello, N.Y.), Spinach Festival (Alma, Ark.) and the World Grits Festival (St. George, S.C.). Exciting stuff.

Also, there was a solar eclipse on this day in 1178 B.C., and today is the Feast Day of St. Druon, the patron saint of ruptures, hernias and unpleasant births. Coincidentally, it is St. Druon's name that is repeatedly invoked at the Polka Weekend every year.

Welcome back to Pillsbury Crossing

I don't know what I expected to find the first time I was taken to Pillsbury Crossing. My friend's exclamations of "It's really cool" and "You have to see it" did not tell me a lot about the place.

She finally settled on telling me that it was a big hangout and I had to see it at least once.

The drive was pretty, if a little like a roller-coaster ride, which didn't seem to matter to my friend. She told me with a grin that she liked to drive fast.

My friend must have been getting an extreme amount of pleasure in surprising me, because she didn't warn me that the car would be skipping the bend in the road.

And skip it did, right over the bend onto a dirt road hiding behind the rise. My heart did some skipping of its own.

A few more skips, hops and jumps over some small hills, and we reached the turn-off. The turn was marked by a sign post with no sign.

Then, she actually slowed down the car. She was getting ready to surprise me again and drawing out the suspense.

Then I finally saw it. Oh. Wow. A creek. I had to admit it was very pretty. I could see blue sky reflected in the water of Deep Creek instead of dirt mixing in the waves.

That was when she decided to show me why it was called Pillsbury "crossing," by driving the car into the water. My heart started playing hopscotch.

She pulled over next to the waterfall. That's how I saw that the crossing was a bed of rock. It was intriguing and very pretty. I saw where the creek came against the rock on one side. You could literally drop your boat in and just step inside from the edge.

The creek just went right over the rock to its edge, making a very pretty waterfall. It was loud that first time. My friend had deliberately waited until after a rain so the rock would be hidden, and the extra water would make the waterfall look lively.

I have been back many times after that first time five years ago. I've taken malicious delight in showing it to unsuspecting friends, stopping at the edge of the road then suddenly letting the car go forward into the water.

It's been almost two years since I've been back. I finally had a chance to go when I took an out-of-state friend there during spring break. The surprise was much bigger for him since he knew nothing of the place.

"You're actually going to drive across it?"

I just laughed. I tried to tell some of my friends at work about that trip, thinking they'd get a good laugh from my tale of surprising my friend.

They surprised me, instead. Some of them had never been there, and some had never heard of the place.

I tried to describe the place to them. "It's a pretty place" impressed them like "It's really cool" impressed me that first time.

I decided to find out more about this little getaway. So I talked to the one alumna I knew.

Surprisingly, she had only been out there a couple of times.

"All I can remember is that Oscar Larmer took his water color classes there," she said.

"It was very beautiful, but you had to have a car to get there, and I didn't have a car."

It was nice to find that she remembered the same thing about the place that I did. The clean water.

"I don't think it ever got trashed," she said. "I mean there was always beer bottles, but it never got really trashed."

'Aladdin' is captivating, thrilling magic carpet ride

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

Walt Disney productions has created another captivating new world with its latest animated offering, "Aladdin."

From the Academy Award-winning song, "A Whole New World," to the choice of Robin Williams' voice, as the Genie, this movie successfully fulfills the expectations Disney fans might be looking for in this film.

Along for this thrilling ride are the requisite good guy, Aladdin, and the bad guy, Jafar, who fight for possession of the magic lamp, which holds the wish-granting Genie.

In the midst of the struggle is the beautiful princess, Jasmine, who is longing to take control of her life and marry a man whom she chooses and truly loves. Of course, Aladdin and Jasmine meet and fall in love, but Aladdin is a poor street child, and she can only marry a prince.

Aladdin manages to obtain the magic lamp, and with a rub of the enchanted vessel, the Genie bursts out of his cramped quarters to help Aladdin.

Williams as the Genie gives a manic, hilarious twist to the character with split-second impressions and commentaries about his wish-giving abilities. He is an entire side-show all to himself and with the exuberant song "Friend Like Me," he shows Aladdin the numerous possibilities from which his three wishes can come true.

But before Aladdin can fulfill all three of his fantasies, Jafar and his evil parrot sidekick wrestle the lamp away and use it for their own nefarious motives, such as humiliating the Sultan and his daughter Jasmine.

It's up to Aladdin's cunning abilities to save his love, the Sultan and the Genie from Jafar's evil plans.

This movie works on two levels, keeping both the child and adult entertained. Children will enjoy the Genie's antics and the striking animation, and adults will appreciate the double-edged humor that runs throughout the story.

"Aladdin" is so jammed-packed with action that it's worth seeing twice just so you can catch everything that's happening. This movie easily joins its predecessors, "The Little Mermaid" and "Beauty and the Beast," in rekindling the almost lost art of the animated film.

Guard found dead in Ohio prison yard

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — Inmates barricaded at the state's maximum-security prison for five days released one of seven prison guard hostages Thursday night. The hostage was released after an inmate complained about prison conditions in a live broadcast from the yard of the Southern Ohio Correctional Facility. Prison spokeswoman Sharron Kornegay identified the hostage as Darold R. Clark, 23. He has been a guard since 1991. Radio station WPAY broadcast the report from a table set up in the prison yard. The inmate, identified only as George, said: "We either negotiate this to our liking, or they will kill us. We are prepared to die." After the broadcast, Clark was released. He walked out of the prison without assistance, leaving six hostages behind. The body of a seventh hostage was found dead earlier Thursday.

Clark was taken to Southern Ohio Medical Center in Portsmouth. He was stable but shaken, said a nursing supervisor who would not identify herself. A radio announcer described the event for listeners as it was happening. The prisoner walked from the cellblock into the prison yard with the hostage, whose head was covered by a sheet. The prisoner carried a bullhorn. As the two moved to a table where a microphone was set up, the inmate took off his shirt to show that he had no weapons. The inmate then took the sheet off the hostage. "I know there's a lot on my shoulders right now. ... I can't possibly remember all the demands," the inmate said in a hurried manner. "We preferably would like to have an FBI negotiator," he continued. "We want to get away from this administration. They are oppressing us."

Other prisoner demands cited by the inmate included replacing Warden Arthur Tate, whom he referred to as "King Arthur," and restoring water and electricity that have been shut off since Sunday, when the riot began. The inmate, among 450 barricaded in the cellblock, also said the inmates had no intention of surrendering. "We're not going to give up. ... If we die, we die." Earlier Thursday, six military trucks and armed authorities moved closer to the cellblock. Five of the trucks were carrying armed troops; contents of the sixth truck, which was covered, could not be seen. Activity around the prison increased after corrections officials announced that the body of a prison guard held hostage had been found. Seven inmates have died since the siege began, six of them beaten to death on the first day of rioting. The cause of death of the seventh hasn't been released.

Pillsbury Crossing full of history, beauty

She suggested we talk to one of our bosses, Pam Soeken, also a K-State graduate and the evening service supervisor at the K-State Union.

"I think the first time I was out there was in 1975," Soeken said.

"It wasn't really a big hangout, but there were always people there."

I next went to the Riley County Historical Museum.

The people at the museum weren't surprised to hear from me. Pillsbury Crossing has been written about many times, and the oldest story from the Mercury Chronicle is kept at the museum.

The crossing is named after Josiah H. Pillsbury, who staked a claim on the land the crossing is part of in 1854. He had come with the Emigrant Aid Party to Kansas from New Hampshire, where he had been a teacher.

After coming to Kansas he located and named the town of Zeandale, a Greek name meaning corn valley.

In 1863 he moved to Manhattan, purchased the printing equipment from the Western Kansas Express and started the Manhattan Independent. In 1868 he sold the paper to L.P. Elliott.

That told me a little about Pillsbury Crossing's history, but it was just like what had been written before. So I looked at the one thing left at Pillsbury Crossing. The Frick Research Farm.

It's surprising that no one asked about it before. Its sign sits right on the road across the creek, and it clearly says it's part of K-State. So I started asking some questions.

That's when it seemed as if the whole University had forgotten it was there. It wasn't listed in the directory. No one seemed to know which department ran it. Yet U-Learn was able to give me a phone number.

After several phone calls I talked to the caretaker of the farm, Nicki Nelson.

"I just live out there essentially all I do," Nelson said. So, she referred me to Sam Kruckenberg, director of the animal resource facility. I was now playing name hopscotch.

Kruckenberg was able to tell me what has been left out of the creek's history.

In 1962 the land around the crossing was purchased by Edwin J. Frick, the former head of surgery medicine at the veterinary hospital.

In 1968 he donated the land along the creek to Kansas Wildlife and Parks.

"It was a common place for parties, but I think that's been cracked down on a bit," Kruckenberg said.

The rest of the land he left to be used for veterinary medicine research.

"There's five different tracts of land that make up about 77 acres," Kruckenberg said. "A lot of students used to go out and work there, and here's how he'd get volunteers. You, you and you are coming with me."

Frick retired shortly after he donated the land. Kruckenberg says he still lives in Manhattan.

I had answered all my questions except one. I still did not have a way to describe Pillsbury Crossing so my friends would know or remember it.

I found I was still stuck with "It's a pretty place." I guess that is all it has ever been. That was why Josiah Pillsbury settled that claim long ago.

Deliberations continue for sixth day in beating trial briefly.

Because the courtroom is small and can't accommodate the throng of media covering the trial, some 100 reporters have monitored proceedings through a closed-circuit speaker system, from the courtroom to the press room.

Apparently, the sound of Davies' voice could be heard in the background of some broadcasters' live reports Wednesday, on the proceeding in which he announced that a juror was ill.

Earlier this week, Davies issued an order complaining that courtroom artists' sketches of the jury were too accurate for comfort and ordered them to disguise the jury's features.

Last week, the judge criticized reporters for saying he was concerned about a possible hung jury. He said his remarks were misinterpreted.

The students of the K-State ROTC Company went airborne Saturday morning as they left for a Fort Riley training area.

The 23 students spent the next 30 hours putting their textbook knowledge to the ultimate test — the field training exercise, FTX.

"The main purpose of the weekend was to put all of the Rangers' technical knowledge to the test," John Highfill, Ranger Commander, said.

The FTX started with an air insertion to the training site, courtesy of three UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters. The students also performed boat operations, utilizing two RB-15 Zodiac Commando Assault Boats, and culminated with a 10-km foot march with a 35-pound rucksack. They finished with an air insertion back to the KSU Stadium parking lot.

"When we train the Rangers, we train realistically," Highfill said.

"We also outfitted the Rangers in the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System, MILES, for the FTX," he said. "The MILES is the military's form of laser warfare, which also adds an extra sense of realism to field training."

The Ranger Company of K-State ROTC is comprised of Basic and Advanced Course cadets of both Army and Air Force ROTC.

The Rangers on an FTX were given a wide variety of missions to accomplish this weekend.

"The Rangers were first given a mission to destroy an enemy radio station, secure a docking area, and set up a defensive position for a possible enemy attack," Highfill said. "The only problem was that all three of the missions had to be performed simultaneously."

Later, the Rangers used the RB-15 assault boats to conduct a combat amphibious landing on the shore of Milford Lake to position themselves for an assault on the enemy.

The Ranger's enemy is known as the opposing forces.

"The OPFOR is mainly composed of Volunteer Basic Course cadets who have a specific mission to harass and test the Ranger's combat effectiveness," Highfill said. "They ensure that the training is as realistic as possible."

Many of the tactics the OPFOR uses can often make a Ranger keenly aware of the importance of the field training.

"Even though all of the tasks conducted at the FTX were light infantry-based, everyone improves his or her leadership abilities under the high-stress, fast-action scenarios against the OPFOR," Steve O'Neil, senior Ranger evaluator, said.

The K-State Ranger Company cadets learn valuable skills necessary for their future commission as armed forces officers through this form of field-training exercise, O'Neil said.

"Very few active-duty units in the Army can conduct a 30-hour training exercise using as many different assets as we did this weekend," O'Neil said. "We have an advantage of the support and cooperation of Fort Riley to perform some very complex field-operations scenarios."

Feelings of relief were reported across the country after a federal jury came to a decision on the alleged violation of Rodney King's civil rights.

The jury convicted Sgt. Stacey Koon, who was the highest ranking officer present during the beating of King, and Officer Laurence Powell, who struck the most baton blows, of violating King's civil rights.

The incident, which occurred after a high-speed chase on March 3, 1991, also included Officer Theodore Briseno and Timothy Wind, a rookie officer fired after the beating, who both were acquitted.

Similar responses are being vented throughout the nation. Some people said they were dissatisfied only two of the officers were found guilty.

"I am somewhat relieved, and I felt the decisions necessary were made. I was a little disappointed by the feeling that some are going free," said Diana Caldwell, coordinator of multicultural student organizations.

"In my mind it lessens the declaration of guilt for those who were involved," she said. "A lot of people will be on edge about the sense of justice in the outcome after sentencing."

Others still question the verdict of the trial.

"I was glad to see that Koon and Powell were found guilty, but I don't understand how the others could not be found guilty of excessive force — I still question that," said Elsa Diaz, senior in industrial engineering and physical science.

Police had prepared for a possible recurrence of rioting in Los Angeles, with all 7,700 city officers and 600 National Guard troops stationed in nearby armories.

"Based on the evidence presented, I believe they came to a fair decision, better than the first," Paul Bridges, sophomore in social work, said. "Sentencing will play an important part, and I

Zero Population Growth is sponsoring a nationwide "Ease the Squeeze" week from April 18-24.

ZPG is the nation's largest grassroots organization concerned with the social and environmental effects of overpopulation.

The week coincides with Earth Day and is designed to educate the public about overpopulation pressures on the environment and to let them know what they can do to help.

"Americans are both part of the problem and the solution," said Deborah Brouse, ZPG director of field and outreach. She said the United States has the fastest growing population of all the developed nations, and that growth is only expected to increase.

"This at a time when communities across the nation are grappling with increasing air pollution, water shortages, mounting garbage and loss of open space for recreation, agriculture and wildlife habitat," she said.

Brouse also said small population increases can affect our environment.

"While Americans make up only five percent of world population, we consume 25 percent of the world's energy and remain the major contributor to global warming," she said.

Chiefs promote tractors

Tractors used to replace tools in Africa

Kansas City Chiefs running back Christian Okoye and former K-Stater and Kansas City Chief Gary Spani were in Manhattan Friday to promote Tractors for Our Daily Bread.

Tractors for Our Daily Bread is a non-profit organization formed to acquire tractors to send to Africa to replace the primitive hand tools that are now being used, said Chris Akhimien, founder and president of the group.

"Hunger is preventable, and the hand tools are the main reason for the hunger in Africa," Akhimien said.

Providing tractors is a long-term solution for the hunger problem in Africa and is a lifelong commitment for Akhimien, he said.

Okoye said he has seen the farming practices first hand and knows how badly tractors are needed.

"I am from Nigeria and have seen the hand tools. I used them with my grandpa and granddad," Okoye said. "Many, many people in Africa would greatly appreciate the help."

Okoye agrees giving food to Africans is only a short-term solution to the hunger problem.

"If you keep giving Africans food, you're helping, but if you don't teach them how to provide for themselves, they won't be able to live as you would like them to," Okoye said.

Twenty-seven tractors have been donated to the cause so far. Five of those tractors have been completely rebuilt and are ready to send to Nigeria. One will be sent as a tractor-maintenance teaching tool, Akhimien said.

"I get calls from back home in Nigeria asking when the tractors are going to arrive," Akhimien said. "The people are willing to change, and we hope that tractors will attract youth back to the land

New elections a possibility

SHAWN BRUCE

New elections may take place to determine Student Senate representation for the College of Arts and Sciences and the College of Engineering.

On Thursday, Student Tribunal reversed a decision made by the 1993 Student Governing Association Elections Committee that declared Liz Ring, freshman in biology, ineligible to serve as a senator. The decision was made during the elections last week.

Ring received 365 votes in the election, which was the fourth highest total in the college. The top 19 are elected.

Ring told the elections committee she used chalk to list her name and the office she was seeking within 50 feet of Putnam Hall, a violation of campaign regulations.

On appeal, tribunal ruled Ring did violate campaign regulations but said the punishment of ineligibility imposed on her by the elections committee was too harsh.

The matter now goes back to the elections committee. Chairwoman Mary Farmer, senior in history, said two possibilities exist.

The first possibility is to seat the senators but impose sanctions on them.

The more probable possibility, Farmer said, is to have another election later in April for only the College of Arts and Sciences. Ring would be required to run as a write-in candidate.

That possibility also exists for the College of Engineering. Tribunal meets Monday to reconsider the disqualification of Brandy Meyer,

Play Jack Sprat's to cut out excess fat

MICHELLE SMITH

The five leading health-related causes of death are the focus of a new board game developed by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

Jack Sprat's Table shows people how to reduce the risk of heart disease, arteriosclerosis, diabetes, stroke and cancer by budgeting fat intake. The game was developed in conjunction with the Low-fat Eating for America Now program, or LEAN.

"The link between dietary fat and these diseases is well-established, and now some studies are beginning to link fat intake to some cancers," said Dr. Ray Baker, acting director of the KDHE Division of Health.

The game is played by allotting each player a certain number of "Fat Bucks." Players roll the dice and move around the game board, acquiring servings from each of the food groups. To win, a player must obtain at least the minimum number of servings in every food group without running out of Fat Bucks.

"The fat-budgeting concept used in the game emphasizes the fact that there are no bad foods, but that we must learn to make choices to balance the high-fat foods with low-fat options," said Paula Marmet, director of the Office of Chronic Disease and Health Promotion.

The concept of fat-budgeting is especially important now because of the health problems related to a high-fat diet, Marmet said.

Kansas health officials said 15,052 deaths in Kansas were attributed to the five diet-related causes in 1990. Thirty-two percent of Kansans are overweight. In Kansas, it is estimated about $2 billion is spent for the treatment of diet-related illnesses such as heart disease, high blood pressure, cancer, diabetes and obesity.

The game has been tested on all age groups from age nine through adult.

"We've found that people really get into playing the game, especially when they find out how easy it is to succeed at lowering their intake of dietary fat," said Judy Johnston, Kansas LEAN program director and developer of Jack Sprat's Table.

The games sell for $30, the cost of production. They are available through the Kansas Lean Program at the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, 1919 Amidon, Suite 130, Wichita, Kan., 67203-2118.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. I've heard the financial aid office can assist if I have unusual circumstances. What does that mean?

A. The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) collects general information about the student/applicant. The Federal government has given financial aid administrators the right to assist families or single applicants with circumstances not considered normal or that cannot be entered on the Federal form.

Q. What type of circumstances are considered unusual?

A. The following circumstances could allow the financial aid office to make adjustments:

- If you have high medical or dental expenses that are not covered by insurance.
- If your family pays private tuition for elementary or secondary students.
- If one of the parents or the student will have reduced income or loss of income for 1993.
- If you or your parents are classified as a "dislocated" worker.
- If one or both of your parents have died.
- If your parents are divorced since you completed your Federal form.

In addition to the above, the student may have other reasons a financial aid office can make adjustments. Student or parents should write a letter explaining their unique situation for the 1993-94 award year, and send it to 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. I've heard the Federal government considers students "dependent" for financial aid purposes until they reach 24 years of age. Is this true?

A. Yes, under the Federal definition, an independent student is one who is:

- Born before January 1, 1970.
- A veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces.
- A graduate or professional student.
- Married when filling out the Federal form.
- A ward of the court or both parents are deceased.
- Supporting a legal dependent(s) other than a spouse.
- A student for whom a financial aid administrator determines and documents the student's independent status on the basis of extenuating circumstances such as physical or emotional harm. Special circumstances that exist for an individual student rather than circumstances that exist across a class of students may also allow for an adjustment.

Q. If I am classified as dependent, whose information do I report on the Federal form?

A. If you are dependent for financial aid purposes, you must use your parents 1992 tax information. This would include a step-parent's information if part of the household. Of course, the student's 1992 information is also collected on the Federal form.

Q. It seems like to FAFSA asks for a lot of information. Is it all necessary?

A. The FAFSA collects only information critical to consider you for Federal aid programs. In most cases, the free form is the only form necessary to apply for aid from colleges, state agencies, and the Federal government. However, some colleges, private scholarship agencies, and state agencies may request further information for their non-Federal aid programs. Always check with your financial aid office to make sure. They are there to assist you.

C.O.P.E.ING

W I T H F E A R S

STORY BY NEIL ANDERSON • PHOTOGRAPHY BY DARRIN WHITELY

Deep within the recesses of Camp Jayhawk at Perry Lake, a few K-State wildcats were pushing themselves to the limits.

Conquering the Project C.O.P.E., Challenging Outdoor Physical Encounters, obstacles was the objective of nine K-State students.

The goal of C.O.P.E. is to take a group of people to develop group skills and trust in each other.

"Some people are out here as thrillseekers, and some people are here to overcome fears," Sacha Hanes, junior in public relations, said.

After reaching Camp Jayhawk early Saturday morning, the group of nine plus one C.O.P.E. instructor-in-training, Bindy Baeker, cubmaster, began on the low course events.

Low course events were used to create interaction between the participants and to help the team to discover skills in the group.

The instructors set up the scenarios of the obstacles. They also told the group the guidelines of the particular scenario.

The first event involved a large pipe, representing the Alaskan pipeline. The group had to do a shift change of workers.

Half of the group entered the pipe from one end, and the other half entered the opposite end. The two groups met in the middle in very close quarters then tried to get by each other to get out of the pipe.

During the events, "accidents" could happen, resulting in the loss of the use of a limb or limbs.

An accident is when an instructor makes the obstacle tougher by giving a handicap to someone. It could also be used when a person breaks an established guideline.

All handicaps are removed from team members after each event.

The group was given five healing powers to use during the day to counteract a handicap when they needed to.

Handicaps became more of a problem in the second obstacle.

In their second obstacle, they had to use a rope swing to get over an imaginary hole. The confronted the team on their next obstacle. The barbed wire topped an almost 8-foot wall which group members had to climb over. A catch to this obstacle was only two people could touch the wire at a time.

Instructors gave the group handicaps of a quadriplegic member and they also bound two members together to be siamese twins.

Group members used their clothing as protection for the barbed wire at the top of the wall. With the exception of two members, the group became mute due to instructors demands.

Baeker and Marcie Fredericksen, senior in public relations, stationed themselves at the top of the wall. Fredericksen then used herself as protection and allowed her team members to crawl over her with Baeker assisting.

The siamese twins, Keating and Brian Anderson, freshman in mechanical engineering, made themselves into a step for their teammates to use to get over the wall.

With the rest of the team over the wall, members tried to get the twins over with no luck. A healing power was used, and the twins were separated.

The team continued on, in spite of the heavy rains that hit them in the afternoon.

After drying off and eating, the team spent the evening learning rappelling skills which were needed for the next day's events.

Members learned to tie seats. Tying seats is a system of tying of nylon webbing around the hips to provide a safety device. They also learned the vocal calls used in rappelling.

Early Sunday morning the team began the high course trick was there were only 10 safe spots to land on the other side.

An instructor gave Eric Keating, senior in graphic design and advertising, the handicap of being blind during the second obstacle. This made Keating dependent on the group to get him across the hole.

Every other person in the group was given a mute handicap from the instructor as they started to move across the obstacle.

Instructors not only served as problem-makers, but as spotters on these events. They also enforced the one consistent rule: a person's head and shoulders must stay above their feet.

The K-State C.O.P.E. crew became a team, complete with capable leaders and members who were willing to make the sacrifices needed to get through an obstacle.

► Sacha Hanes, junior in public relations, takes a leap of faith on the ultimate challenge. The challenge was to have the courage to make the jump for the trapeze.

Hanoi still playing its games

THE ISSUE

A document has come forth that says Vietnam held American POWs after the Vietnam War.

WE SUGGEST

It's long past time to put this issue to rest. Business interests should not be put ahead of making sure Hanoi is no longer lying to us.

On April 1, 1973, the Vietnamese government claimed to have returned all American prisoners of war after the Vietnam War concluded. Now a document has revealed that as many as 600 POWs were not released and were held captive despite the release of 591 other U.S. soldiers.

The document was first uncovered in Russian archives three months ago by Stephen Morris, a researcher at the Harvard Center for International Affairs. The Hanoi government said the document is a fabrication. The mass media have written about the authenticity of the document and the correct number of POWs missing since the war.

However, there is one point the media have missed concerning the story: The U.S. government is failing to give this document the full attention it deserves. American businesses, which want to invest in Vietnam, would like to forget what happened in the past for the power of the almighty dollar. To them, money is more important than 600 missing soldiers.

White House spokesperson Dee Dee Myers said the U.S. needs to know the Hanoi government is doing everything possible to clear up the POW matter before things can move forward.

The families of these missing soldiers have suffered for 20 years. The Hanoi government has lied to America before. We need to pursue the truth of this document to the fullest extent before any trade concessions are given to Vietnam.

Let's put this issue to rest. But, in doing so, let's make absolutely sure every single person has come home and no more lies will be told, either by our own government or the

The Thinking Person's Guide to the SGA Run-off

I was riding my bike across campus today, illegally on the sidewalks, when I saw the decaying detritus of leftover campaign posters, the only remnants of the Student Governing Association elections. Only one position remains for us to decide. I saw the signs for Fred Wingert, still amazingly intact even after last week's rain and wind. I saw the ripped-up remains of Ed Skoog's homemade signs, wind-tattered in all their transience. In my heart I want Skoog to win. Both of the candidates have a number of issues that are important to them. There isn't perfect overlap between them, but to compare the two I will try to put them into categories important to the average student. 1) Parking: Parking is a non-issue in this campaign. All of the candidates had about the same this campaign, and the one where the two candidates most clearly differ. Skoog fought the athletic fee hike on all fronts. He attempted to kill it in Senate; he has worked to slay it in the minds of the students. After its passage, he tried to make it equitable for students by creating free student admission to all athletic events. Stressing a producer-consumer relationship for all fees, he wants free admission in exchange for the fee, or no fee at all.

Wingert loses major points for this one. The increase in the athletic fee was in part his idea, and he, along with former Athletic Director Milt Richards, rammed it through Student Senate over the objections of students like me. He supports the fee on the basis that it enhances the image of the University. I opposed it on this page on the grounds it does nothing for us but drop $200,000 into the athletic department's $8 million bucket. Athletic-fee increases were defeated twice before by the student body, and a vote against Wingert will let Skoog work to fix this flawed fee.

6) The Price of your vote: At last count, Wingert's campaign was pushing $600 spent, while the Skoog camp had spent less than $140. Enough said.

Finally, I support Skoog because of his vision for the office of president. Ed does not have an inflated idea of what a student body president can do. He knows the folks in Anderson Hall are far craftier and will last far longer than any student, even Skoog himself. He doesn't purport to be able to work with them. Instead, he wants to shake them up. Skoog sees himself as transient as his signs. They can shout for a day, but will eventually fade. Their art is handwritten and temporary, the work of Everyman. They can hope only to change the way people look at things.

Fred Wingert's signs have lasted through the elements, but they only litter the campus, whispering ready-printed, smooth-talking slogans. They stay up through the rain, becoming slick and slimy, and they eventually will fade in the sun, without a trace of revolution.

I pick Skoog by the bill of an STP cap.

ABORTION

Right-to-life groups have gender balance

Editor,

While picketing at an abortion clinic recently, I heard the pro-abortion activists chanting, "Four-six-eight-ten — Why are all your leaders men?" I wonder how such a belief can persist when so many women hold leadership positions within the anti-abortion movement.

The executive board of KSU Students for the Right to Life consists of four men and five women. Of the nine groups affiliated with Collegiate LiNK, a network of college anti-abortion groups in Kansas, six have female presidents.

Collegians Activated to Liberate Life, a group of college students who have taken the year off from school to do full-time anti-abortion work, has five female and two male members. Clearly, the numbers show that not all of our leaders are men.

SGA ELECTIONS

Sources needed to make informed vote

Editor,

Your report on the Student Governing Association elections characterized them as confusing. You're right.

Especially for a voter like myself, who was unable to attend campaign forums, has no friends running for office and is expected to choose 19 senators to represent my school.

I went to vote Tuesday morning. Collegian voting guide in hand. I began to fill out my ballot but was interrupted and told no "campaign materials" were allowed in the voting area. This really confused me, since:

I've always been allowed to take my Collegian guide with me to vote in SGA elections in years past; I thought the special Collegian section was a guide, not campaign material designed to promote one candidate over another; and denying the use of the guide while voting makes the task of choosing candidates much more difficult for those students who are relatively unfamiliar with the candidates and issues.

If we really want to increase voting and participation in student government, then why are students outside SGA and its social circle being discouraged by this kind of election practice?

SAME-SEX COUPLES

Columnist misses joy children can bring

Editor,

This letter is in response to Kelly Klawonn's column "The Parent," which appeared in the April 14 edition of the Collegian.

After reading Klawonn's article, I came to the conclusion she did little, if any, research regarding same-gender couples adopting children.

With one phone call to Carol Baumann, director of BPS Independent Adoptions in Topeka, I found that filling out forms is required for anyone who wants to adopt a child. There is no runaround, and BPS is a non-discriminatory organization. All which means if Klawonn wants to adopt a child, she needs only to travel to Topeka, fill out the forms, undergo psychological testing, read the literature on this subject, endure a home study (non-discriminatory) and wait. Every couple wanting to adopt a child must go through this process.

I agree a "surprise pregnancy" is a scary thought, but not all are unwanted. I had two "surprises;" one when I was in high school, the second I discovered after I filed for divorce from my husband.

A child is not an obligation; it is a privilege. The first word, the first steps and kindergarten are wonderful things. I have yet to experience "dating, college or late-night phone calls from jail," but I'm sure I'll take all that in stride. These things are all part of the growing up process.

I was not pressured into keeping my children. I had options open to me as does any woman who becomes pregnant. There is abortion, which has not been declared illegal, and there is adoption.

If, by some miracle, Klawonn becomes pregnant by having sexual intercourse with a person of the same sex, there are always families who have room for another bundle of joy.

GAYS IN THE MILITARY

Lifting ban start of removing ignorance

Editor,

Listen John Hart, biological and scientific credos disclaim the Bible, yet, you choose to call Christianity a legitimate lifestyle. As for alleged intolerance, tell that to the mother of the gay sailor who now lies in an "alleged" coffin. The mission of lifting the ban is the lifting of ignorance and hatred. A very heavy veil, indeed. Especially when the veil is veiled by religion.

You state you are not against homosexuals, but their lifestyle. John, I am not against Christians, but I am against certain Christians expecting others to live by their standards, which are based on the Bible, an equally ambiguous and subjective source.

You cite examples of promiscuity resulting in disease — those are individual life choices, not gay lifestyles. No generalizations, please.

I read somewhere, I forget where, "Thou shalt not judge," yet you seem to have elected yourself judge and jury. Try to remember John, your morals are yours, not mine.

Finally, what better choice than to live our lives with respect, kindness and understanding toward others. To exemplify and reflect a greater and higher being than ourselves. Is that in your Bible? If not, scrawl it in as a footnote.

SGA CAMPAIGN

Come on, give the E guys some respect

Editor,

I am disappointed in the fact the Collegian staff has continued to not take the Skoog/Henry ticket seriously.

You all seem to be more interested in the fact he "claims" to be larger than the other candidates. This, whether true or not, is not newsworthy.

Please give Ed and Eric the fair coverage they deserve, and please don't treat them as jokes.

BOOK BANNING

It goes a lot further than Marysville

Editor,

This letter is in response to the editorial board's comment on book banning in the Collegian last week. The article pertained to the banning of Ken Follett books from the Marysville library. This practice is a heinous and unnecessary violation of the First Amendment.

If you think the reasons given for the Marysville banning were ridiculous, then you haven't even begun to look into things. The Manhattan Public Library can show you an entire file of books that have been banned at schools and libraries all over this "free" country. One book was banned for profane language, which turned out to be the phrase "dog turd."

Banning is un-American in any aspect. If I want to read "Catcher in the Rye" while I listen to Ice-T, then that is my own personal choice.

SGA CAMPAIGN

Cages and leather should be left out

Editor,

I realize the candidacy of Tim Orindgreff and Tim Madden was pretty much a big joke, and I know I'll be labeled as one of those "damned feminists with no sense of humor" because of this letter, but if the Two Tims think the idea of caged girls in leather skirts is funny, I think they are the ones with the warped sense of humor.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State takes 2 games from 9-16 Wayne State

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

The Wildcat baseball team took a welcome break from the Big Eight schedule Sunday afternoon, posting a pair of wins against the Division II Wayne State Wildcats.

K-State won the first game, 11-2, and had to go extra innings in the second, eventually picking up the 5-4 win at Dean Evans Stadium in Salina.

"We've won five of our last seven games," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We're heading into the final stretch on a good note."

K-State improved to 13-19 on the season, and Wayne State fell to 9-16.

In the first game, the Wildcats used a season-high nine-run third inning to break open a 1-1 tie. The Cats sent 14 batters to the plate in the inning, collecting six hits — including a two-run home run by Brian Culp and doubles from Todd Petering and Tim Decker.

"Offensively in that first game, we had a big inning," Clark said. "After that, we didn't do much of anything."

But neither did Wayne State. David Leonhart, 2-3, pitched his first complete game of the year and gave up just one earned run.

K-State senior Jamey Stellino scored on a Mike Stauffer error in the bottom of the eighth inning in the second game, giving the Cats the winning tally.

Stellino led off the extra frame of the scheduled seven-inning contest with a single to left. Kevin McMullin moved Stellino to second with his third hit of the game. The two were advanced by Decker, and three batters later Jay Kopriya's grounder was booted by Stauffer.

The Cats, though, blew chances in each of the three previous innings. The game was tied at 4-4 after the fourth, and K-State put runners in scoring position in each of the next three frames.

"We had so many opportunities to win this thing," Clark said. "It seems like we did everything right in the last two or three innings but get the big hit."

Indeed, it was the pitching — not the hitting — that may have been the story of the second game. Reliever Jeff Woita, who entered the game in the fourth inning with K-State trailing 4-2, went 4-2/3 scoreless innings. He retired the first 11 batters he faced, and only two hitters reached first against him — one via an error.

"I got ahead of every hitter," said Woita, now 2-0. "I hit my spots pretty well."

"This is a Division II team, but you still have to go out and throw strikes."

One possible concern for the Wildcats is injured shortstop Todd Petering. Petering was hit in the right tricep by a pitch in his first at bat of the second game, and he did not return.

"He's awfully, awfully sore," Clark said.

Petering's replacement in that second game — Kevin McMullin — had three hits in four at bats.

K-State gets back into Big Eight play this week with a pair of home games against Missouri on both Tuesday and Wednesday. Missouri won two of the three meetings against K-State earlier in the season.

And the weekend gave the Cats much-needed momentum heading into the conference stretch, Woita said.

"We needed to play a team that we could pick up a couple of wins against," he said. "We had to get our confidence back."

KC salvages Minnesota series, hangs on for 3rd win of season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MINNEAPOLIS — Brent Mayne and Jose Lind drove in the fourth-inning runs that gave Kansas City its first two-run lead of the season.

The Royals went on to post a 5-4 victory over the Minnesota Twins on Sunday.

Although already mired in last place in the AL West, the Royals (3-9) are well ahead of last year's pace, when they started 1-16.

Brian McRae tripled, doubled and singled. Lind had three singles, and Mayne doubled twice for Kansas City, the AL's worst offensive team, in support of Hipolito Pichardo (1-0).

Scott Erickson lost his 1993 debut, allowing four runs on eight hits in four innings. Erickson, who won 33 games for the Twins the last two years, began this year on the disabled list with a strained muscle near the left side of his stomach.

Pichardo gave up four runs on six hits in seven innings. Jeff Montgomery, who finished with two shutout innings, has saved all three Kansas City victories.

The Royals snapped a 2-2 tie with their two-run fourth. Wally Joyner doubled and scored on a double by Mayne, who came home on Lind's single.

Minnesota made it 4-3 on Kirby Puckett's fifth-inning sacrifice fly, and each team scored in the seventh — Kansas City on Lind's single and McRae's triple, the Twins on Lenny Webster's double and two grounders.

Montgomery gave up hits to Puckett and Kent Hrbek to start the eighth but got Shane Mack to ground into a double play and struck out Brian Harper.

Brett and Lind drove in runs in the first and second innings while Hrbek had RBI in the first and third innings for Minnesota.

Notes:

■ Pichardo's victory was the first by a Royals starter all season.

■ The Royals are 3-0 on "get-away days," the last game of either a road trip or homestand. "We don't leave often enough," Manager Hal McRae joked.

■ Brett tied Sam Crawford for 32nd place on baseball's all-time RBI list at 1,525.

■ The Royals have Monday off before opening an eight-game homestand.

■ In the Royals' series against Toronto that begins Tuesday, their starting pitchers will be Kevin Appier, Mark Gubicza and David Cone, who are a combined 0-7.

■ With his ninth-inning pinch single, Minnesota's Dave Winfield passed Babe Ruth into 29th place on baseball's career hit list with 2,874.

Cat netters drop 4th Big Eight match

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

Injuries took their toll Saturday on the Wildcat tennis squad, as K-State dropped its fourth Big Eight match in a row, 7-2, to the Colorado Buffaloes at Ahearn Field House.

"It was a close match," head coach Steve Bietau said. "We had five matches that went to three sets against them, but we're not very healthy right now."

Wildcat Evelia Alvarez fought and suffered through back spasms in her 6-4, 7-5 loss in No. 6 singles.

No. 5 singles player Martine Shrubsole defaulted her match to Karen McIntosh after Shrubsole had already won the first set, 7-5.

"After four matches in one week, I wasn't doing very well," said Shrubsole, who has been suffering from a type of bone inflammation in the ball of her foot.

"If the match had been decided by my game, I would have gone on," she said. "But we decided it would be better to rest it for next weekend."

Next weekend is the Big Eight tournament in Kansas City, Mo., where the Wildcats are seeded to play the same Colorado team in the first round.

"We just need to be a little more fit and rested," Bietau said. "We're not going to make any major changes against them."

The team's bright spot continues to be at the No. 2 singles position, where Suzanne Sim pulled out a three-set tie-breaker victory in the last match of the evening.

Sim defeated Colorado's Renee Marshall, 6-2, 2-6, 7-6 (7-6).

"We rely too heavily on Suzanne," Bietau said. "She's always there for us, even Saturday when the dual has been decided and it would be easy for her to quit, she doesn't."

"We need some other people to step up."

Sim and Shrubsole combined earlier in the day for the other K-State point.

The Cat duo won the No. 2 doubles match by defeating Marshall and Elizabeth Bartasius, 6-3, 4-6, 7-5, although it was only the second match the two have played in competition together.

"We didn't play very well in the first set against KU Thursday," Shrubsole said, "but we really played well Saturday. We're finally getting to know how to play together."

K-State now stands at 6-13 on the season. The team took yesterday off in an attempt to help the team recover from its injuries.

"It's been a physical drain on everyone the last week, and I know everyone is tired," Bietau said.

"Physically, things are starting to flare up, and I think they're tired emotionally as well. I hope they're encouraged by how close the match was, and they're prepared for Kansas City."

VINCENT P. LAVERGNE/Collegian

Susana Labrador, No. 1 doubles player with Amelia Van Der Merwe, extends for a serve against Colorado. The pair lost, 6-1, 4-6, 7-5.

Shrubsole said Saturday's results had left her confident about beating Colorado in the Big Eight tournament.

"All three of the doubles matches went to three sets, and I think Colorado expected to win a little easier than they did," she said.

"We can sneak at least another doubles match when we play them in Kansas City and get everyone healthy on the singles end, we'll have a good chance of beating Colorado."

"And if we can get through the first match in Kansas City, I know we can really make some noise."

SPORTS DIGEST

► MONTANA TALKS CONTINUE

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The Joe Montana Sweepstakes took another strange turn Sunday when the president of the San Francisco 49ers said the quarterback could be the team's "designated starter" while competing with Steve Young.

The unusual development came a day after Montana had reached a contract agreement with Kansas City. The 49ers, however, were unable to work out sufficient compensation with the Chiefs, and the deal was put on hold.

Montana and 49ers owner Ed DeBartolo Jr., met in Youngstown, Ohio, and were expected to return to San Francisco on Sunday. Montana could announce as early as Monday if the 49ers' new proposal was acceptable.

If Montana accepts, it would leave the 49ers with Young, the NFL's MVP last season, as a backup going into training camp. It would create an almost-unheard-of situation for one team to have two league MVPs at quarterback.

► SPLITTORFF CARRIES KU

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Jamie Splittorff won his fifth game without a loss Saturday as Kansas beat Iowa State 11-3 in the Big Eight.

Splittorff scattered six hits in six innings, allowing three runs, all earned. He struck out five and walked three. Jimmy Walker worked three innings of scoreless relief for his seventh save.

Iowa State (9-17, 3-10) led 2-1 before Kansas (29-8, 10-4) erupted for four runs in the sixth.

► COURT DATE SET FOR CHIEF

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Kansas City Chiefs running back Harvey Williams and his wife are scheduled to appear in court Wednesday on charges stemming from a domestic dispute.

Williams, 25, was charged with a misdemeanor count of battery against his wife, Lorie Williams, 24. She was charged with one felony count of aggravated assault on allegedly pointing a handgun at a woman who is a friend of Williams.

McGrew draws only first at cold KU meet

LAWRENCE — K-State was left high and dry — and cold and wet — after leaving Memorial Stadium Saturday night.

The men's and women's track teams had only one first-place finisher, triple jumper Dante McGrew, this weekend at the 68th annual Kansas Relays in Lawrence.

Although McGrew was the only winner, the Wildcats finished in the top five in 14 events.

Windy conditions persisted Friday and lasted into Saturday, when showers hampered several events.

"The weather definitely had an impact on the kids," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said. "The marks weren't as great as they usually would be."

Rovelto was pleased with several of the athletes, especially McGrew.

"This was his first outdoor meet of the year, even though he jumped indoors," Rovelto said of McGrew, who won the event at the Anschutz Sports Pavilion on the Kansas campus.

McGrew's best jump was 50 feet, 10 3/4 inches, tying him with Ivory Rounds of Southern Colorado, but got first place because McGrew did it on his second jump, and Rounds made his mark later.

"He has had meets where he has jumped farther, but this was his best meet because he was consistent," Rovelto said. "He looked as good as ever on the runway. Every jump of his was over 50 feet."

Rovelto said he liked Gwen Wentland's performance this weekend as well.

"Gwen had a great weekend," he said. "After her heptathlon, she jumped over six feet."

Wentland, in only her second triple-jump competition, got second place in high jump at 6 feet and placed sixth in triple jump at 37 feet, 8 inches Saturday.

"It was disappointing," Wentland said after the high jump. "I didn't set any standards coming in to the meet, but I wanted to get the automatic qualifying national mark (6' 3/4")."

Marybeth Labosky of Kansas beat Wentland with a jump of 6' 1 3/4", but she has never beaten Wentland when Wentland was concentrating on just one event.

Ed Broxterman received third in the high jump at 7' 1/4", tying Peter Malesey of Nebraska, but Broxterman had more misses.

"My main problem was warming up, and then the rains came," Broxterman said.

"We had to go inside, and I had to warm up again. I used up a lot of energy."

"Hopefully, I've learned from my lessons. I didn't react well to the situation."

"Ed struggled in the event," Rovelto said. "It was a tough transition for him. From the time he first warmed up, he had to wait three hours before his first jump."

Dennis Nelson captured second place in the javelin, but it was the longest throw by a collegiate, at 213' 4".

"I had worked very hard during the season, and I wanted to try hard and do my best," Nelson said. "I thought everybody was going to be close at the end, but when we were warming up, I was throwing it farther."

"This was a big confidence boost. I should be ranked first or second in the Big Eight. I think I can improve even more and make it to the nationals."

Rovelto said he liked Paulette Staats' performance in the 1,500 meters, as she captured second place Friday with a time of 4:31.4 seconds.

"She ran exceptionally well," he said. "She has been consistently running around 4:31. She did a great job."

"I had been doing pretty good," said Staats, who finished more than two seconds behind Molly McClimon of Michigan. "I knew I was going to have good competition and good times."

"I tried to do my best, and I wanted to win. With the cold and the wind, I placed well."

One Wildcat who wasn't happy with her run was Jennifer Hillier, who ran a 9:56.36 in the 3,000 meters to place fourth.

"I wanted to do a lot better. I had good practices this last week," she said.

"I just went out too fast at the start."

Hillier tried to chase the front-runner of the race early, but it didn't pay for her later.

"She ran a good portion of the race by herself," Rovelto said. "It took a little bit out of her. She could have ran it faster."

Martha Pinto placed fifth, and Janet Magner finished eighth in the 5,000 meters, while Amy Marx captured 12th in the 10,000 meters.

Sprinter Nikki Green tied for fourth in the 100-meter dash on Friday and fifth in the 400-meter dash.

For the men runners, Randy Helling tied for second place in the 800-meter run in a time of 1:53, just three-tenths of a second behind first place. Michael Becker — in his first 10,000 meter race — won fifth place, and Chris Pryor captured 12th in the 400 meters.

Chris Unthank led the way in the 3,000-meter steeplechase, placing 10th with 9:17.5, followed by David Haskell in 11th place and Yared Berhane in 18th.

The team of Unthank, Billy Wuggazer, Berhane and Haskell received third place in the Bill Easton 4 X Mile relay Friday, while the men's sprint relay and the women's distance relay were given fourth place, and the men's two-mile relay won sixth place.

Julie Jackson highlighted the women throwers with a 151' 6" throw in the javelin to get second place. Kristen Schultz and Staci Keesling got fifth and 18th place, respectively.

In the discus, Julie Meyer captured 11th place, and Shanelle Stires recorded 14th place. Stires placed 16th in the shot put.

Surf city in Marlatt

story by Mark Jones

They built a beach for a few hours of fun.

The men of the third floor of Marlatt Hall were hosts of the second annual Beach Bash '93 indoor beach party Saturday night.

The concept of Beach Bash came about last year when the floor wanted to give a dance for its sister floor.

"Last year we were trying to come up with an idea for a cool dance. A suggestion was jokingly made we fill the lobby with sand... and we did it," Tony Simmons, senior in political science, said.

Given the success and popularity of last year's dance, they decided to do it again.

To create the beach, a wood frame was constructed, lined with plastic and filled with sand.

Importing the sand into the third-floor lobby was not an easy task, but it was simplified as much as possible.

"We filled trash cans on rollers, rolled them through the basement, up the elevator and dumped them in the pit," Simmons said.

A crew of 12 logged more than 70 trips up the elevators in one and one-half hours time to haul in the eight tons of sand.

Once the beach was constructed, it was time to transform the cement pillar in the center of the beach into a palm tree, collect music from floor residents and put the sound system together.

"We put together a loud, clean music system with good staging," Mutty Sharfi, junior in nuclear engineering and disc jockey for the evening, said.

"It was all donated by people on the floor, so it cost nothing to run."

The sound system contained five amplifiers, eight speakers, and a subwoofer.

"It was better quality sound this year," Sharfi said.

The music for the bash was also donated by floor residents.

"Hip hop and rap was the main stuff we played. There was an occasional country or pop and a few oldies," he said.

A highlight of the evening was the limbo stick, as participants found out how low they could go.

"The DJs got into the act by calling out people's names as they went under the bar," Charles Pawloski, limbo winner and senior in electrical engineering, said.

Although the dance began at 8 p.m., it did not really get going until 9:30, when the beach became crowded.

Dancing barefoot on the beach,

Jodi Hart, freshman in psychology and Goodnow Hall resident, and Charles Pawloski, senior in electrical engineering and Marlatt resident, dance at Beach Bash '93 Saturday night on the third floor of Marlatt Hall. About 40 students danced on the sand-covered lobby floor.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

participants seemed to enjoy the festivities.

"It's kind of weird having the sand mush between your toes," Shari Henery, graduate student in school counseling, said.

The dance was also a good stress reliever, and it made up for the recent bad weather, she said.

Although the dance was scheduled to end at 12:30 a.m., it continued until 1:20 a.m.

Sharfi said because the dance was going so well, residents told their hall director they would continue until they received a noise complaint or he told them to shut it down.

The dance ended because the residents didn't want to take advantage of the director's generosity, and it was time to start cleaning up, Sharfi said.

Clearing the beach began immediately after the dance, when the sand was hauled out of the building and deposited in the hall's volleyball pit.

Three hours later, no signs remained that would indicate the night's event.

"It didn't seem to take long because we were having fun as we did it," Jyrel Donaldson, freshman in environmental design, said.

When it was all over, the floor was pleased with the results.

"It's a hell of a lot of work, but it's a lot of fun," Mark Rooks, senior in agricultural engineering, said.

"A lot of things would have had to go wrong for it not to be worth it."

Songs of faith redefine Depeche Mode

MEGANNE MOORE

Collegian

The gurus of synth and pop irony have reappeared from their shadowy subliminal halls of darkness.

Depeche Mode's latest release, "Songs of Faith and Devotion" is the group's first true confession of tunes encompassing heavy religious undertones.

Often pegged as having a "gloomy" sound, most don't realize the real effect the group's music has on its listeners. If one really appreciates Depeche, it is an uplifting, powerful adventure into music.

"Songs" is an obvious foray into religious and faith themes.

The first single off the compact disc, "I Feel You," is a classic Depeche approach to their songs.

Realistically, "I Feel You" is a song of the spirit of the soul coming to life through the guidance of God.

Yet there still is a feeling as if this is applied to a relationship with another, as well as with a higher being.

In the past, Depeche has alluded to religion in a somewhat negative tone.

This is a transformation into a new sound, the group's rebirth into a new century of music, distanced from the hoopla exploding out of Seattle for the past two years.

Eavesdropping on many conversations, I've heard many people say they think it sounds like the old Depeche, not a CD to rave about.

I wholeheartedly disagree.

Surpassing the commercial multi-platinum "Violator" CD from 1990, Depeche branches out to test the holy waters of varied acoustic, gospel and percussion sounds.

The CD features a gospel arrangement on "Get Right With Me," uilleann pipes on "Judas" and strings on the ballad, "One Caress."

Thirteen years of self-producing and managing has normally found Depeche unenthusiastic about sharing in its cutting-edge spotlight of success.

Welcoming different talents and sounds has opened a new realm for Depeche to discover and prevail.

Depeche pulls the listener into its cult-like experience, spinning you around until you are emotionally drained, yet rejuvenated and lifted.

"In Your Room" illustrates the emotion Depeche feels, while inviting listeners to explore its passionate aura.

"In your room/where souls disappear/only you exist here/I'm hanging on your words/living on your breath/feeling with your skin."

"Songs" is also the new definition of the band and roles each member now plays.

Lead singer Dave Gahan has broadened his musical tastes to the extreme, from Soundgarden and Jane's Addiction to Neil Young. His voice is harsher and deeper, not as smooth as in past recordings.

Depeche will hit the road soon to promote "Songs," beginning with a few dates in the United States and more in Europe and South America.

Well-established, self-dependents, Depeche conquer and rally to the front line of new music.

Earth Day activities co-sponsored; forum to focus on energy alternatives

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Earth Week 1993, beginning today, will give K-State students opportunities to learn about the Earth's problems from various speakers, an alternative energy forum and the Earth Day 1993 Fair.

"We have a lot of problems we need to start dealing with, and Earth Week is a time to learn about those problems," said Jennifer Deluca, senior in English and president of Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment.

SAVE started Earth Week at K-State in 1990. This year the week is being co-sponsored by SAVE, Rainforest Action Group and the Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee.

"We need Earth Week because too many people think that what they do doesn't affect the planet," said Sharon Moreland, sophomore in secondary education and SAVE vice president.

"But every time they drive a car or leave a light on, it is detrimental to the Earth, and we only have one."

Tonight, Kirk Day, president of the Kansas City Rainforest

Alliance, will speak on how individuals' actions contribute to the destruction of the rainforest.

Tuesday's speakers will discuss the issue of environmental racism. Deluca said this is a problem most white, middle class people are not aware of because they do not have to deal with it.

"A lot of times bad aspects of environment like landfills, incinerators and industrial areas become more of a minority problem because these things are put in the poorer part of town where a majority of the population tends to be minorities," Deluca said.

Deluca said the Alternative Energy Forum, Wednesday night, will feature representatives speaking on the use of wind, solar, nuclear and geothermal power as energy sources.

Moreland said the conclusion of the week will be the Earth Day 1993 Fair on Thursday, April 22 has been internationally known as Earth Day since 1970.

Representatives from campus groups will have booths in the Union courtyard with informational displays about different environmental topics.

Earth Day raffle tickets will be on sale for $1 throughout the week. Aggieville merchants have made donations for the raffle — everything from sweatshirts to compact discs. Moreland said there will also be T-shirts on sale for $10. The shirts depict the earth as a seed with a plant coming out of it.

"We are a really small group, but we are trying to do a lot," Moreland said.

"We know people are interested in this, and we hope we are able to tap that interest and have a really big turn out."

Slide show details people's fight to save rainforests

"The indigenous people have never viewed it as owning the rainforest."

ROBERT WILSON
SENIOR IN MARKETING

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

A slide show titled "Voices of the Rainforest" will kick off Earth Week 1993.

The slide show and lecture will be at 7 p.m. Monday in the Union Big 8 Room.

Kirk Day, president of the Kansas City Rainforest Alliance, will present the slide show. Day has traveled extensively throughout 20 rainforest countries and has led expeditions into rainforests.

"The focus of the presentation is on indigenous peoples of the rainforest," said Robert Wilson, senior in marketing and president of the Rainforest Action Group.

"The indigenous people have occupied the rainforests for thousands of years, living off the resources. They do so without harming the forests," Wilson said. "They are the only people alive who can use the rainforest without destroying it."

In the past 50 years, industry has moved in and exploited the rainforest, Wilson said. This practice creates problems for the native people, he said.

"The indigenous people have never viewed it as owning the rainforest," he said. "Now they are having to deal with the government and countries who are cutting the rainforests for logging."

"We have forced the cultures to come to our terms. The indigenous people are having to go to court and fight for their land."

Day will discuss these problems and efforts to get the indigenous people involved in alternatives to the destructive practices, Wilson said.

He said he will also talk about how everyone is connected to the rainforest.

"The rainforests are part of the global ecosystem, so they affect everyone," Wilson said.

Jennifer DeLuca, senior in English and president of Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment, said the slide presentation is a good opportunity for the two environmental groups to work together during Earth Week.

"Voices of the Rainforest" is sponsored by the Rainforest Action Group, the Young Democrats and the Department of Landscape Architecture.

REVIEW

Music adds soul to universal classic

TED KADAU JR.
Collegian

A problem presents itself when spinning the tale of Hamlet. It's been done. Almost everyone from Mel Gibson to your father has played the role of the Melancholy Dane, and everyone has watched them do it.

So in order to present Shakespeare's classic without it seeming too much like a rerun, you must mess with it a little, give it a new slant, while still staying true to form.

The K-State Theater Department's presentation of "Hamlet" does this with a flare that kicks most others right out of bed.

The story, in case you've forgotten, revolves around Prince Hamlet of Denmark, who, upon returning from a lengthy journey, finds that his father the king, has died, and his uncle Claudius now resides on the throne.

To add serious insult to injury, the uncle has taken Hamlet's mother Gertrude for his new bride.

For a number of reasons Hamlet is upset — however, this escalates into vengeful fury when his father's ghost comes before him and tells him his death was no accident. The new king murdered his father and purposefully took the queen as his bride.

Hamlet swears revenge and pretends insanity. In this way he hides his fury from his mother and uncle, while all the while choosing his moment.

Within the story of Hamlet, an entire cast of characters comes to pass, including Polonius, a wise, yet comical old man who is father to Laertes and Ophelia. Ophelia is Hamlet's love interest within the play and bears the brunt of much of his insane ramblings.

The true quality of this classical drama is its universality. Every conceivable facet of life's spectrum is represented here. Life, death, revenge, love, hate and jealousy all take center stage as the play unfolds. The play is universal.

Much of what makes "Hamlet" great also holds true for the K-State production.

Several facades come together to form wonder. Special praises go to Julie Yount and Michael MacFarland, both music composition majors at K-State who composed and performed all music for the production.

Herein lies much of this production's soul. Combining jazz, blues and rock, the duo has given "Hamlet" a fresh face in the crowd of many. This, combined with a set of functional beauty and sold dramatic acting, make this "Hamlet" a joy to the eyes and ears.

An especially fine performance is laid forth by Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, in the role of Prince Hamlet. Kelly has shown his talent for the dramatic and the insane in such productions as "Marquis de Sade" and "Our Country's Good."

However, within "Hamlet," Kelly takes his talents to a new plane. Whether moving across the stage in ponderous thought or raging insanity, he is truly a talent to be reckoned with.

and make it more productive."

Both Okoye and Akhimien said the land in Africa is very fertile, but the lack of tractors and implements makes it hard for the natives to make a profit from farming.

There are a half million late-model Ford tractors, like the ones Tractors for Our Daily Bread is asking for, on farms in the United States that are not being used now, Akhimien said.

Ford-New Holland has expressed an interest in helping out with the project, but Spani said corporations are not the main focus for support.

"We're trying to recruit the farmer across the street to get involved," Spani said. "It is more important for everyday people to get involved."

The group is trying to gather implements such as plows and rakes to send along with the tractors.

Right now 16 implements have been donated, said Fred Rice, director of the Small Business Development Center.

"Implements aren't quite as hard to come by," Rice said. "The tractor isn't much good without the implements to go with it."

Fundraising is the foremost goal for the group at this time, Rice said. There is a mechanic from Republic, Kan., ready to go to Nigeria to set up a school for tractor maintenance and safety.

"All I need is a plane ticket," Rice said.

Taming of the Horse Judges

Twenty teams from 11 different colleges competed in what is known as the "spring practice contest" Saturday in Weber Arena. The competition was the Southwest Regional Collegiate Horse Judging Contest.

Contestants placed three halter classes and five performance classes. Once the contest starts, there is no coaching allowed.

The halter classes assess the conformation and structure of the animal, taking into consideration the type of use it will be expected to do.

In the performance classes, the contestants are split into groups, and the classes are judged from the bleachers. The contestants look for constancy, behavior, training and movement as the horses perform the prescribed patterns.

Once the placings were finished, the contestants had to give reasons to justify the placings on three performance classes and one halter class. The reasons classes were pre-chosen by officials.

Scott Blasi, freshman in animal sciences and industry and K-State team member, judged for his first time in an actual contest Saturday.

"I was pretty consistent in my placing of classes and got a 47 out of 50 in my halter reasons. I did OK for my first time out, but I still hope to get better," Blasi said.

Blasi also tied for 16th place out of more than 80 individuals.

Everyone involved said they felt K-State put on a good showing.

"We had some trouble because of the big horse show going on in Wichita. Some of the horses we had scheduled didn't come and we had to rearrange and fill in classes when they didn't show," Betsy Greene, K-State horse judging team coach, said.

Regardless of the minor problems, the event went on but not without the help of many.

"It was a lot of work, done by a lot of different people. All the horses and riders were volunteer — nothing was paid. Both students and the outside community helped," Greene said.

The help donated was not all local. "Tammy Camac, coach from Allen County Community College, brought up some students who weren't judging. They helped by riding and being group leaders. It was a team effort by everybody," Greene said.

The day ended with a banquet and awards ceremony at the Holidome. Top honors went to Colorado State University, the high team overall. Second and third place went to University of Georgia and Middle Tennessee State University, respectively.

Election reversals sought by candidates sophomore in chemical engineering.

She also was disqualified in the midst of the election for violating campaign regulations. Meyer said she posted campaign fliers on trash cans but was unaware it could result in disqualification.

Meyer received 218 votes in the election, which was the second highest total in the college. The top eight are elected.

Should tribunal reverse the elections committee's disqualification of Meyer, Farmer said the same options exist as for the College of Arts and Sciences.

The elections committee will meet Monday night to decide what course of action to take, Farmer said.

At this point, neither the Ring nor Meyer situation is expected to affect the student body president run-off election between Fred Wingert and Ed Skoog scheduled for Wednesday.

THIS YEAR A LOT OF COLLEGE SENIORS WILL BE GRADUATING INTO DEBT.

Under the Army's Loan Repayment program, you could get out from under with a three-year enlistment.

Each year you serve on active duty reduces your indebtedness by one-third or $1,500, whichever amount is greater, up to a $55,000 limit.

The offer applies to Perkins Loans, Stafford Loans, and certain other federally insured loans, which are not in default.

And debt relief is just one of the many benefits you'll earn from the Army. Ask your Army Recruiter.

Verdict receives mixed responses think they should be punished."

Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs, said she was somewhat disappointed.

"I have mixed reactions about the verdict. I have a sense that if the verdict had found all guilty in keeping with what I wanted, it would have been true justice," she said.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson and Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley are challenging the country to use the verdict "as a stepping stone toward reversing years of neglect of inner cities," according to an Associated Press release.

"In thinking about it, I look at this case in the same way I looked at the case of the rape in the bar," Beverly McLean-Murray, assistant professor of journalism said. "There were those who actually committed a crime and those who stood in the background and cheered.

"Justice was served for two verdicts, but for the other two I can't say justice was served."

Many of those interviewed felt that the lapse of time from now until the sentencing to take place in August is a long, tense wait.

McLean-Murray said the pre-sentencing report can be a long process. It is based partly on the person's lifestyle and prior police records.

"There are certain set guidelines, and the process is the same as for any other situation. This is not an unusual waiting process for sentencing," she said.

Sentencing is set for Aug. 4, when Koon and Powell face up to 10 years in prison and $250,000 in fines. Each was freed Saturday on $5,000 bail.

"I can't second-guess the jurors' decision that they really tried to weigh the evidence that they had. We still have to consider what will happen during the sentencing," Taylor-Archer said.

Many were thankful for the lack of violence.

"I'm pleased with a sense of calm among many people, but at some point I hope there isn't a repeat performance," Caldwell said. "I'm in favor of the response of the system to the verdict."

According to Riley County and K-State police departments, there have been no related incidents since the verdict was released.

"On a legal level, I have no idea why the jury felt that only two were guilty," McLean-Murray said. "The question should be correctly asked why the other two neglected their duty as officers, and how would this constitute ... the violation of Rodney King's civil rights."

events.

One of the events was a 12-foot wall that everyone had to make it over. Once again, restrictions were put on the team.

All but two members, Esi

Gharthey-Tagoe, sophomore in chemical engineering, and Kristin Bayer, sophomore in chemical engineering, were made mute.

After the wall, the group moved to the trust fall. In the trust fall, a person stands on an elevated platform and falls off backwards to be caught by the rest of the team.

The team eventually made it to the monster, the largest obstacle they had to overcome.

One at a time, the team had to climb up a 30-foot segmented ladder, walk across a cable with two cable supports on both sides, make a jump across 4-foot gap, walk across a cable with a single cable support above them, and slide down a 200-foot zip-line.

"The hardest part was the ladder," Anderson said.

After making it to the zip-line platform, Frederiksen said, "Why is it I can jump out of an airplane but not off this platform?"

Instructors were placed along the monster obstacle, and team members worked the safety lines on the ground.

After going on the zip-line, Melissa Miller, sophomore in chemical engineering, said she thought it was awesome.

The team finished the second day with the event called the ultimate challenge.

This obstacle consisted of climbing a 20-foot telephone pole and jumping off, trying to reach a trapeze 4-feet high and 9-feet away from the platform. The team members were hooked up with two safety lines.

Hanes and Howard Thorstad, graduate student, tried the ultimate challenge.

"That was the adrenalin rush I was looking for," Hanes said.

Not everyone was able to try the last challenge because they ran out of time due to an inconvenience with equipment.

At the end of the day, everyone took time to relax and look back on the two days.

Hanes said, "I'm surprised we pulled together."

"I liked it," Marty Gilmore, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, said. "I got over my fear of heights, I think."

Most of the group decided to go back the following weekend to try the ultimate challenge again and to do more of the high course events.

Reader wants to meet 'A Reader'

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I know you are not running a matchmaking service, but I would like to meet "A Reader" from your April 15 column.

Never before have I met someone who feels the same way I do about love. Most people spout "I love you" at the drop of a hat. I, however, cannot use the same word to describe my feelings about someone that others use to describe their furniture polish.

"I just love new lemon Pledge. It really shines!"

No, not wanting to make a commitment is not my problem. In fact, I was married for seven years before I realized the error. My problem is finding someone who truly believes the way I feel about love, like Mr. "Reader."

I believe love and marriage will work provided that both partners have the same level of commitment, caring and love as the other. Real love endures. False love leaves when the lust subsides, although it is usually sooner than my seven-year period.

Back to my original point, I would like to meet "A Reader." Although I am unattractive, it shouldn't matter to "Reader" because love is not just a physical thing. Anyway, how do you propose, no pun intended, I meet "A Reader."

DEAR HO,

If you are interested in romance with "A Reader" I first suggest you have a sex change, unless you happen to be homosexual. I had to give "Reader" an anonymous name because I don't run names in this column. Sorry.

But that is not to say that there isn't a man out there who shares your views about the seriousness and integrity of love. I wish I could set you up with such a man — you sound like a neat person. But, alas, if I set up one blind date in this column I will have to set up 100.

My suggestion is for you to become involved in organizations that are aligned with your values — perhaps volunteer work or charitable work would be a good place to meet a caring, interesting person. Good luck.

Standoff ends in flames

Waco, Texas— Fire engulfs the Branch Davidian compound near Waco, Texas, Monday. The compound burned to the ground after FBI agents in an armored vehicle smashed the buildings and pumped in tear gas. The Justice Department reported cult members set the fire.

87 cult members believed dead, 25 of them children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Doomsday cult leader David Koresh's apocalyptic prediction for his followers came true Monday when a raging fire destroyed the compound where he had held federal agents at bay for 51 days.

As many as 87 members of the Branch Davidian religious sect, including Koresh and 25 children, are believed to have died in the flames, which raced through the wooden buildings in half an hour.

Authorities said cult members set the fire themselves.

The blaze, fanned by stiff prairie winds, erupted about 12:05 p.m., just six hours after FBI agents began using armored vehicles to pound holes in the complex of buildings and spray them with tear gas in a bid to force an end to the standoff. Eight cult members who escaped the flames are believed by federal officials to be the only survivors, but authorities said they would not know the precise death toll until they could search an underground maze of passageways.

Justice Department spokesman Carl Stern said two survivors were injured critically, one had a serious injury, and three have minor injuries, all including burns. One person taken into custody told authorities that people inside the compound had set the blaze, Stern said.

Ricks said multiple witnesses, including FBI snipers positioned outside the compound, spotted cult members setting several fires.

One person, Ricks said, "was knelt down with his hands cupped, from which a flame erupted."

The agents reported seeing a man wearing a gas mask and black uniform throw something inside, followed by a fireball.

Additionally, Ricks said, a man found Monday afternoon in a bunker on the grounds said lantern fuel had been spread throughout the wooden complex and that the fire was started simultaneously in several places.

Koresh had warned the FBI in a letter last week that agents would be "devoured by fire" if they tried to harm him.

A maze of tunnels was believed to run under the complex, but Jack Killorin, a spokesman for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, said the agency believed no tunnel system would have allowed people to survive the fire.

"It's a bad end and one of the ends we feared from the beginning," Killorin said.

"Obviously, suicide was a concern all along, but the method was different, unexpected."

Candidates debate issues, tone

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

Seriousness of the candidates was the main issue in a debate between presidential contenders Ed Skoog and Fred Wingert Monday night in Moore Hall.

Neither candidate seemed afraid to get tough, and the debate included several moments when tensions rose.

The forum began quietly with the candidates giving opening statements outlining their positions.

Wingert stated his campaign goals of improving the book buy-back process and of establishing a campus-wide alumni connection program. He also wanted people to know that he was accessible.

"I want all students to know that they should not be afraid to come and ask me questions," Wingert said.

Skoog stated his campaign ideals of making students receive something in return for the athletic fee, of taking away the monopoly the K-State Union has established on campus and of requiring a multicultural overlay class for all students instead of the physical education class that is currently required.

"There are a whole litany of problems Eric and I hope to be able to work on in the next year," Skoog said.

The forum got into heated discussion early on when Wingert argued that his campaign had

Prisoners want to lift barricade, talk to lawyer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — Inmates barricaded inside a state prison for more than a week hung a banner from a cellblock window Monday saying they're willing to end the standoff but want to talk to a lawyer first.

A newspaper reported prisoners were arming themselves with makeshift weapons and may have booby-trapped some prison entrances.

Inmates turned their cellblock at the maximum-security Southern Ohio Correctional Facility into a fortress in case authorities decide to rush it, the Dayton Daily News said Monday.

Rhonda Millhouse, a spokeswoman for the state prison system, said she could not confirm the report.

About 450 inmates have held the cellblock since a riot on April 11, when they took eight guards hostage. At least seven inmates and one guard died. Two hostages were released last week.

The banner unfurled Monday afternoon said prisoners were willing to end the standoff but first wanted to speak with attorney Niki Schwartz, who spoke with inmates Sunday.

The newspaper, quoting sources it did not identify, said prisoners were armed with knives, shovels, barbells and "zip" guns —

Forum on trial added to debate for candidates

NEIL ANDERSON

A sparse crowd was present at a student forum Monday to discuss feelings and ask questions about the verdict from the Rodney King trial.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, again served as mediator to the forum in the K-State Union Courtyard.

He told the crowd the time originally had been scheduled for a student body presidential debate and that the candidates were present for questions.

Franklin turned the beginning of the forum over to Beverly McLean-Murray, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, to talk about the verdict and sentencing of the two officers — Sgt. Stacey Koon and Officer Laurence Powell — who were found guilty of violating King's civil rights.

McLean-Murray said the federal sentencing process usually takes three to four months after the verdict.

She also said the sentencing guidelines are on a point system, which gives recommended prison terms in relation to the severity of a crime.

There is no early parole for persons found guilty and sentenced in federal offenses, McLean-Murray said.

Dianne Urban, students' attorney, said she believed the American jury system is a necessity.

"It's the best thing we have, but it's far from perfect," she said.

Frank Sereno, senior in business administration, asked which of Rodney King's civil rights had been violated and if the general public was allowed in the courtroom.

McLean-Murray said the trial hadn't specifically cited which civil rights were violated. She said the public was allowed in the courtroom during the trial.

She also said the minimum sentencing could be zero years or probation.

One student asked what restitution there would be for Rodney King.

"His civil case is still pending," McLean-Murray said. The forum turned toward the presidential candidates and questions regarding the possible multicultural-course requirement and priorities of the campaigns.

Rhonda Bathurst, senior in philosophy, asked the candidates what their views were on the K-State community and the multicultural courses.

Eric Henry, vice presidential candidate, said the Skoog-Henry ticket wants to propose the elimination of the physical fitness requirement and add a two-hour class dealing with cultural, racial and sexual differences.

"I can sum up your P.E. class here, and you won't have to take it — exercise for 20 minutes three times a week, eat fruits and vegetables, don't drink so much and don't smoke so much," Henry said.

Presidential candidate Fred Wingert also responded.

"Jeff and I have had a long commitment to multiculturalism," Wingert said.

Wingert said the Wingert-Peterson ticket wants to make multicultural course requirement choices out of existing courses and new courses to be developed.

"As a student, I am very happy K-State is a campus that is friendly and willing to change," Jeff Peterson said.

Elsa Diaz, senior in industrial engineering, turned the focus of the discussion back to the Rodney King verdict.

Diaz said she believed the jury's decision of finding two officers guilty and the other two not guilty was to try to make everyone happy.

Finney prepares to go before Supreme Court

TOPEKA (AP) — A Topeka attorney will represent Gov. Joan Finney in a case before the Supreme Court questioning her authority to negotiate gambling compacts with Indian tribes.

Pedro Irigonegaray was named by Finney to handle the suit Attorney General Bob Stephan filed in the Supreme Court testing constitutionality of Indian compacts under 1986 constitutional amendments.

The Senate ordered Stephan to sue the governor against Stephan's advice. Stephan has said under the 1988 federal Indian Gaming Regulatory Act that Kansas cannot stop Indians from offering casino gambling.

Finney also said the state cannot stop Indian gambling.

"I will continue to defend the sovereignty and the rights of Native American people."

Shifting of book stacks completed

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

The shifting of the stacks at Farrell Library, which was in progress for almost two years, was completed last week.

Faculty and staff began planning for the move in May 1991 when space was made available in the old Farm Bureau building, now the Alumni Association building. The extra space allowed for about 350,000 volumes to be moved into the building's basement and to some areas of the first floor.

To decide which books remained in Farrell and which ones were moved to the annex, a study was done to monitor how often specific books are checked out.

The committee selected books to be moved. Notices were sent to teachers whose books from their area of study would be shifted to the annex. Then the teachers had a chance to justify reasons for the book to stay in Farrell.

Once all of this was completed, the actual shift took place. It began a little less than a year ago, with about 20 students working in teams.

"The shift was necessary because the shelves were 85- to 95-percent full," Terry Ratliff, assistant professor of the library, said. "The student had to re-shift everything in order to re-shelf just one book."

Re-shifting took extra time and energy for the library workers, and many times they did not have the time to check shelf by shelf to make sure books were in order. The more often books are properly re-shelved, the more accessible they are.

Completing the shifting a month early gives the student teams extra time to put into shelf reading. Shelf reading is a way for the workers to re-check the order of the books on the shelves, he said.

Cliff Conrad, stacks manager at Farrell, was responsible for calculating the inches of shelves available and then calculating the inches of periodicals and books to be placed on the shelves.

Conrad then had to allow for growth within the next four years. After establishing all his calculations, he made a map of each stack, plotting where each letter began and ended.

"In Q, we had five to six shelves out of 3,437 — that's 1-percent accuracy. We were real close," Conrad said.

As soon as room was made in one spot, books from another location were moved into that area. This was the reason books were out of order during the shift. As a final result of the shift, all bound periodicals are located in stacks two through four. The regular books are located in stacks five through eight.

"Books were shifted from seven up to eight. I can see where it would appear to be a mess and be confusing to students and faculty," Conrad said.

However, by working this way and not in a straight line, the shift was completed a month ahead of schedule — faster and more efficient than the shift that took place five years ago.

"There's errors with anything you do. With such a large collection, it's no more of a mess than it was when we started shifting," Mindy Schartz, student shifting intern, said.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. I've heard the financial aid office can assist if I have unusual circumstances. What does that mean?

A. The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) collects general information about the student/applicant. The Federal government has given financial aid administrators the right to assist families or single applicants with circumstances not considered normal or that cannot be entered on the Federal form.

Q. What type of circumstances are considered unusual?

A. The following circumstances could allow the financial aid office to make adjustments:

- If you have high medical or dental expenses that are not covered by insurance.
- If your family pays private tuition for elementary or secondary students.
- If one of the parents or the student will have reduced income or loss of income for 1993.
- If you or your parents are classified as a "dislocated" worker.
- If one or both of your parents have died.
- If your parents are divorced since you completed your Federal form.

In addition to the above, the student may have other reasons a financial aid office can make adjustments. Students or parents should write a letter explaining their unique situations for the 1993-94 award year, and send it to 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. I've heard the Federal government considers students "dependent" for financial aid purposes until they reach 24 years of age. Is this true?

A. Yes, under the Federal definition, an independent student is one who is:

- Born before January 1, 1970.
- A veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces.
- A graduate or professional student.
- Married when filling out the Federal form.
- A ward of the court or both parents are deceased.
- Supporting a legal dependent(s) other than a spouse.
- A student for whom a financial aid administrator determines and documents the student's independent status on the basis of extenuating circumstances such as physical or emotional harm. Special circumstances that exist for an individual student rather than circumstances that exist across a class of students may also allow for an adjustment.

Q. If I am classified as dependent, whose information do I report on the Federal form?

A. If you are dependent for financial aid purposes, you must use your parents 1992 tax information. This would include a step-parent's information if part of the household. Of course, the student's 1992 information is also collected on the Federal form.

Q. It seems like the FAFSA asks for a lot of information. Is it all necessary?

A. The FAFSA collects only information critical to consider you for Federal aid programs. In most cases, the free form is the only form necessary to apply for aid from colleges, state agencies, and the Federal government. However, some colleges, private scholarship agencies, and state agencies may request further information for their non-Federal aid programs. Always check with your financial aid office to make sure. They are there to assist you.

EARTH DAY '93

Children recycle ideas for adults

KRISTEEN YOUNG
Collegian

Editor's note: This is the first in a four-part series focusing on Earth Day, which is Thursday.

Children's enthusiasm for saving the Earth could rub off on adults.

That is what the Kansas Department of Health and Environment is hoping.

The campaign for this year's Earth Day features HK, the healthy Kansas squirrel mascot. KDHE is hoping to get children interested in the environment at an early age.

Janet Neff, director for the Kansas Health and Environmental Education, said the department has targeted elementary and junior-high children.

She has seen an enormous response, even from preschools, she said.

"The kids are so enthusiastic and interested," Neff said. "We hope it increases the awareness of their surroundings and an interest in the Earth."

Hopefully that interest will then influence adults, she said.

"When adults have a can of pop, they may just throw the can away, but if there is a younger person around, hopefully, they will bug them to recycle it," Neff said.

"Sometimes, if you can reach the children, you can indirectly reach the adults."

KDHE prepared informational packets, posters and videos available to the public and has had a greater response than it anticipated, Neff said.

About 2,500 posters have been sent throughout the state, and all of KDHE's 100 videos have been rented for the entire month of April. All of the resources are offered at no cost.

"Schools have also called us, and we have given them suggestions for Earth Day celebrations or just answered some of their questions about the environment," Neff said.

Although Earth Day is Thursday, April 22, the 1,000 students at Manhattan Middle School are celebrating Earth Day all week by wearing different colored T-shirts each day.

They showed their appreciation for the sky and sea by wearing blue on Monday. The rest of the week, the students will wear green for the rainforests, white for clean air and water, black for endangered plants and animals, and on Friday, they will wear either their Earth Day shirts or their own shirt with a plant or animal on it.

"They all own something with a plant or animal on it. Even if it is Willie the Wildcat, we could stretch it," said Marilyn Fox, eighth-grade science teacher at Manhattan Middle School.

Fox, with help from other teachers, coordinated activities for the week. Other activities for Earth Week include a poster competition and the judging of robots made by students out of recycled materials.

Each morning, members of the Earth Day Club will give an announcement on how students can help save the Earth.

Fox said the students' interest in the environment is something that is becoming more popular.

"I think it has become more politically popular, and it is something everyone can participate in," Fox said.

"It doesn't matter what your political or religious beliefs are. We all have to live here, and nobody can argue with that."

She said the environment is one thing the students believe they can control.

"They feel empowered by it, and they feel this is something they can do," Fox said.

The Earth Day Club is also beginning a letter-writing campaign to encourage the school district to buy recycled paper.

SECRETARIES' DAY

Seminar is boss' reward for holiday

The Division of Continuing Education and the Small Business Development Center are sponsoring the sixth annual Secretaries Day Seminar this Wednesday.

"The purpose of the seminar is to give secretaries in the Manhattan area the opportunity for professional development," said Dick Claussen, associate specialist in continuing education. "We conduct the seminar every year on national Secretaries Day."

Linda Uthoff from the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department will speak from 9:15 to 10:45 a.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room. The topic of her speech will be "Make Every Day a Good Day."

At 10 and 11 a.m., there will be three concurrent speakers in the Big 8 Room, Union 212 and Union 213. Sheryl Benton from University Counseling Center will speak about stress management and burnout. Kathleen Oldfather, a professional financial planner, will deliver a speech on money management. Raymond Russell, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, will speak about professionalism and workload management.

Shirley Lueth, an author and humorist from Nebraska, will speak from 1:45 to 3:45 p.m. in the Big 8 Room. The topic of her presentation will be humor in the work place.

"The seminar is a chance for bosses to reward secretaries for a job well done," said Frederick Rice, director of the Small Business Development Center.

There are more than 100 people registered for the seminar, Rice said.

"The fee to register is $45, and you can call continuing education to get more information," Rice said.

Metaphysically tied down

Corey Lewis, junior in English, looks up from his metaphysics book while studying Monday afternoon behind a sitting area in the K-State Union Plaza. Lewis was preparing for the class, which was later in the afternoon. Monday's warmer temperatures prompted many K-State students to get outside and enjoy the weather.

THE ISSUE

With the Rodney King verdict comes joy, frustration.

WE SUGGEST

Beyond anything else, this event should be used as something to build upon.

America breathed a collective sigh of relief as the verdict in the Rodney King trial came forth. Two guilty, two not.

But make no mistake — the battle over civil rights is far from done. The King verdict, while significant, is only a mixed benchmark instead of an end.

Mixed because the elation at seeing two Los Angeles police officers convicted of violating Rodney King's civil rights was lessened by seeing two officers set free.

Nonetheless, that mixed message gives hope. Los Angeles and indeed the rest of the country responded to the verdicts with composure rather than violence.

But that composure does not mean the work is through. Instead, it means only that lines of communication are still open.

Certainly, that's been the message of the Rodney King forums in the K-State Union over the past few weeks.

Much discussion at those forums has centered around K-State's role in a multicultural world. The problems posed by forum participants have no easy answers.

Writing an editorial like this is difficult. Usually we make specific suggestions, offer congratulations or at the very least say this is right or this is wrong.

In this case, we can't do that. Instead, we offer only the hope that the King trial offers us all a new, more advanced foundation from which to work.

OTHER VIEWS

The Journal, Martinsburg, W.Va., on public land use policies (April 8):

During the campaign, President Clinton pledged to reform public land use policies. Agribusiness, timbering firms and mining companies making out like bandits on public land ought to pay their fair share, he said. Often, private business was allowed to extract minerals, timber, water and use grazing pastures on public lands at ridiculously low fees, Clinton pointed out. Environmentalists were ecstatic. But that was then, and this is now.

Now, Clinton has backed off considerably. He has dropped insistence that Congress include land use fee increases in a federal budget. That leaves the special interests plenty of room to exercise their muscle on Capitol Hill, keeping the breaks they've enjoyed for generations.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., isn't deceived by Clinton's pledge to follow up on land use fees at a later date. Miller, chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, calls Clinton's change of heart "serious undermining" of efforts to make private enterprise pay fair fees.

Jay Hair, president of the National Wildlife Federation, had another way of commenting on Clinton's breach of faith with environmentalists: "What kind of started out as a love affair quite frankly now is feeling more like date rape."

Not only the environmentalists should be angry. Every citizen should be shocked that certain industries are still able to use our land as if it were theirs. It is a rip-off, pure and simple, and Clinton has decided it is OK with him.

READERS WRITE

► CENSORSHIP

People are always judging book covers

Editor,

Kudos for your April 14 editorial, "Banning books solves nothing." As the daughter of an elementary school librarian, I am constantly amazed at how quick people are to literally judge a book by its cover.

Nine out of the 10 complaints about books my mother gets are from people who are simply objecting to a title or a picture on the cover of a book. Most have not taken the time to read the book or discuss the content with their children. When they do discuss the book with their children, they get a child's version, which is usually exaggerated and rarely accurate.

In a time when America is considered one of the most illiterate nations in the western world, parents of USD 364 should be glad their children are reading at all.

Parents have the right to censor their own children's reading matter, but they shouldn't allow their school boards to take away books that could prove valuable to someone else's children.

The school districts are supposed to be there for the children, and those children should not be forced to miss out on anything because of one small group's objections to a particular book.

Why don't we try remembering that "innocent until proven guilty" holds true for books as well as humans.

► ELECTION

Candidates wronged by biased columnist

Editor,

We were not surprised to read in the April 19 Collegian that columnist John Hawks endorsed Ed Skoog. After all, they are close friends. What was extremely disappointing was Hawks' misrepresentation of our stand on almost every issue.

Our stand on the book buy-back issue is that the process is unfair. The root problem is that faculty are not submitting their textbook lists for the upcoming semester on time. The K-State Union can only pay $3 for books that are not used again, but they can pay $20 for those that are used again. We can return thousands of dollars to students by facilitating discussion and action between faculty and the Union. Of course, you forgot to mention that.

The student athletic fee, which you call "the big quiet issue" really has not been a quiet issue in this race. You again are wrong as to our involvement. We insisted as part of the fee that money go to the KSU band, women's sports and to lower the ticket prices for all students. Yet, again you failed to mention anything else.

Finally, on the amount of campaign expenses, you failed to mention that two other campaigns out-spent us. The money we spent was money we earned working part-time jobs. So, we guess because we have real issues and concerns, we will spend it letting students know who we are and where we stand.

We certainly didn't expect any support from you, Hawks, or your friends. But we also didn't think you would use your position as a Collegian columnist to lie about and distort our record.

At least one thing is for sure — nothing has changed. We appreciate the Collegian correcting these inaccuracies.

As students go out and vote tomorrow in the K-State Union, we thought it would be important that they have the facts. Many people are saying this will likely be the closest race in history.

► RESPONSE

Sarcastic headline didn't reflect letter

Editor,

I am deeply disappointed in the sarcastic headline placed above K-State Vice President Bob Kruh's letter to the editor published in the April 14 Collegian.

I believe Kruh presented some valid points in his letter, and I view the headline as totally inappropriate.

The Wefald administration appears to be working to bring about some positive changes in the computing environment on campus in spite of limited resources, and the Collegian's attempt to belittle those efforts does nothing to help that situation along.

TOLES

The price of pluralism

JOHN HART

The thought police have struck again.

A pro-life banner was recently censored between Lafene Health Center and Farrell Library. The content of the banner was deemed not worthy of maintaining a position in the free market of ideas. So, it was confiscated.

The banner showed three symbols: a slave-auction sign from 1769, a Nazi swastika, and a "Keep Abortion Legal" sign. The words "Three times in modern history the word 'person' has been redefined" ran under the three symbols.

No one knows who censored the banner, but I will take a wild guess and say it's an abortion rights activist.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said there were no rules or regulations outlined within the University Activities Board constitution that could prevent the sign from its continued display. Also, the First Amendment right to freedom of speech protects the right of the Students for the Right to Life to hang the banner. Nothing in the banner was false or designed to slander any individual.

The stealing of the banner was undeniably a flagrant act of censorship. The banner did not make people feel good — this is why it was stolen. One student, who likely shares the views of many, said she felt the banner was extreme and that she was glad it was stolen. Another student said she felt the banner was too dramatic. All I can say in response is, too bad.

The First Amendment was not written to make everyone feel comfortable and good about themselves. The attitude adopted by these two students, and I expect many more, is precisely the attitude liberals (including the honorable Dee Snider of Twisted Sister) attacked when Tipper

Gore tried to censor album lyrics.

Gore was exposed to ideas she felt were "extreme" and "too dramatic," and she acted to quiet them. The person, or persons, involved with stealing the banner are no different.

Viewing an idea to be extreme and repulsive, as many students perceived the pro-life banner, provides no justification for censorship.

I have occasionally found the opinions of columnists in the Collegian the past two years to be repulsive, disgusting, derogatory and otherwise personally offensive. So, because I felt many opinions have been extreme and inappropriate, does that give me the right to visit every hall on campus early in the morning and remove the Collegian from its racks? Actually, the columns I usually find the most interesting are those I disagree with.

The pro-life banner being stolen was the most blatant act of censorship this campus has seen in a long, long time. So, where are the "Censorship is un-American" T-shirts? Where are the alternative gurus, demonstrating the First Amendment right to freedom of speech in front of the Union, with foul language and extended middle fingers?

They aren't there because censorship is an issue dominated by political persuasion, not a benevolent concern for the free speech rights of all citizens. Liberals vehemently promote free speech and tolerance, as long as you express an opinion with which they agree.

If a banner depicting nude scenes, or anything but conservative values, were torn down, the campus would likely howl censorship and contact the American Civil Liberties Union.

If you want to advocate tolerance, open-mindedness and diversity, then you must be willing to tolerate diverse views you find extreme and offensive, with an open mind. If you want to support free speech for all citizens of this country, expect to occasionally feel uncomfortable and offended. Expect to pay the price of pluralism.

Big business means big challenges, ideas

RON LACKEY

Students entering the corporate world should be ready to take on challenges.

That was the message students got Monday from Wayne Franklin, a speaker sponsored by Minority Students in Action.

Franklin is the central Kansas external affairs manager for Southwestern Bell. He is also the pastor of the St. Paul Church of God In Christ in Topeka.

"Don't turn any assignment down. Never let your supervisors know you're afraid to learn," he said.

"If you don't take a promotion or assignment, you're cutting your own throat."

Franklin said because times are tough and jobs are hard to find, big business is looking for entrepreneurs.

"Corporations are looking for dynamic, aggressive people who can think of an idea, put it on paper and sell it," he said.

Following his speech, Franklin presented a video called "Making the right moves: Blacks in corporate America."

"It's a video depicting life in corporate America. It's geared toward minorities and women, but it's applicable to all people," Franklin said.

"There are certain rules of the corporate world and a culture that one has to learn about. It shows good advice and insight on sharpening one's game for entering the corporate workplace."

Slade questions U.S. interventions

ALICIA HALE
Collegian

Peace activist Stephen Slade spoke to K-State students and Manhattan residents about U.S. military spending and the history of military intervention at the First Congregational Church on Monday.

Slade is a member of the organization "Out Now" in Santa Cruz, Calif., which was one of the leading groups in the country to oppose the Persian Gulf War.

Slade discussed U.S. involvement in Somalia. He said it was not humanitarian intervention and challenged the audience to oppose government intervention.

"Every time the U.S. government tells us that they are sending troops somewhere, we must be suspicious," he said.

Slade voiced his own suspicions concerning the sending of 30,000 U.S. troops to Somalia two days after 3,000 U.N. troops had been sent and been considered sufficient by the U.N. commissioner in Somalia.

"I would submit that what changed was that U.N. troops could not accomplish the hidden goals of the Somalia operation the way that U.S. troops could," he said.

Slade said he believes there were three significant hidden motives and goals involved in Somalia.

The first is the control of raw resources, such as oil. Slade said U.S. citizens are led to believe the United States had no strategic goals in Somalia and that there was no U.S. interest there, he said. A number of officials denied there is oil in Somalia and that was the main reason for U.S. involvement there.

"It was what I call a public secret," he said. "It's a public fact. It's out there. It's in the press. It's acknowledged, but because it isn't repeated, and because it doesn't get an echo, it sinks beneath the surface of our knowledge."

The second hidden motive of the move into Somalia was that it created a whole new concept of intervention called humanitarian intervention, Slade said.

He urged people to understand that humanitarian intervention is really just a new sales pitch, rather than a way of intervening in political issues because of true human interest.

"It created a new category of intervention to sell us on military spending. The most important idea is to recognize that if we want to intervene for humanitarian reasons, there are probably 50 or 60 places we could send troops right now, and that that concept is going to be very selectively used in places that have things like oil," he said.

He used examples of countries such as Angola, which has severe problems such as starvation.

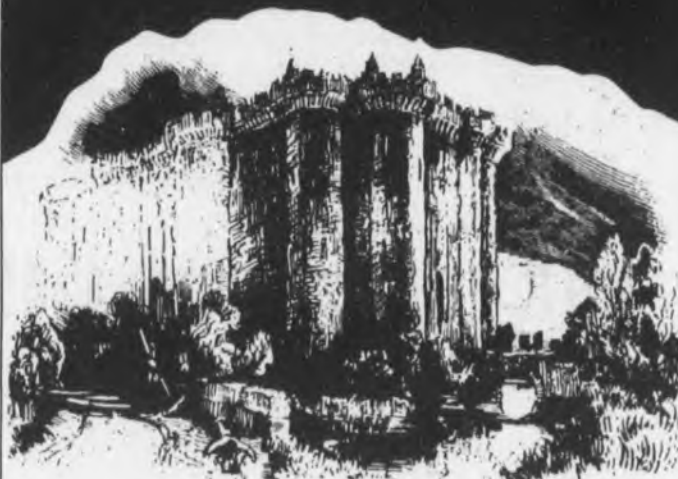

"In short, we are being conned in the same way that we have always been conned," Slade said.

Finally, Slade said the third goal of the move into Somalia answers the question of why we really need this new sales pitch.

"The answer there is very simple," he said. "They are trying to sell us into spending a trillion dollars every four years on the military."

Anna Boden grimaces as she rows from her two-seat position on the four-woman varsity boat Saturday afternoon in Lawrence. The only first-place finish for K-State was the four-man junior varsity team.

BASEBALL

K-State home stand begins with Missouri

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State baseball team starts a two-game home stand tonight at 7 p.m. against Missouri at Frank Myers Field, and if history repeats itself, these two games could be close.

The Tigers (19-13, 6-7 in the Big Eight) have won seven of its last 10 games against the Wildcats, including two wins last month in Columbia, Mo.

However, eight of 13 games have been decided by two runs or less or have gone into extra innings.

"We always have had a competitive series against them," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "We have to be ready to go and have to be prepared when we take the field."

K-State (13-19, 4-6 in the conference) has won five of its past seven games.

"We have some confidence heading into the series," outfielder Tim Decker said. "We expect to hit better offensively against them. Defensively, we can't get much better than the last time, because we had only one error in the three games in Missouri."

"I know we can compete against them."

Clark said his team has been doing well in the past couple of games.

"We've played pretty good ball since then (at Missouri)," he said. "We've hit the ball better and become a better offensive team."

Rob Merriman (3-3) heads to the mound for K-State and will face left-hander Jason Meyhoff (4-1) tonight.

Merriman got the Wildcats their only win in Missouri when he gave up three runs on six hits in a 7-3 victory. Merriman finished his second complete game strong, retiring seven of the last eight Missouri batters.

"He has pitched well lately," Clark said. "He's probably our most consistent pitcher. He throws a lot of strikes and gets the hitters to hit ground balls."

Not only will K-State face a left-hander in Meyhoff, it bats against another left-hander in Greg Lindstrom (4-1) on Wednesday.

MEN'S SOCCER

Wildcats take tourney title

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

K-State's men's soccer team was the first from a Kansas school to win the Laszlo Stumpfhauser Soccer Tournament last weekend at Wichita State.

Big Eight teams Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa State also played in the field of 20 teams.

Goalie Jim Dailey said many of the teams did not bear their school name, either because alumni played on the team or because it is their off-season.

K-State had a 2-1 record on Saturday. The team defeated the Swinhundt (Cloud County Community College) in its first game, 3-1. In the second game, K-State shut out Crystal Palace (Kansas Newman), 1-0. In the third round, K-State lost to Lindsborg (Bethany) 2-1.

President Brent Carpani said the team was not confident in the first day of play. The lack of confidence can be attributed to limited practice, he said.

"I don't think we played well the first day," he said. "But, luckily, we got a wild card to advance. Everyone pulled it together and played well for as few practices we've had."

The K-State team posted a 3-0 record on Sunday. In its first game, K-State shut out Nebraska, 1-0, and then went on to defeat Texas A&M, 3-1. The team shut out Busch Liqueurs (Benedictine), 3-0.

Dailey said winning the tournament was a big accomplishment.

"That's one tournament we've always ended up at second or third, and we've always wanted it," Dailey said. "And we finally got it."

The team has a 12-2 record heading into the Big Eight championship April 24-25 in Kansas City.

Defense halfback Frank Weeks said winning the tournament gave the team added confidence.

"It gives us a lot of confidence because in the past, we've never made it into the second round of the quarterfinals," he said. "And last year, we didn't even make it into the quarterfinals."

"Beating Nebraska — then KU losing to schools we beat — gives us a lot of confidence."

SPORTS DIGEST

WILDCAT TRACK TEAM SIGNS KANSAS STANDOUTS

Interim track coach Cliff Rovelto announced Monday the addition of two Kansas high-school standouts to the K-State women's track and field team.

Karissa Owens of Topeka's Shawnee Heights will join the spring squad, while hurdler and high jumper Angela Showalter will be considered as a multi-event athlete.

Owens is the 1992 Kansas class 6A champion in the 100-, 200- and 400-meter dashes, and her personal best of 11.8 in the 100 ranks fifth on the all-time state list.

Showalter is the 1991 and 1992 Kansas class 5A 100-meter hurdle champion, as well as the McPherson High School high-jump record holder of 5 feet, 8 inches.

Progress.

Three years ago, the Wildcat lacrosse team played in the Missouri Shootout for the first time. K-State took third in the eight-team tournament.

Last season, the Wildcats were the second-place team.

K-State completed the cycle last weekend, winning all four of its games by an average of 6.5 goals and taking first place in the latest Missouri Shootout.

"We're getting better every year," Wildcat coach Curt Thurman said. "Now we just have to stay there."

K-State is just one win away from its first undefeated season in the Great Plains Lacrosse League, and only next weekend's game against Kansas stands in the way.

"This is the best K-State squad I've ever seen," said Tondo Waldron, who led the team with 12 goals in the weekend tournament. "When the time comes to play in the Final Four, I don't think anyone is going to touch us.

"And I'm sure we're going to beat the hell out of Kansas. I've never beaten KU as long as I've been here, and we're hungry."

"Even if the score is 20-1, I don't think we're going to stop," he said. "You're going to look for records in that game."

K-State outscored its opponents by a combined total of 38-12 during the shootout, and only Wichita State was within a five-goal margin.

The Shockers fell to the Wildcats, 5-4, in the first game of the tournament Saturday afternoon. Also on Saturday, K-State beat Arkansas, 12-5.

K-State continued its winning ways Sunday with a 15-2 thumping of Missouri.

"Against Mizzou, I really didn't do anything," goalkeeper Jeff Boos said. "I'm playing goal, and I don't do anything but just stand there."

But that win, boring as it was for Boos, may have been just what K-State needed to beat long-time rival Kansas City in the tournament final.

"When we beat a team that easily, we know we can win again," Thurman said. "It puts us in the mindset that no one can stop us."

The Wildcats won, 6-1.

"And the only reason they scored is because I got juiced on one play," Thurman said, laughing.

Waldron's 12 goals led all scorers for the tournament. Chris Irrig chipped in 10, and Brandon Aslin had seven.

"The defense did so well that the ball was never on the opponent's side of the field," Waldron said. "Our defensive dominated so much that it was an offensive game."

K-State closes out the regular season with a 1:30 p.m. Sunday game against KU at Memorial Stadium.

The Jayhawks were beaten earlier in the season by the same Missouri team the Wildcats thumped during the Missouri Shootout.

"We're going to kill KU," Thurman said, echoing Waldron's confidence. "There's no way that we're not going to beat them."

The Wildcats are currently in sole possession of first place in the Great Plains Lacrosse League with a 6-0 record.

"When you're on top," Thurman said, "everybody wants you."

Huskers nip women's soccer team

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The Nebraska Cornhuskers gave the K-State women's soccer team a big payday Sunday in the Big Eight championship tournament semifinals at Manhattan's Frank Anneberg Park.

The Huskers knocked off the Wildcats in a double-overtime shootout, 3-2, reversing their shootout loss to K-State in the championship of the Missouri Invitational Tournament last October.

"They played a lot harder against us than they have in the past," Cat forward Bridget Cowan said. "They didn't want to lose to us again."

K-State and Nebraska played two scoreless five-minute overtime periods before going to a penalty kick shootout.

In the shootout — in which each team got five attempts on goal — the Wildcats fell 3-2.

"It was just bad luck," K-State goalkeeper Heather Hamilton said. "In a shootout, a lot of it's decided by luck, and it was just a question of who was on and who was off."

Nebraska scored first in the game with a shot straight to the corner of the K-State goal early in the first half.

The Cats responded with a goal from Leslie Barthlow and then took a 2-1 lead into halftime when midfielder Jen Deluca fed Cowan for another score.

"We have a real fast forward line," Cowan said, "and we were able to outrun their defenders when we got the ball behind them."

But Nebraska tied the score at 2-2 with about 11 minutes left in regulation, setting up the double-overtime shootout.

"It was the type of loss that you know each team is equally as good," Cowan said.

"It almost would have been easier to accept if we had gotten blown out."

After beating K-State, the Huskers went on to dominate the Colorado Buffaloes in the championship game, 3-1.

K-State got into the semifinals by finishing with a 2-1 record in round-robin play on Saturday, knocking off Kansas and Oklahoma.

The Wildcats beat the Jayhawks 1-0 in the first game of the tournament on a score by forward Jennifer Dean.

The Cats then guaranteed a trip to the next round by shutting out the Sooners — the defending Big Eight champions — 1-0.

K-State got the only score in the game in the second half when Deluca and forward Jenny Smith both slid into a loose ball in front of the Sooners goal.

VINCENT P. LAVERGNE/Collegian

Jen Smith, K-State women's soccer player, is chased by a Colorado player Saturday afternoon at Frank Anneberg Park in the Big Eight tournament.

Colorado beat K-State 2-1 to complete the round-robin series.

Even with the loss to Nebraska in the semifinals, the Wildcats said their season was a big success.

"It was a good season," Hamilton said. "We played with a lot of heart. We really did. We wanted the game — we gave it our all. It just sucked that the game had to be decided by a shootout."

"We've worked so hard, and I just wish it could have been decided some other way."

EARTH DAY '93

Day brings voices of rainforest

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Almost 120 people filled the Union Big 8 Room Monday night for Kirk Day's slide presentation "Voices of the Rainforest."

The nearly two-hour lecture and slide show was K-State's first Earth Week event.

Day has traveled extensively in rainforests throughout the world. He titled the presentation "Voices from the Rainforest," he said, because he has talked to native people in the rainforests and wanted to bring their message back to the people in the United States.

"The most common response I get from the indigenous people is, 'Leave us alone and clean up your own backyard,'" he said.

Day began his presentation by focusing on products derived from rainforest species.

"The most popular forms of birth control, until recently, came from the tropical rainforests. I just want to show how intimately we are all linked to the rainforests," Day said.

Another important product is a nut from rainforests used to extract the highest grade of machine oil in the world. It is used in computers for lubrication and in the construction of space shuttles.

"It is important economically and strategically for our national defense," Day said.

Audience members said they were surprised by the number of products that come from rainforests.

"It is kind of sobering — the diversity of products and the everyday connections we have with the rainforests," Jeremy Crofts, sophomore in landscape architecture, said.

After discussing products, Day switched his focus to what can be done to preserve the disappearing rainforests.

"One thing has to be done before anything else. We have to do something about the poor people who live in the big cities in the countries with the tropical rainforests. They have no jobs, no land and no farms," Day said.

Tae Kwon Do grows with members' trust

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

What started as a social gathering became command-driven and full of technique.

The K-State/Manhattan Songahm Tae Kwon Do club gathered Monday night for its weekly practice, and seven participants were recognized for placing at last weekend's regional tournament in Lincoln, Neb.

Mark Brown, black belt; Lowell Coon, black belt; Shannon Keller, brown/red belt; Alex Lane, brown/red belt; David Wood, black belt recommended; Lucy Copelin, yellow belt; and Heidi Niehues, camouflage division, received trophies for placing in the top three of their respective divisions.

Brown, Copelin and Niehues earned two trophies, and both Brown and Coon beat the top point-holder in the nation to obtain their trophies.

Clapping filled the area as members arranged themselves in a line formation. Black belts lined up in front of head instructor Diana Tarver, and white belts were in the back. Tarver began giving commands, and members responded, "Yes, ma'am."

The K-State/Manhattan club was started 1-1/2 years ago with three to four students. Tarver said 20 to 30 members now come to each class.

The reasons for becoming involved with Tae Kwon Do are varied.

David Wood, sophomore in agronomy, got involved with the program in high school during a six-week self-defense clinic in the summer.

"I learned a lot of fighting skills and self-discipline," Wood said. "It's sort of addicting in a way — kind of a rush."

Kai Kaneshiro, junior in art, got involved with the Tae Kwon Do class after taking a class with Tarver during his freshman year.

"I've been wanting to learn a martial art for a long time," Kaneshiro said. "Probably the best thing I've learned is discipline. I'm currently a brown belt. This is the farthest I've ever gone with any organized sport."

"We have trouble getting women to join," Kaneshiro said. "Through Tarver's self-defense clinics, we occasionally get new students."

Tarver said most individuals are recruited by word of mouth.

"They get each other involved," Tarver said. "They learn to trust each other that way and encourage one another. It's an important part of the learning experience."

Throughout the class, techniques and discipline were stressed. "Yes," continued to echo throughout the room as kicks and punches filled the air.

AX SENIORS- four years it has been full of laughter and sin and now is the time that "real" life begins. You will go separate ways, but will remember these crazy college days. So goodbye, farewell, give the world hell and just remember you're always welcome back, just ring the bell. Tons of love, the Alpha Chi's.

AX SUSANNE. Congrats on making it through KSU. We know you'll go far. Good luck!

DELTA CHI: Mark, Joey, Paul, and Shad. The floor rocked the night. We met, danced, and partying 'til we were wet. Give us a call because the fun's not over yet. The Girls.

TO THE English GTA who looked at my duplex Sat. We talked, but didn't exchange names. Wish we had.

been serious all along.

"I feel that the tone and seriousness of the entire campaign is important, and that the perceptions that the public has is a real issue in this campaign," Wingert said.

Skoog asked for Wingert to clarify his statement.

"When you speak of tone, do you mean tone as in timbre and vocal quality, or do you mean concentrating on the issues? And do you mean concentrating on the issues that really affect students or the issues that will make you look good?" Skoog said.

Wingert answered that he felt the seriousness issue was important.

"I just feel that the tone that has been established is important. And I feel that many people are following this election. There are people on the community level and on the state level that are following this, and the tone that is set will be important," Wingert said.

"Well, then, I agree that we are both doing a good job then, next question," Skoog said.

The most heated moment came toward the end of the debate when Wingert was asked about his previous experiences in student government and how these experiences have affected his campaign.

"I want the students to know that I care about students, and that I have taken this campaign seriously. I have never heard students talk about this matter, and the students I have talked to are concerned with other matters," Wingert said.

Skoog immediately asked a follow-up question related to Wingert's previous experiences.

"I would like to ask you then why, in former administrations, you resigned as chief-of-staff, and why you were fired as alumni affairs director," Skoog said.

"There were personal reasons involved. If I really thought students were concerned with this, I would answer that question, and if I really thought students were concerned, I would ask why you voted on the Student Publications increase, and you did not abstain when the increase effects you, but I'm not going to get into that because I don't think students are really concerned about this," Wingert said.

Throughout the debate, Wingert repeatedly attempted to establish the fact that his campaign had been serious.

"From day one, Jeff and I have taken this campaign seriously and have outlined our proposals in detail," Wingert said.

In the final moments of the debate Skoog had a chance to reply to the charges that his campaign has not been as serious.

"I feel like I have to apologize for making a few jokes. I'm not going to apologize. They were funny, and you all laughed. But with the jokes came some serious proposals.

"It is important for a student body president to have both substance and style."

Voters have at least three more chances to hear both candidates speak.

Debates are scheduled to take place in the Union Big 8 room today at noon.

Also, both Wingert and Skoog are scheduled to attend a debate at 7:30 p.m. at the Jardine Terrace Community center before attending a 9:00 p.m. debate at Goodnow Hall.

handmade weapons made from nails and rubber bands.

Some cellblock entrances were believed to be booby-trapped, possibly with makeshift arrows, the newspaper said. Inmates also were thought to have tapped the prison's gasoline supply and could have made fire bombs.

About 1,000 mourners paid their last respects for the slain guard, Robert Vallandingham, 40, during a memorial service at a high school in his hometown of Minford, about 10 miles east of Lucasville.

Boyhood friend Tim Santo described Vallandingham as a selfless law officer.

"He was a tough kid," Santo said. "If he had a choice to protect somebody else, he would be the one to do it."

A coroner's report indicated Vallandingham was strangled, with no signs of torture or mutilation, prison spokesman Michael Lee said Monday.

Despite a 1-7 record versus southpaws, Clark said there won't be mass substitutions.

"There won't be too many changes in the line-up," he said. "The kids have responded well lately to left-handed pitching."

K-State scored on Lindstrom early in its first meeting as he pitched just two innings — giving up three runs — in his only loss. Lindstrom will battle against Dan Driskill (3-5) Wednesday afternoon at 2 p.m.

The top offensive player for the Wildcats last month against Missouri pitching was shortstop Todd Petering.

The transfer from Oklahoma Christian University had five stolen bases and five hits — including two doubles — in 12 at bats, for a batting average of .417.

"Todd has done a good job for us lately," Clark said.

"Jay Kopriva, Chris Hess and Chris Wolf have stepped up as well. We hope they continue playing well."

Candidates given opportunity to present ideas one more time

WADE SISSON

The race for student body president and vice president intensified Tuesday during a candidate debate on election eve.

Student body presidential candidates Ed Skoog and Fred Wingert, along with their respective running mates, Eric Henry and Jeff Peterson, answered questions from the audience and from each other in the Big 8 room.

The candidates, having rehashed their positions continuously, appeared eager to hear student comments and questions.

Wingert said he and Peterson would like faculty members to turn in textbook requests by the deadline. He said 20 to 30 percent of the books that could be bought back aren't.

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Students sit and listen as presidential candidates answer questions during a debate sponsored by the Union Program Council Tuesday afternoon in the Big 8 Room.

Wingert and Peterson said meetings with faculty members helped them create their book buy-back proposal.

"I've talked to faculty. Jeff's talked to faculty. And they're willing to help," Wingert said. "They want to get some of the students' money back."

Skoog criticized the proposal, saying it doesn't address the price of books or architecture and engineering supplies.

He also said the buy-back plan would only be effective if 100 percent of the faculty members turn in their requests on time.

"I have some skepticism that we'll ever be able to get everyone to turn them in on time," Skoog said. "I understand that the small amount of money we get back needs to be addressed, but my opponent's plans has too many holes to put money back into our pockets."

The Skoog/Henry campaign proposes either giving free athletic tickets to students or lowering the athletic fee.

During the debate, Skoog said he would not sign new legislation on this matter until one of these conditions was met.

"Full stands are the best support you can give a team," Skoog said.

Throughout the campaign, Skoog and Henry have said that a productconsumer relationship should exist with the athletic fee.

"Currently, students pay $10 a semester and get zilch for it," Henry said.

The candidates were also asked how they would ensure funding for organizations without ticket-sales revenue, such as K-State Marching Band and the baseball team, if the athletic fee was dropped.

Skoog said the band is being used by the athletic department in justifying the athletic fee.

"It will always be red-headed

Former presidential candidate endorses after Skoog adopts agenda

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

After a presidential debate between contenders Ed Skoog and Fred Wingert, a former candidate decided to make an endorsement.

Charles Walters said he would be endorsing Skoog in the race for student body president.

He made the decision to endorse Skoog based upon the fact Skoog has adopted Walters' student-reform agenda, Walters said.

"This was a very difficult decision for me to make, and I am making this as an individual. I personally have decided to vote for the candidate who has adopted our student-reform agenda and that candidate is Mr. Ed Skoog," Walters said.

The student-reform agenda is a plan Walters and his advisers came up with to advance multicultural issues on campus.

The run-off election between the Fred Wingert/Jeff Peterson and the Ed Skoog/Eric Henry tickets will be today. Polls will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. in the K-State Union and from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Speakers connect racism, environment

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Racism and the environment. While some people might not think those two topics are related, 36 people learned why they are Tuesday night.

Environmental racism was the topic of the second Earth Week lecture conducted by Amy Belanger and Eric Odell from the Greens/Green Party U.S.A.

Belanger started the discussion by asking the group to think about how things like the Rodney King trial and Anita Hill hearing relate to environmentalism.

Odell then explained what environmental racism is. He used the example of a Minnesota community where an incinerator was originally planned to be put in a white neighborhood, but the neighborhood had the money to get lawyers and protest. The incinerator was moved to a black community that did not have the money to protest.

"It didn't get stopped, it was just got moved somewhere else. That is not a success, it is a failure," Odell said.

He gave another example of the Louisiana community known as "Cancer Valley." A factory in the community is dumping toxic waste in the water, but if the residents complain the factory might leave the community, and there would be a mass of unemployed people left behind.

Odell said there has been a large increase in environmental racism activism, especially in the deep South.

"The problem stems from a system where the people in power don't understand the struggles of the people they are governing," Odell said.

He said there are power relationships in our society that are behind these problems.

"We need to change the power imbalance by addressing and correcting the imbalance," he said.

Belanger and Odell said there is more to environmentalism than just reducing the waste. It is related to many other issues, like the Rodney King trial and Anita Hill hearing.

To demonstrate how environmentalism, racism, classism and sexism are all related, Belanger and Odell had the group brainstorm what they thought the causes of each problem were.

After 10 minutes, the group had a chalkboard full of causes. Things like power, greed and tradition were repeated under each issue.

Old explosives may be buried on public land

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Aging explosives, including hand grenades, artillery shells and chemical ordnance, may be buried at more than 250 former military sites now in civilian hands across the country, according to an Associated Press review.

In addition, one-fourth of an estimated 190 sites where old chemical warfare agents may be buried are in civilian areas accessible to the public, though many are isolated and none are deemed an imminent threat, the Pentagon wrote in a report to Congress on Tuesday.

From an inventory of nearly 7,600 former defense sites, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is trying to determine how many still have buried explosives, toxic wastes and chemical agents — some dating back 75 years or more.

Defense officials estimate the search may take 15 years and cost $4 billion.

"People got rid of property, and it was out of sight and out of mind," said Thomas Wash, director of the corps' office that is conducting the defense cleanup effort.

"We've got a hell of a lot more on our plate than we've got money to do."

The effort is further complicated by incomplete record-keeping on former defense sites, he said.

According to scores of documents and computer lists examined by the AP, the corps has at least 268 projects at 259 sites where officials believe explosives may be buried. Another roughly 1,200 sites may contain buried toxic chemicals, and 3,000 other former defense locations have yet to be scrutinized at all.

The cleanup projects cover every state.

Even President Clinton's hometown of Hope, Ark., is on the government's cleanup list. Officials suspect leftover explosives in a state wildlife refuge four miles from town.

The possible underground hazards range from hand grenades and artillery rounds to a wide range of toxic residues — everything from corroding oil drums to suspected mustard gas at a site near Edison, N.J.

Pentagon officials played down the hazards Tuesday, saying all sites suspected of having buried chemical warfare materials have been physically assessed and pose no immediate threat to public health or safety.

While many of the dump sites date back decades, there has been only one reported incident in which there was a fatality. In 1983, two 8-year-old boys were killed when a live military round exploded amid hundreds of homes in the Tierrasanta subdivision in San Diego. Unknown to many of the homeowners, the land once had been the impact area for a tank range.

But even very old buried munitions can be deadly if unearthed.

In January, a backhoe operator turned up an artillery round while digging near $1-million homes in northwest Washington D.C. Explosives experts found 141 live rounds, including 31 containing chemical agents.

Program aims to help smokers say no more

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

The Human Resource Services department at K-State will be conducting a free health-quest program to all faculty and staff today.

The program is called the "No-Nag, No-Guilt, Do-It-Your-Own-Way Guide to Quit Smoking." The program will be from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Thursday in Union 212.

"It is not necessarily designed for people who want to quit right now — they may be thinking about quitting in the future. It's designed to show them what to expect if they should decide to quit or taper down the amount of cigarettes they consume," said Joe Younger, coordinator of the K-State Employee Assistance Program.

The program consists of talks and activities coordinated by Cheryl Miller, from the Division of Personnel Services in Topeka, and Wayne Baillie, professor of pathology and microbiology.

"We will provide them with information as to how previous individuals have quit smoking and how they were able to maintain following their ability to be able to quit," Baillie said.

Each of the participants will be given a paperback book to use for future reference so they can see what will happen to them psychologically and physically when they decide to quit smoking.

Younger, who has facilitated the program in the past, said it's a non-threatening type of workshop.

"It's not to go in there and tell everyone how bad they are because they smoke — it's more of a positive reinforcement for their own self-esteem," he said.

"The ones we've had in the past, which were the true cold-turkey quit smoking kind of clinics, have been successful. About 70 percent of those who participated have quit," Younger said.

This program is more of a wellness awareness one, he said.

Younger said the goal is to change a person's lifestyle regardless if the person quits now or just slows down.

"We'll even give them a smoke break, but they'll have to go outside the Union to do it," he said.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. I've heard the financial aid office can assist if I have unusual circumstances. What does that mean?

A. The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) collects general information about the student/applicant. The Federal government has given financial aid administrators the right to assist families or single applicants with circumstances not considered normal or that cannot be entered on the Federal form.

Q. What type of circumstances are considered unusual?

A. The following circumstances could allow the financial aid office to make adjustments:

- If you have high medical or dental expenses that are not covered by insurance.
- If your family pays private tuition for elementary or secondary students.
- If one of the parents or the student will have reduced income or loss of income for 1993.
- If you or your parents are classified as a "dislocated" worker.
- If one or both of your parents have died.
- If your parents are divorced since you completed your Federal form.

In addition to the above, the student may have other reasons a financial aid office can make adjustments. Students or parents should write a letter explaining their unique situations for the 1993-94 award year, and send it to 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. I've heard the Federal government considers students "dependent" for financial aid purposes until they reach 24 years of age. Is this true?

A. Yes, under the Federal definition, an independent student is one who is:

- Born before January 1, 1970.
- A veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces.
- A graduate or professional student.
- Married when filling out the Federal form.
- A ward of the court or both parents are deceased.
- Supporting a legal dependent(s) other than a spouse.
- A student for whom a financial aid administrator determines and documents the student's independent status on the basis of extenuating circumstances such as physical or emotional harm. Special circumstances that exist for an individual student rather than circumstances that exist across a class of students may also allow for an adjustment.

Q. If I am classified as dependent, whose information do I report on the Federal form?

A. If you are dependent for financial aid purposes, you must use your parents 1992 tax information. This would include a step-parent's information if part of the household. Of course, the student's 1992 information is also collected on the Federal form.

Q. It seems like the FAFSA asks for a lot of information. Is it all necessary?

A. The FAFSA collects only information critical to consider you for Federal aid programs. In most cases, the free form is the only form necessary to apply for aid from colleges, state agencies, and the Federal government. However, some colleges, private scholarship agencies, and state agencies may request further information for their non-Federal aid programs. Always check with your financial aid office to make sure. They are there to assist you.

Flint Hills FIRE

Prairie requires frequent burning to help it remain a natural grassland

MARK JONES
Collegian

The annual burning of the Flint Hills Prairie is a simple and effective range-management tool.

"Annual burning has been used to manage the tall bluestem grass of the Flint Hills since the cattle drives from Texas began after the Civil War," Gene Towne, Konza Prairie field coordinator, said.

Before the Flint Hills were settled, the prairie was managed naturally by grazing, drought and natural wild fires, said Paul Ohlenbusch, range and pasture management Cooperative Extension specialist.

When a fire started in those days, there was not much to stop it, unlike today, he said.

"All we're doing with fire is trying to put a natural factor back into management," he said.

The Flint Hills need to be burned to remain a grassland. Without burning, weeds and woody species invade and begin to take over, he said.

Burning is effective because it takes advantage of some natural characteristics of the undesired species.

As perennial plants go through their summer growth, they store excess energy underground as carbohydrates.

During the winter, they use the energy from their reserve to survive and fuel their growth until they are capable of producing energy. This energy reserve is the lowest when they start their new spring growth, he said.

Location of the plant species growth point is another factor. Grass grows from beneath the ground. So the fire does not harm its growing point. Woody species and broadleaves have their growing points above ground and are harmed by the fire, he said.

To control perennial broadleaf and woody species, people should burn when their stored energy supply is lowest. The plant will be unable to produce as much energy as it needs when it regrows and will have to draw upon its energy reserves.

"If you hurt the growing point, you hurt the plant. If you hurt the growing point, you change the plant's growth," he said.

The results are not always immediate. Sometimes it takes several years of consecutive burning for the plant's energy reserve to become depleted, and it finally starves to death, he said.

Different plant species reach their lowest reserve levels at different times in the spring, Towne said.

Diversity of plant species can be changed by the time of year when the prairie is burned, because different species are favored at different times, he said.

"It depends on your objectives on how you manipulate the fire," Towne said.

There were only trees around rivers and streams 150 years ago. If left unmanaged, the grassland will turn to forest in 75 to 100 years, Towne said.

Cedars will appear first, then hardwoods, he said.

"The main reason we burn is to get a good vegetation cattle will eat and do good on. Areas that are not burned are no longer grass prairie and become forests," he said.

CITY Recycling business involves educating

Earth Day 1993

KRISTEEN YOUNG
Collegian

While some people may take up recycling as a passing fancy, Howard Wilson has been recycling since 1984.

Wilson, a K-State graduate in food science, opened his own recycling business, Howie's Recycling, in Manhattan nine years ago because he saw a need for it in the community.

Wilson said he will take "almost anything."

One hundred to 125 people drop products off each day, but he makes most of his money on aluminum cans.

He pays for aluminum — 20 cents per pound, and 25 cents per pound if there are more than 100 pounds.

"Aluminum has gone down 5 cents in the last year," Wilson said. "Part of the reason I see is due to the economy. The car business is down, and that's what they use a lot of it for."

Wilson buys aluminum cans from all over the state because many towns don't have the equipment he does.

He has a machine that packs 750 cans into a square block that is then transported to a recycling factory, where they are made into other products.

More than 1.5 million aluminum cans are shipped each week from Howie's Recycling.

He also pays for copper, brass, radiators and batteries. But he will take newspapers, computer paper and plastic as a service to the community.

Wilson said recycling is important, but there is more to it than simply dropping off anything you think may be recycled.

"Part of the process is educating people on how to bring it in to us," Wilson said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Those who followed, died

THE ISSUE

After the Waco tragedy, everyone is looking for a scapegoat.

WE SUGGEST

The focus of this incident should be prevention — preventing people from being led astray by others.

Everyone will have the image of the burning Branch Davidian compound imprinted in their memories for a good time to come.

The focus has been partly on the loss of the children and adults, both in the fire and in the gun battle that started this standoff, and partly on whose fault it is that they died.

One thing not to do is spend so much time pointing fingers, but look at the loss of life, overall.

Call the compound victims what you will — cult members, sect members, religious fanatics, whatever. The fact remains that the inhabitants of the Branch Davidian compound were people who became enraptured by one man who spoke honeyed words.

In Manhattan, in Kansas, in our nation and around the world there are people living life confused — people who are prime followers for charismatic men and women with ultimate plans of "salvation."

Did the FBI act wrongly? Did David Koresh light the match? Who knows? These questions are important but secondary to the real query that lies ahead.

The casualties in Waco, Texas would have been significantly less if there hadn't been so many people who actually believed Koresh's claim that he was Jesus Christ.

How can we teach our children to be confident and independent enough to think for themselves rather than have a leader think for them?

That's the real question.

Ignoring the wobbly wheel

KELLY KLAWONN

Power is a strange thing. Everybody has some. Some people want more. Some people don't want any.

Looking back, there seems to be one quintessential moment when power first materialized itself. And at the grocery market, of all places.

It began innocently enough. Like some strange marsupial, we were situated in the "pouch" of the shopping cart. Facing backwards, with mom usually close at hand, we babbled away. Every once in a while, we would pluck an item or two from the shelf. Considering our decision-making skills were anything but revered, many a selection would return to the shelf. Powerless consumers we were.

Oh, but there was some power. Not getting our way, there was always the temper tantrum. Screaming wildly, waving our hands frantically in the air, trying to draw as much attention to our parents as possible. Running our bottles against the iron bars of the shopping cart like a convict with a tin cup. Soon we discovered what little power we did have. Charming little things we were.

Parents have a hard time cutting those apron strings, but thankfully we grew too big for the cart seat. Not that we were totally liberated from the cart, but now we rode on the back of the cart. With our feet firmly secured and one hand bracing us around every corner. We were equipped with added mobility and accessibility. And power.

Beefaroni — gotcha. Chips — she shoots; she scores. Twinkies — slip em in when nobody's looking. Toss that lettuce out of this here cart.

This was a time of wild abandon with the new-found power and reach. With the added mobility, we could basically wear them down. Piling in so much crap, they finally had to give up. Toss those hands in the air.

“Running our bottles against the iron bars of the shopping cart like a convict with a tin cup.”

It wasn't until we were free from the stranglehold of the actual cart that the fun really began. Pushing the cart for the first time. Being the navigator. Weaving in and out of the stalled carts in the dairy aisle.

"Just get the baby Swiss and get your clunker out of my way."

"Where did you learn how to push a cart, on the short bus? Honk! Honk!" I would taunt, to the old grey-hairs.

Jockeying for a position in the deli was another trauma. Mom was always hesitant to hand the reins over. When things got busy, she would reach back with one hand and steer the cart, brachiating her way through traffic with the other. Tough woman, that Betty.

Soon we had all the power we wanted. Ripping the shopping list in half, we would go off alone, get the needed items, meet at the checkout stand and be on our way.

Not long after the virgin voyage through the grocery market, one thing became apparent — power is limited.

What used to be a thrill now was a chore.

"Pick up some milk on your way home from school."

"Run down and get this, this and that. Will ya?"

What happened to the wind wisp through my hair as we rounded the rice and pasta aisle? The pitter-patter of my heart when I snagged some Ho-Ho's has all but left.

Today, I don't even use one of those carts, in my meager attempt to try and avoid public humility. There I would be pushing this big old clunker of a cart, with a lonely loaf of bread, a jar of peanut butter rolling aimlessly about the cart, and one little pack of cigarettes destined to get smushed by the kamikaze peanut butter.

Now I tote one of those pitiful little baskets, rarely filling it up. Somehow I lost my adolescent power. I think I need a better job.

Coverage of KSU crew needs to be consistent

Editor,

Just last week there were an article and photographs concerning the Kansas State crew and what it's all about. The article was much appreciated, but I hate to think it will be the last article of the semester letting people know what is going on with the team.

The results of our last two regattas, one during spring break in Texas and the most recent last weekend in Topeka, were relayed to the Collegian staff. Unfortunately, that is as far as the results made it.

At the Heart of Texas Regatta in Austin, our crews brought home several bronze and silver medals. This past weekend, our novice women's four got second out of 18 boats, our novice men's eight got fifth out of 11 boats, and the varsity men's lightweight four got fifth out of 10 boats.

These athletes on the K-State crew have been working hard since September, and I hate to see the Collegian ignore it when this hard work pays off. Hopefully, after our Midwest regionals in Madison, Wis., April 23 and 24, we will see some more of those positive results showing up on the Collegian sports page.

ELECTIONS

Answering errors with errors is still all wrong

Editor,

I am writing this in response to the letter submitted by Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson in the April 20 Collegian. Gentlemen, maybe it is because you are feeling pressured because of your impending election, or maybe you are just trying a last ditch effort to campaign. I don't know what the case may be, but I believe that you might be at fault if you feel that John Hawks misrepresented your stands in his column.

As a close friend of Hawks, I feel that you should know a few more things about him before you lambaste him in the Collegian. No offense, Skoog, but I have never met you personally. Come to think of it, neither have Hawks' two roommates. Don't you find that odd considering you are such a close friend to Hawks? I think I can assume that most people spend a fair amount of time with the friends they consider close.

I also want to address the issue of Hawks' misrepresentation of your stands on the issues. As Hawks said, when did you visit our residence hall? Several other candidates visited our hall to let the students find out about their stands on the issues. I, as well as Hawks, had to rely on the statements made in the Collegian and your mailed flyer to find out about your stands on those issues. I think it fair to say that if Hawks misrepresented your campaign, it is not solely his fault.

Candidates need to know rules, obey them

Editor,

I am immensely pleased with the way the quality of the Student Senate campaigns improves each year.

When I arrived at K-State three years ago, student government campaigns featured homemade signs flapping from the trees and quaint chalked signs on the sidewalk. By examining the signs, a student could determine how serious and dedicated the candidate was and could editorialize on the candidates while walking to class.

Now, the campaigns feature too many non-recyclable laser-printed colored paper signs and few chalkings. They also feature the organized harassment of hall residents in the form of election propaganda masquerading as personal messages on the message board and as actual legitimate campus mail.

My confidence in SGA is strengthened by the knowledge that senatorial and presidential candidates alike are lacking the skills and intelligence to read the K-State Association of Residence Halls' constitution (which contains the rules outlining the types of campaigning allowed) and realize it applies to their campaigns.

If they had read it, they would know that misusing campus mail, misusing hall message boards, and posting or chalking election material within 50 feet of a residence hall are all offenses that result in the disqualification of the offender and removal from the election. Even if they had not read it, common sense would tell them that such mailings or postings take up so much space that legitimate mail and messages cannot get through.

Further kudos to Student Senate Tribunal, which stuck to its lofty principles and failed to hold senatorial candidates accountable for their actions.

The bottom line is — if the candidates don't bother to check the rules before they are elected, then they won't bother to check them after they are elected, or before amending them.

OTHER VIEWS

Las Vegas Review-Journal on health-care reform (April 12):

Apparently, one of the side "benefits" of Hillary Clinton's plan for socialized medicine will be a national identity card, much like those used in Third World dictatorships and communist countries. ...

First of all, freedom-minded Americans should object strenuously to the requirement of a national identity card of any sort. Such a card would provide the combination to the lock that protects an individual's most intimate personal information and be used to monitor virtually every aspect of our lives.

Secondly, Americans should resist the notion of a high-tech card containing their entire medical histories, especially a card bearing a Social Security number. Americans are already losing their privacy thanks to government and private computerized data banks that keep tabs on their consumer habits, travel itineraries, telephone use and whatnot.

We should not facilitate this invasion of privacy by allowing any requirement that we carry (and surrender at times of crisis) our entire medical histories in our wallets. Nor should (Mrs. Clinton) be allowed to abuse our Social Security numbers as a convenient way of keeping tabs on the most intimate details of her subjects' lives.

TOLES

Why can't we all be friends?

Making friends is risky business. We have to open the protective shells we maintain against strangers. If we start by opening our own shell, we run the risk of being hurt. If we try to open the shell of someone else, we may be accused of intent to hurt or, at the least, of some invasion of privacy.

We can avoid the risk of being hurt by not opening up. Then we will not invite others to become friends, and we will remain alone and isolated. We can try to fake it by putting on an act, rather than showing who we are. Cassandra says it won't work: Most people are not that easy to fool, and they probably don't want to be fooled either.

If the goal of our behavior is to make friends, that is, to build relationships in which we can enjoy each other without feeling threatened, then we should behave in such a way that others do not feel threatened by what we say or do. Friends are more than just "teammates." A friend is someone we like for personal reasons, not merely because we happen to do or like some of the same things. This is another reason why putting on an act won't work. Even if some people like the act, that may not mean that they will like the actor. One obvious way to avoid making others uncomfortable is to be alert of the feelings of those around us. Then, if we sense discomfort, we can either back off or change our behavior. Another way is to lighten up by mixing in some humor.

Humor has always been a mechanism by which we can deal in a non-threatening, light-hearted way with many of life's deep-seated issues. By using humor we can make it clear that what is presented is a caricature, rather than a serious reality, and that it can be accepted (and discarded) as such. When we use humor to deal with serious issues, we thereby build in some protection and an escape mechanism: "This is a joke, and carries no intent to offend." Most humor has to be recognized by its reference to some shared knowledge that is deliberately left unsaid.

The strategy works only if we can have faith that what we say and do will be properly interpreted. It only works as long as we talk to people who recognize the joke because they share the cultural context we deliberately leave out. There is no reliable way to predict what jokes will be recognized, and by what people in what circumstances.

Granted, we can probably agree on some stuff that would be inappropriate in any circumstance and could not even be excused as a lame attempt at humor. But we can hope that if we pay proper respect to the audience, an occasional misfiring joke will be recognized and treated as no more than a mistake.

Subjective interpretation of what we say and do is limited to humor. It extends to most of our interactions with other people. Then, whenever we interact with others, we will always run the risk of being misinterpreted. Here again, we have to rely on faith that the occasional missteps will be recognized as such, and that we will not be casually accused of malice.

We can disarm misfiring humor by assuming that the speaker meant no harm but only failed to recognize the absence or misalignment of shared context. Even if a misfiring joke makes us feel uncomfortable, we should still try to recognize it as a mistake, rather than as a deliberate attempt to hurt. A clear explanation of our feelings may help the speaker, but an angry retort amounts to a deliberate attempt to hurt. So, if we snap at a misfiring joke, we do precisely what we don't want others to do to us.

Expecting (and showing) some tolerance for unintentional mistakes would be a good idea. But we then could also abuse the expected tolerance for mistakes by making deliberate mistakes in the hope that we will be able to get away from them. That would be a bad idea: People would soon find out who is abusing their tolerance. On the other hand, showing no tolerance is also a bad idea — it would scare people off.

It is intriguing that the current social perception strongly advocates tolerance and recognition of "diversity," while at the same time insisting on setting and enforcing explicit rules that define what will be inappropriate. As long as rules reflect agreement between the parties involved, they can be quite useful. But enforcement can only be achieved by means of some form of threat, and threat is precisely what we want to reduce.

In the days of Columbus, the unknown was generally perceived as threatening: The maps of the day often contained legends such as "here be monsters." Now, we smile at such naive viewpoints, but at the same time, we may be busily recreating monsters by assuming that those we do not understand will have evil intent.

Even in the books of Robert Ludlum, which are set in a violent and threatening context, the hero invariably winds up in mid-story developing a blind and unsupportable trust for some other person. Then, at the end, that trust proves to be the escape to salvation for the hero.

San Francisco trades Montana to Kansas City

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Joe Montana, a supreme artist at quarterback caught in a football soap opera the past two weeks, is finally a Kansas City Chief.

The confusing and protracted saga ended Tuesday night when the San Francisco 49ers completed a trade with Kansas City involving draft choices and one other player.

"Joe Montana can bring to us a tremendous amount of experience, of leadership, the ability to win and know what it takes to win," Chiefs president and general manager Carl Peterson said at a news conference.

Peterson and 49ers president Carmen Policy had been haggling long distance over compensation for the four-time Super Bowl winner, who remained under contract with San Francisco and turned down their offer to be the designated starter.

Twice in the previous 72 hours, Policy had announced that negotiations with the Chiefs had broken off.

"I never doubted that we could get this thing done at any time," Peterson said.

Peterson said details would be announced Wednesday in San Francisco, but a source close to the 49ers said Montana, safety David Whitmore and a third-round draft pick in 1994 would be sent to Kansas City for the Chiefs' first-round pick, the 18th overall in next weekend's draft.

Montana, a three-time Super Bowl MVP, lost his job to Steve Young while spending the past two seasons recovering from elbow surgery.

After announcing Young, last year's NFL MVP, would be their starter, the 49ers gave Montana permission to shop around, and last Saturday, in a second visit to Kansas City, he came to terms on a three-year contract.

But then the 49ers, in an extraordinary move, reversed themselves and said Montana would be their starter going into training camp.

JOE MONTANA'S CAREER STATS

Year	Cmp.	Att.	Yds.	TD	Int.
1979	13	23	96	1	0
1980	176	273	1,795	15	9
1981	311	488	3,565	19	12
1982	213	346	2,613	17	11
1983	332	515	3,910	26	12
1984	279	432	3,630	28	10
1985	303	494	3,653	27	13
1986	191	307	2,236	8	9
1987	266	398	3,054	31	13
1988	238	397	2,981	18	10

1991	Did not play
1992	15	21	126	2	0
Totals	2,929	4,600	35,124	244	123

After Montana stunned many of his ardent Bay Area supporters and rejected that offer, Peterson and Policy spent three days in hard-ball negotiations that ended about 7:30 p.m. EDT.

"Carmen Policy and myself came to a meeting of the minds," Peterson said. "I understood and appreciated the emotion of this trade for them. Joe Montana represents the greatest quarterback who ever played for the 49ers and perhaps in the NFL. This was not an easy separation for them."

Last year with Dave Krieg at quarterback, the Chiefs finished 10-6 and went to the playoffs a third straight year, losing in the first round to San Diego. Krieg was sacked 48 times, and the Chiefs' offensive line remains suspect after losing guard/tackle Dave Lutz to free agency.

Montana has played only one half of one game in the past two seasons because of elbow problems and will turn 37 before training camp opens.

"Our offensive coaches are going to be busy, but we think he will obviously give this organization an opportunity to improve," Marty Schottenheimer, Chiefs coach, said.

One of those coaches is Paul Hackett, who was offensive coordinator with the 49ers when Montana led the team to four Super Bowl titles.

The 49ers will have a news conference Wednesday in Santa Clara, Calif., with Montana and 49ers' owner Edward DeBartolo Jr. scheduled to be in attendance.

"Both teams are pleased that the matter has reached a conclusion on terms that they feel are fair and reasonable," Policy said.

Young, preparing for law school exams at Provo, Utah, has not been available for comment on the situation.

K-State commits 7 errors in 16-8 loss

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

A comedy of errors.

But there was not much to laugh about for the K-State baseball team as the Wildcats committed seven errors, handing Missouri a 16-8 win Tuesday night at Frank Myers Field.

"We just didn't play defense," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "The effort was there, but we didn't execute. Seven errors in the infield won't win you ballgames."

"We tried to compete hard," he said. "You have to give them a lot of credit. They took advantage of the mistakes to score runs. We'll come out tomorrow and, hopefully, the effort and execution will be better."

"I don't think I have had a team give up 13 unearned runs."

The previous high for errors by the team this season was five against St. John's. The Cats missed the school record for errors in a game by two. The Cats committed nine errors against Haskell Institute in 1933.

Last month in Columbia, Mo., K-State had only one error in the three-game series. It took just one inning for the Wildcats to make two errors.

One of the Wildcat players to make an error was Scott McFall. McFall committed two errors — back-to-back — in the fourth inning, helping the Tigers (20-13, 7-7) score four runs and give them a 10-3 lead.

Along with McFall, Jay Kopriva and Todd Petering had two errors and Brian Morrow had one.

Smargiasso's change of attitude

Injured ankle is 1st obstacle for matured QB

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Jason Smargiasso is a new man.

K-State's No. 1 quarterback has entered spring practice drills with 18 additional pounds of bulk and a humbling attitude — very uncharacteristic of the flamboyant Smargiasso.

If only he hadn't injured his ankle, "I really blew it out," said Smargiasso, decked out in an ankle wrap, an air cast and crutches.

Smargiasso's injury came Monday afternoon during practice. X-rays revealed there are no broken bones in the ankle, but the swelling is too high to find out whether there are torn tendons and ligaments.

The injury is not considered serious, but Coach Bill Snyder said it is too optimistic to say Smargiasso will be ready to play for the May 1 spring game.

But the latest setback for Smargiasso is simply the first mental test for the confident Wildcat quarterback who said he has matured a lot in the off-season.

He will enter his senior year, he said, as a different man — a quarterback who will leave his arrogant and stubborn demeanor on the sideline, a quarterback who will speak with his actions rather than his words, a quarterback who will shoulder the blame for a struggling offense rather than point fingers.

A quarterback who will win.

"It was an embarrassment last year," Smargiasso said. "You look back to last year and say, 'Was that us?' It was very much an embarrassment for all of us."

"And I take the blame. I don't think my attitude always jelled last season, I'm finally a lot more humble than I used to be."

Why the change of heart for the guy, who, some said, was his own biggest fan?

"The way I was before wasn't working," he said. "We had to try something different."

Smargiasso said he and Snyder had several talks in the off-season concerning the need for him to change his attitude — some of which were brutally honest.

"Coach would say that I claimed to know it all," Smargiasso said. "But he said that I'd go out on Saturdays and prove that maybe I don't know it all."

"I'm not at all happy with my play last year."

Perhaps the arrival of transfer quarterback Chad May has prompted Smargiasso to re-dedicate himself to gridiron success. Whatever the reason, Snyder said, it is working.

"I think he's making progress in a lot of different areas," Snyder said. "On the field, he's making better decisions. His leadership has been more pronounced and better-received."

"Jason's a free spirit," he said. "I appreciate the fact that he's willing to channel his efforts in the appropriate direction. But any time you make a behavioral change, there's always a temptation to revert back."

And Smargiasso said that, if he had his druthers, he'd still be the flamboyant character he has always been.

"I'd definitely rather not be in a position that I have to shut myself up," he said. "People have even been asking me if I'm sick."

"But I have no one to blame but myself. I'm not happy about what has taken place and that it has taken so long."

"I'm disappointed with a lot of things that have happened here," Smargiasso said.

"My arrogance has really hurt me. But now I'm just going to take things snap by snap and take everything in stride."

Not all is lost despite this year's seemingly poor fishing conditions

After record amounts of snow, and a spring fit for Noah and his ark, high water is changing the fishing strategy in Kansas.

Most of the big lakes are muddy and cold. The cold water makes the fish sluggish, and without sun, don't expect it to warm quickly.

The muddy water doesn't help either. Although fish have good underwater eyesight, it's hard for them to see through our infamous Kansas silt.

But don't give up — changing your tactics can also change your luck.

Overlooked by many, the streams that lead into larger bodies of water can be deadly. In the past, most of these streams simply haven't had enough water in them to be productive.

Things have changed. The water is up, not only backing them up to a desired depth, but flowing well. The movement of water through a stream will have a big effect on the stream's ecosystem.

It will cut new holes in the bottom of the stream and bring in more debris for structure. This does two things: It provides places for baitfish to hide, and it provides places for predators to wait for an easy meal.

The streams also carry a great amount of food for the fish. A heavy rain will wash worms, insects, larvae and smaller fish helplessly downstream.

Many nutrients are also washed into the lakes. Gizzard shad will feed on these nutrients and grow quickly, providing a good food base for any of the predator-sportfish species.

Fishing the mouth of a stream, whether it is entering into a bigger stream or lake, can be productive, especially during high water flow.

Try drifting worms below a bobber just off the bottom. Fish the deep holes, the bends and the deeper areas of water just below riffles. This is one of my favorites. Not only does it produce fish, but it produces all kinds. This method is productive on all fish, and if you're lucky, you may even latch onto a native smallmouth.

The streams will also clear up quicker than the lakes. The fish will move into them seeking food and clearer water.

When a lake is high, the muddy lake water will back up into the streams. This will create a mudline where the two bodies meet. If possible, walk high on the banks — this makes spotting the mudline easier to see.

This is a great spot — fish it hard. Fish will sometimes stay in the muddy water, hiding and waiting. A mudline is a funny thing. Some are very distinct and provide a perfect spot for a hungry white bass to ambush an unsuspecting shad.

The high water can also help fishing below a reservoir. The water being released from outlets and tubes also releases food and oxygen.

This may bring fish upstream to reap the harvest. Don't let all the water get you discouraged. This high water can also trigger the spawning urge in some fish, bringing large numbers of fish into one small area.

Use heavy weights that will get your lure to the bottom. In fast water, a three-quarter-ounce or one-ounce jig is not too heavy. Bounce the jig off the bottom as slowly as the water allows. Tipping the jig with a minnow or a worm can also help the fish locate the lure in fast or muddy water.

A change in your tactics may help. Experiment with different lures and baits. Try fishing places that you normally wouldn't. A flooded field or timber, for example.

Last but not least, this high water is helping our fish population. We may not see immediate results, but the high water will create more habitat and spawning runs. This will eventually result in more fish.

► K-STATE BASEBALL TEAM GETS LETTER OF INTENT FROM POEPARD

Wildcat head coach Mike Clark announced Tuesday that pitcher/shortstop Scott Poepard has signed a letter of intent to play baseball at K-State.

Poepard, a 6-foot, 1-inch, 180-pound righthander from Forest Lake, Minn., hit .403 as a junior at Forest Lake High School.

"Scott is a two-position player who has great skills and is a great runner," Clark said. "He'll make a good addition to our club."

Poepard, whose fastballs have been clocked as high as 88 miles per hour, chose K-State over Nebraska, Creighton and Bradley.

Former AD Richards accepts job in Albany

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Milt Richards, who resigned in January as athletic director at K-State, was hired for the same job by the State University of New York at Albany.

"We are fortunate to attract Dr. Milt Richards to Albany to lead our athletic program," Mitchel D. Livingston, Albany State's vice president for student affairs, said Tuesday. "He gives us the perfect mix of education, experience and energy."

Richards, 34, will take over July 1. He succeeds William Moore, who is retiring in June after 10 years as athletic director.

Richards was a unanimous selection from among 160 applicants, said Albany State Professor William Holstein, who headed the search committee to find Moore's replacement.

Richards stepped down in January after 18 months as athletic director at K-State, citing philosophical differences with the University.

"Milt realized that it wasn't a good match," President Jon Wefald said at the time. "It goes back to a fit, and that goes back to the context of the environment and the position. So, from that point of view, Milt realized that his style did not fit K-State."

Richards said that his eight-year relationship with Albany's president, H. Patrick Swygert, drew him to the job.

"I know the president, and I understand the president," Richards said by phone from a hotel in New York. "He's the kind of president who allows the director of athletics to do the things necessary to do the job."

Was that a problem during his tenure at K-State?

"I don't want to comment about that," he said.

Prior to taking over at K-State, Richards had been associate athletic director at Temple. He holds undergraduate, graduate and doctoral degrees from West Virginia.

Royals beat Jays, 8-2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City manager Hal McRae is 2-0 after moving Felix Jose from cleanup to leadoff.

"You don't change a winner," said McRae after Jose jumped-started Kansas City with two doubles in the first two innings Tuesday night in an 8-2 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Jose had three of Kansas City's 16 hits. Chris Gwynn and Jose Lind each drove in two runs with three hits as the Royals set season highs for runs and hits.

The win for Kansas City gave the Royals their first two-game winning streak of the season.

Jose, a switch hitter who has been unable to hit from the left side because of a shoulder problem, was moved from cleanup to leadoff Sunday. Jose was batting .147 before the game.

Kevin Appier (1-2) pitched the first complete game for the Royals this year, striking out nine and giving up only three hits.

"The bats were hot tonight," Appier said. "When we score a lot of runs, it puts them in a position where they are going to swing at a lot of pitches."

Kansas City scored four in the second, with Greg Gagne singling home a run and George Brett hitting a sacrifice fly. Gagne tripled and scored in the sixth and Lind hit a two-run double in the seventh.

Baseball team gives up 10 unearned runs in loss

The loss moved K-State to 13-20 and 4-7 in the Big Eight. Merriman went to 3-4, even though the records will show that he gave up only three earned runs.

"We should have won the game 8-4," Clark said. "Rob (Merriman) was throwing pretty well, throwing out of jams and making the big pitches when he needed to."

Offensively, the Wildcats knocked in eight runs on eight hits and sent Missouri pitcher Greg Lindstrom to the showers in the fifth inning. Lindstrom gave up four of his seven earned runs in the fifth, as K-State closed the gap to an 11-7 ballgame.

After a walk by Brian Culp and a single by Chris Wolf, Kopriva hit a double to right-field, bringing in Culp and Wolf. Walks to McFall and Chris Bouchard loaded the bases for Jamey Stellino.

Stellino responded by hitting a single and brought in Kopriva and McFall.

Michael Hunt (2-0) came on in relief for Lindstrom and shut down the Wildcats to one run and one hit.

The two teams meet again today at 2 p.m. at Frank Myers Field. Dan Driskill (3-5) heads to the mound for K-State and will face Jason Meyhoff (5-2).

End to hunger goal of run

RITA KIDD

Collegian

A can of food donated to the Run Across America project this week will help in the goal toward a Hunger Free Zone in Manhattan.

"Bring a can and share your support for the runners," Amy Sislo, freshman in anthropology, said.

The Students Ending Hunger of K-State, the Flint Hills Breadbasket and other groups are working together on the project.

Runners are scheduled to be in Manhattan Friday, April 23, having left Washington D.C. March 1. Their final destination is San Francisco, said Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"The donated food stays in the community," Bramhall said.

Food is distributed through the Breadbasket and a network of cooperating local churches, Bramhall said.

"We rely very heavily on community contributions. We have some United Way funding, but 85 to 90 percent of funding comes from the local community," Bramhall said.

The Run Across America was organized to draw attention to the need that exists with hunger in the United States today, she said.

Another goal is to promote a youth initiative in each community along the runners' route, Bramhall said. Locally, students are very supportive of the efforts of the Breadbasket, she said.

Sislo said the project attempts to bring K-State and the Manhattan community together.

A short-term goal of the Students Ending Hunger of K-State is to concentrate on local hunger needs, she said.

"We are trying to get as many students involved as possible," Mesfin Kahssay, sophomore in chemical engineering, said.

At times, parents are indirectly involved and active in projects when they see the children doing so much, Sislo said.

Any non-perishable item can be donated. One item that is usually needed is baby food, she said.

Donations of food can be made at Dillons in Westloop and at the customer-service center in Manhattan Town Center.

Opportunities for women provided in 'Friendship'

TRACY ARNOLD

Collegian

Diversity and friendship is what World Friendship is all about.

World Friendship is a women's organization that was established for international and American women in the Manhattan area.

"It started as a support group for foreign student wives about 20 years ago," Susie Shaw, president of World Friendship, said.

She said it has turned into more of a sharing group.

This large sharing group is broken down into several interest groups.

One of the interest groups is a cooking group, Ana Maria Brescia, co-president of World Friendship, said.

"One person from a different region each week shares a recipe with the other women," she said. "The leader cooks the recipe there, and everyone gets to taste it."

Another group sews. They make aprons, pillows, small quilts and some embroidery.

The other two groups are an English class and a discussion group.

The English class is made up of two groups. One is a beginners class, and the other is an intermediate English class, Brescia said.

"A lot of people who come here don't know any English at all, and this group helps," she said.

Finally, there is the discussion group that covers an array of topics.

"We've been discussing religion lately," Brescia said.

The group invited guests to discuss the topic. People of the Jewish faith were invited one day, and a professor of philosophy attended another to discuss the topic of religion, she said.

Other topics discussed are customs and holidays.

"For Halloween, we dress in costumes and carve jack-o-lanterns. For me it's kind of neat because we don't actually have Halloween," Brescia, who is from Peru, said.

Valentine's Day was celebrated by people bringing pictures of their husbands or sweethearts and discussing romantic customs of different countries, Shaw said.

Both Shaw and Brescia spoke of Christmas.

Santa attends a meeting, and the children are invited and receive gifts.

The children may go to the meetings any day.

Fred

Dear K-State Students:
Over the last month, we have aggressively tried to reach you and listen to your concerns. We have spoken to campus organizations, living groups, talked to students on campus, and tried to reach many students in apartments, sharing our ideas and hearing yours.

We have heard serious concerns about the book buyback process that can be improved. The root problem is that faculty are not submitting their textbook lists for the upcoming semester on time. The Union can only pay $3 for books that are not used again, but they can pay $20 for those that are used again. We can return thousands of dollars to students by facilitating discussion and action between faculty and the Union.

A second concern we have is job opportunities for K-State students. There are currently two programs underway at K-State called the Alumni Connection. These programs are set up in individual colleges to contact recent alumni for the purpose of setting up additional internships and eventually additional job opportunities. In listening to students' concerns, we would like to expand this program for all students in the nine colleges at K-State.

Finally, we strongly believe that student money should be used as efficiently as possible. Worthwhile projects for Multicultural programs, educational purposes, and other legitimate programs are needed, but wasteful spending should be stopped.

These are serious issues that demand serious attention. This election will be the closest in history. Please, don't sit back and let someone else elect the next student body president. Let your choice for your representative be known by voting today. Your vote counts! Thank-you.

Outrageous stories, sex displayed in devilish film

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

This week's Kaleidoscope film is the Swedish film "Devil's Eye." Directed by Ingmar Bergman, the 1960 film takes us to the depths of hell, literally.

It would seem that Satan has a hurt eye, and the only way to relieve this ailment would be to dispose of its cause, the virginity of a pastor's engaged daughter, Britt-Marie.

"Think of the precedent!" remarks one of the devil's advisers, on the implications of Britt-Marie taking her virginity to the marriage bed. "What it could lead to — happy marriages, good children. ..."

To combat this problem, Satan enlists the service of the legendary seducer of women, Don Juan. Don Juan's punishment in hell has been to entertain several young women, only to have them disappear before any sexual activity can be initiated.

The devil sends Don Juan and his sidekick to the earth's surface, escorted by one of his top demons. The demon arranges for the pastor's car to break down, and for the two condemned men to help him and be invited as overnight guests at his farmhouse.

Satan's plan backfires, as the normally cold Don Juan actually ■ "Devil's Eye" will show at 7 and 9:30 p.m. tonight and Thursday at the Union Forum Hall and at 7 p.m. Friday in the Union Little Theatre. Admission is $1.75.

falls in love with Britt-Marie and, wanting the best for her, cannot seduce her.

Juan's sidekick's constant propositioning of the pastor's wife (though she eventually gives in) turns out in the end to only make their marriage stronger.

Adding to Satan's defeat, the pastor traps the men's demonic escort in the cupboard. Earlier in the film, he commented, "If I ever saw a demon, I would trap it in here and find out all it knows!"

Once again a failure, at the end of the film, Satan thinks that he will retire.

"That'll show the man upstairs!" he says. "What can he do without me?"

The film deserves a look, if not only for its outrageous storyline, but for other aspects that make it even more appealing.

The film has many representations of new-wave European filmmaking — the strange shots, realistic locations and introspective (sometimes lack of) dialogue.

Bergman protege Bibi Anderson gives an excellent performance as Britt-Marie, the pastor's daughter.

Also innovative to this piece is the use of a narrator between scenes, adding a dry sense of humor to what most people might consider rather dreary subject matter. "We regret that we must discuss ... Hell."

Pow wow unites cultures

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

A spring dance took place this weekend in Manhattan City Auditorium, but it was nothing like a prom.

It was K-State's fourth annual pow wow, an event that brought Native Americans together from as far away as Kansas City and Oklahoma.

"It was a cultural event that Native Americans often have in the spring time," Courtney Freeman, coordinator of the pow wow, said.

"Most of the time, it is just called a spring dance, but that can mean different things. So, we decided to call it a pow wow."

The pow wow consisted of vendors selling their wares, a dinner and a large intertribal dance.

Karen Hester, an admissions representative for K-State, attended the pow wow to see what it was all about.

"I was very impressed with what I saw. It was my first time for attending an event like this, and I was not too sure what to expect, but I enjoyed it."

"The many crafts that were on sale were interesting, but what I really enjoyed was the fact that my awareness was raised," Hester said.

"There were things happening that I was able to see at the pow wow that you are unaware of unless you grew up with them or if someone explains them to you. By attending the pow wow, I was able to have some things explained to me," Hester said.

Part of the culture Hester was made aware of was the paying of respect that happens during the dances.

"During the dance, they explained how you were required to pay respects to the leaders of the dance, and they allowed people from the audience to go and do this. I was too chicken to do this, but many other people did," Hester said.

Freeman said the event was a big success.

"During the height of the event, the auditorium was packed. I was pleased with the turnout."

"We had people come from as far away as Tahlequah, Okla., and even some from Wichita and Kansas City."

"This was our fourth year for having the pow wow, and each year it has grown. I expect that after the success of this year, next year will be even bigger," Freeman said.

National acting competition produces a winner

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Maria Santucci, senior in theater, won first place in a national acting competition in Washington, D.C., last weekend.

Sixteen students from across the country competed in the Irene Ryan Acting Competition at the American College Theater Festival at the John F. Kennedy Performing Arts Center.

The competition was Sunday. The award, which includes a $2,500 scholarship, was presented that evening.

Santucci performed a piece from the play "The Authors" by Richard Greenberg. Her scene partner was Scott McLean, senior in journalism and mass communications.

She said having a scene partner allows her to show how she responds to others on stage.

"The award for me personally is something private and great, but career-wise, we'll have to wait and see."

MARIA SANTUCCI, SENIOR IN THEATER

Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, is starring as Hamlet in the production. He said he had high hopes for Santucci.

"I just knew she was going to get it. She was the runner-up in ACTF regionals for two years. She is an excellent actress. This will help everything fall into place for her now, since she is graduating," he said.

Santucci said she is still a little numb after receiving the award and is not sure what opportunities winning it will bring.

"I've met so many people," she said.

"The award for me personally is something private and great, but career-wise, we'll have to wait and see."

After graduation Santucci, would like to have a career in theater and try some leads in Chicago.

There were 19 judges, who were all professional actors and directors.

Among the most famous judges were Jeffery Johnson, a casting director in New York; Gerald Freedman, a Tony-award winning director who worked on the movie Malcom X; and Uta Hagen, one of the top acting teachers in New York.

Other judges were Kennedy Center producers and casting directors, as well as agents from California and Chicago.

Santucci won first place in the Region Five competition last January, giving her the opportunity to compete in Washington, D.C., said Marci Maullar, general manager of KSU Theatre.

Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech, Charlotte MacFarland, assistant professor of speech, and Harold Nichols, professor of speech, also attended.

The ACTF is composed of directing symposiums, acting symposiums, costume design and set design. Two shows are presented each night of the week.

The award is named after Irene Ryan, who was known for her role as Granny on the show "The Beverly Hillbillies."

Santucci said she thinks it is unfortunate that Ryan is known to many by the role she played as a hillbilly.

"Ryan was one of the most prominent Broadway figures when she was alive," she said.

Ryan died off stage just moments after singing the show stopping tune "Time To Start Living" during the Broadway show "Pippen."

CANDIDATES' CONCERNS

Fred Wingert

Ed Skoog

Candidates were asked how they feel about incorporation of SGA. Proponents argue removing SGA from under the state umbrella would provide SGA with more money and more control. Opponents argue certain safety features exist by keeping SGA under state control.

We want to use student dollars as efficiently as possible. Incorporation would be one way of taking control of student money. We must be cautious we don't give up more than we gain.

Innovative. I'm chair of the SGA committee examining incorporation. Incorporation would allow students to earn interest on and control student-fee money. An important issue.

Candidates were asked about their views on a required multicultural class for students. Proponents argue such a class is a necessity in a changing world. Most opponents don't disagree, but wonder about specifics and whether a required class would strain already meager resources.

Multiculturalism has been a priority of ours. We have worked on numerous diversity issues and projects. This commitment will continue by our supporting a multicultural class.

Positive. We propose a required two-hour, non-graded course for freshmen that covers diversity issues, gender issues and sexual ethics. Such a course is long overdue.

Candidates were asked what action, if any, they would take to combat high fees paid by students. Opponents of high fees argue the fees provide too little service for too much money. Proponents of high fees agree that it's expensive but that student fees pay for much-needed services.

Student tuition is a constant concern. We want to see student fees used efficiently. We would like to see referendums on some fees so input from students can be gained.

Incorporation of SGA provides the long-term remedy. In the short-term, students and the student administration must demand senators be better stewards of student fees.

Candidates were asked what issue would take the highest priority in their administration.

We want to continue the tone that our campaign has set with honest issues and appropriate professionalism. The candidate elected will represent all students to faculty, administration and community.

The multicultural overlay class. We need an educational environment in which students understand and appreciate differences and treat one another with respect.

Ring granted new election

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

A special election for one Student Senate seat in the College of Arts and Sciences will be April 27 and 28.

The 1993 SGA Elections Committee made that decision Monday evening in response to a situation involving Liz Ring, freshman in biology.

Ring was disqualified by the committee during elections last week for violating campaign regulations by using chalk to write her name within 50 feet of Putnam Hall.

Ring appealed the decision to Student Tribunal. Last Thursday, it upheld that Ring had violated campaign regulations but decided the penalty of ineligibility was too harsh.

Along with Ring, all other candidates who were defeated in their attempt to gain an arts and sciences Senate seat will take part in the special election.

All of their names will appear on a special election ballot. The committee rejected the idea of forcing Ring to run as a write-in candidate and voted 5-1 with one abstention to allow Ring's name to appear.

However, candidates will not be allowed to use any other campaign materials except their voice. The committee voted 7-0 to allow verbal campaigning only.

All candidates, in order to be eligible, must sign a statement saying they have read, understood and agree to abide by those campaign regulations.

Any violation of campaign regulations will result in the disqualification of the candidate.

Committee chair Mary Farmer said she plans on presenting a bill to Senate Thursday night stating the new campaign regulations for the special election.

Although not required to submit the new campaign regulations for Senate's approval, Farmer said having the support of Senate provides a back-up to the committee, should any problems arise.

The committee plans on keeping the original list of those not elected in the numerical order in which they placed. This list provides information to Senate to replace senators who resign or are impeached.

Should Ring win in the special election, she would assume the last arts and sciences position. Should she lose, the elections committee remains unsure where Ring would be placed in that order.

In other business, Student Tribunal rejected the appeal of Brandy Meyer, sophomore in chemical engineering.

Meyer posted campaign fliers on a trash can, which violated SGA campaign regulations. She was disqualified last Wednesday by the elections committee.

Tribunal upheld the committee's decision, saying the rules regarding the posting of campaign materials were clear and that Meyer admitted to the allegations.

It also held the decision made by the elections committee was within the committee's power and was not too harsh.

Speculation had surrounded Meyer's appeal, some people believing it would be overturned because many of the circumstances were similar to the Ring appeal.

However, Mike Porter, senior in elementary education and attorney general, said Tribunal makes each decision on a case-by-case basis.

Meyer was visibly upset by the decision but said she had no plans to appeal to University President Jon Wefald.

Debate focuses on platforms, ideas

"It will always be a red-headed stepchild," Skoog said.

Instead of cross-examination, Skoog said he would prefer to answer questions from the audience.

An audience member asked about the content of the proposed multicultural class.

Peterson said the Wingert/Peterson ticket proposed five different choices for the class. He said the class may need a rotation of teachers to ensure diversity.

Henry said the Skoog/Henry ticket wants the course to be non-graded course to allow for a dialogue between the instructor and the students.

Peterson said the best way to make sure the candidates will follow-through with their promises if elected is to examine the records of their past accomplishments.

Wingert said he and Peterson will do their best to implement their book buy-back plan, though it may take a year to do so.

Passion and stubbornness are necessary in accomplishing anything of merit, Skoog said.

Walter's decision was not political

Skoog's adoption of the plan includes his belief that a multicultural overlay class should be made a requirement for all students.

"I feel that the overlay class should be a two-hour class in which racial issues and gender issues can be dealt with. I also feel that the class should not be graded to ensure that one way of thinking is not taught," Skoog said.

Walters said he felt Skoog's adoption of the student-reform program was made with full intention of implementing the plan if he is elected.

"He has recognized the merit of our platform and has made a commitment to it. I firmly believe that his commitment is sincere and that he will follow through," Walters said.

Walters said the endorsement was made because it was in the best interest of his agenda and not because it was a political decision.

"I feel that this endorsement is merely the next step in getting our agenda passed."

"I met with each of the candidates, and I've chosen to endorse the one who wholeheartedly believed in our student-reform agenda," he said.

Fred Wingert, Skoog's opposition in the election, said he felt the endorsement was an indicator of the closeness of the election.

"I feel that this may very well be one of the closest elections in the history of the student body president."

Wingert said everyone has the right to choose who they will vote for or endorse.

"Every group or individual has the right to endorse who they want to. In my course of campaigning and knocking on doors, I have had several individuals endorse me because they believe in my campaign."

Songwriter waits for the word

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Mark Schultz, senior in marketing, is making his attempt to break into the music business through writing and piano playing. Schultz has been writing music for four years and said he is hoping for a contract with Sony Music.

KATHY WASKO

For a K-State student, trying to study and concentrate on school can be difficult when that student is waiting to hear news about potential record contracts.

Mark Schultz, senior in marketing, has been writing music for four years and traveled to Chicago during the weekend of April 2-4 to distribute his demo tape.

Schultz, who mostly sings top-40 music and love songs, has a singer and songwriter named Paul Clark reviewing his contracts.

"Everybody's got to review everybody else's contracts, which is good. They say it is a slow process because if you jump right in it, you could end up losing $4 million," Schultz said.

"My trip to Chicago was more or less to distribute my tape to the people that I thought could do something with it. It's not what you know, but who you know."

Schultz said this is one of those deals that you have got to put all your effort into.

Gary Fry, a free-lance writer and the person who writes the jingles for McDonald's and Coca-Cola, took his demo tape and is looking over his contracts.

Schultz also met Connie Kunkel, who plays on the CBS series "The Equalizer" and sang with Donny Osmond.

"She asked for one of my tapes when she saw me talking to Gary. She was going to take it back to New York with her and listen to it," Schultz said. "She knows a lot of people and has a lot of contacts."

One thing Schultz said he learned from Fry is contracts are very negotiable.

"They stick them out there for their interests, and you give them something back which look after your interests, and you meet them halfway," Schultz said.

"Their job is to make money and not to take care of you. You're kind of an object."

World Entertainment out of Los Angeles liked his demo tape, but they want to redo the tape with their producer and make it more professional, he said.

Schultz said he would have to take some time off to do a good job with that.

He said when he writes a song, he usually doesn't think about if people are going to like it or if it will be played on the radio.

"It's just whatever mood I happen to be in. I feel lucky when someone says they like it or that they can identify with it. It makes me feel really good."

Every song he writes is about himself, Schultz said. He also writes wedding songs and sings them at weddings.

Schultz said he wished he knew what his chances were of getting a contract.

"It can be frustrating."

Clinton faces difficult choices

Congress calls for more aggressive response to war

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton called in top advisers Tuesday to consider a more aggressive response to the war in Bosnia as his current, largely diplomatic approach came under congressional attack.

The options Clinton was weighing with his National Security Council included an allied air attack on Serb artillery sites, Secretary of State Warren Christopher told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The review includes options previously regarded as unacceptable, Christopher said, echoing Clinton's words of last Friday. He also cited the possibility of lifting an arms embargo against the Muslim-dominated Bosnian government.

Christopher said there was a worsening situation in Bosnia requiring urgent attention. Lawmakers, meanwhile, said it was time for action.

Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., D-Del., accused the administration of not doing anything to help beleaguered civilians and said Srebrenica, a major city, was at the point of collapse as a result.

"I think it's time we take some direct action," Biden admonished Christopher.

"Clearly, we're at a turning point in connection with the Bosnian situation," Christopher told the committee. He said the issue of air strikes was complex because such attacks could interfere with the supply of food and medicine to civilians.

"There may be better options," he said of a strategy that Clinton himself had advocated last July while seeking the White House and that has the support of former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and European Community mediator David Owen.

Later, Christopher told reporters: "I didn't mean to downgrade it."

He also showed some interest during the hearing in using $50 million in congressionally appropriated funds to provide weapons to the Muslims. That step, promoted by Biden on his return last week from the Balkans, would require U.N. action to exempt the Bosnian defenders from a worldwide arms embargo.

"It's been to the great advantage of Bosnian Serbs," Christopher said of the blanket ban.

Biden, who issued a report Monday, said the settlement proposed by Owen and former Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance to end the war and establish 10 semi-autonomous ethnic zones in Bosnia was incredibly counterproductive.

"I think it's time to push the West into a more aggressive posture," he said. "That, I think, is the only way to change the equation."

Shaking off an admonition by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., that it was not right to raise expectations among the distressed civilians, Biden said they were in a sad plight because the United States has not done a thing to help them.

Biden said military commanders unanimously were of the view that an air attack would neutralize heavy Serb artillery and save hundreds of lives.

"It just breaks your heart," Kassebaum said of the situation in Bosnia.

Similarly, Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., added, "Our response has been slow and too anemic. ... I have to say, candidly, we're not responding today as we should."

Christopher stressed the imposition of tighter economic sanctions against Yugoslavia, which the U.N. Security Council approved Saturday night. To go into effect April 26, they are designed to isolate the Serbs, Christopher said, but will take some real doing to implement.

Clinton has taken charge of urging European leaders to ensure Yugoslavia is denied all but humanitarian imports. He is sending Leon Fuerth, national security assistant to Vice President Al Gore, to Europe to promote cooperation, a senior U.S. official said.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin, testifying before the Senate appropriations defense subcommittee, said Clinton was faced with a very, very difficult set of choices.

"What we have managed to do so far is narrow the number of options, and we have made a list of options and presentations to the president," Aspin said. "He is reviewing those."

Also on Tuesday, Croatian President Franjo Tudjman, in an interview, urged Clinton to convene a Camp David-type meeting to bring peace to the former Yugoslavia. Participants who decline invitations to attend, he said, should be subjected to air strikes.

Cultists may have been shot while fleeing

"There's a legitimate fear that when we move bodies, something might blow up."

MIKE COX
TEXAS PUBLIC SAFETY DEPT.
SPOKESPERSON

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Some doomsday cultists may have been shot trying to flee "Ranch Apocalypse" before others started the inferno that left scores dead, investigators searching the still-smoldering ruins said Tuesday.

Whatever happened in the final hours at the Branch Davidian compound Monday, federal agents — under intense scrutiny for starting a tank-and-tear-gas assault that apparently precipitated the fire — placed responsibility for the carnage solely with the group's leader, David Koresh.

President Clinton, who faced sharp questioning about his administration's handling of the case, said at the White House: "He killed those he controlled."

Koresh and 85 others, including 17 children age 10 or under, were believed to have died in the fire that ended the cult's 51-day standoff with federal agents. There were nine survivors. Four remained hospitalized Tuesday — two in critical condition and two in good condition.

A cultist who escaped the flames alleged that FBI agents started the blaze, but FBI agent Jeff Jamar said there was ample evidence that cult members set multiple fires using lantern fluid. Fanned by high winds, the flames quickly incinerated the wooden complex.

The FBI said Monday its agents spotted cultists setting fires, and Jamar said fuel containers were found at the scene. "There's no question in our mind that that's how the fire started," he said.

Investigators pulled at least one body out of the rubble, but were slowed because "ammunition was still cooking and exploding," Jamar said. Officials said it could take two weeks to gather all the evidence.

Texas Department of Public Safety spokesperson Mike Cox said three state officers who walked through rubble Tuesday saw several bodies — including those of children. But "There's a legitimate fear that when we move bodies, something might blow up," Cox said.

Among other developments:

■ As victims' relatives and attorneys, politicians and observers worldwide criticized his administration, Clinton defended Attorney General Janet Reno, who approved the FBI effort to use at least two tanks to knock holes in the compound walls and tear-gas the cult members out.

Clinton ordered federal agencies to investigate events that led to the fiery end of the standoff. Congressional investigations also were announced.

■ The FBI turned control of the compound over to Texas Rangers, the state's elite crime-fighting force. The Rangers began investigating shootouts at the start of the siege, during raids Feb. 28 by federal Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents. Four agents were killed and 16 wounded while trying to execute search warrants for alleged firearms violations. Koresh had said six cultists also died.

■ The initial search warrant was unsealed, and it said Koresh told a Texas social services worker last year he was a messenger from God and that "when he 'reveals' himself the riots in Los Angeles would pale in comparison to what was going to happen in Waco."

The warrant also alleged Branch Davidians had spent $200,000 in 16 months on weapons for what Koresh called a "military-type operation" in Waco, and that an undercover agent inside the compound just before the raid quoted him as saying he would never be taken alive.

■ The New York Times, in a report published Wednesday, said tiny recording devices were sent into the compound four or five times when agents delivered milk, magazines, a typewriter and other items cult members requested during negotiations.

The Times, quoting a federal law-enforcement source it said spoke on condition of anonymity, said the devices picked up conversations involving Koresh until cult members discovered and destroyed them.

The Times said the source didn't say when the devices last were used or whether they provided evidence of child abuse, which Reno has said was one reason the FBI decided to begin Monday's assault.

Jamar refused to comment on reports concerning listening devices.

■ Five cult members who survived the blaze appeared in federal court, wearing orange jail suits and shackled by the ankles. One of them, Renos Avraam, told reporters an FBI tank spraying tear gas into the compound had knocked over a lantern and started the fire, and that the cult had "no plan for suicide."

Being held as material witnesses were Avraam, 31; David Thibodeau, 24; Derek Lovelock, 37; and Graeme Craddock, 31. All five were being held without bail.

■ Gov. Ann Richards joined Waco residents at a memorial service in a small downtown church. "Now I think it's time for us to heal," she said.

Waco Habitat for Humanity director Jo Pendleton told the mourners: "The 10 billion words that have been written, the speculations that have been made, the fingers of blame that have been pointed, all make no difference here — they are empty and meaningless as we mourn the loss of each child's life."

FBI's move on Koresh came after consultations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The FBI poured tear gas into the cult compound in Waco only after authorities learned through a listening device that David Koresh was becoming more violent and a slew of experts concluded negotiations wouldn't work, officials said Tuesday.

"If you can murder your own kids, there's nothing you won't do," FBI criminal division chief Larry Potts said in an interview. "I believe very strongly, as do the experts we consulted with — psychologists, psychiatrists — that his response ... would not change in six months. If anything, it would have gotten worse."

The Department of Justice's earlier plans were for a series of actions during several days aimed at a peaceful resolution of the 51-day standoff. It ended instead in a fiery death for dozens of cult members, officials said.

FBI Director William Sessions said in the same interview that had the Branch Davidian cult not set its own compound ablaze Monday, killing dozens of people, the FBI would have launched a second tear-gas attack on Tuesday. Monday's action, he said, "was but another step in the continuing shrinking of the perimeter."

Potts said the possibility of mass suicide was considered "from the moment we developed a plan."

That possibility, coupled with cult's heavy armaments and willingness to use them against federal agents, he said, necessitated the use of tear gas and opening exits with tanks.

"If there is a mass suicide underway, you develop exits for people who don't really want to participate," he said.

Another impetus for the FBI's action was information from bureau electronic listening equipment inside the compound that showed Koresh was becoming increasingly violent in the days leading to Monday's climax of the siege, said one official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Sessions did not deny that such equipment existed.

"I would not discuss any particular investigative method that we had," he said. "Methods, sources, techniques are matters that are very important to us, and I simply won't discuss them."

Attorney General Janet Reno said Monday officials believed children in the compound were being abused.

ISSUES

Harassment discussed

MARK JONES
Collegian

A small group, a quiet discussion but a very serious topic — sexual harassment.

Tuesday night some concerned Marlatt Hall residents met to share their views and learn about sexual harassment.

Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center, led the talk. Sexual harassment is unwanted sexual attention, she said.

A few examples of sexual harassment are unwanted kissing, touching, leaving sexual pictures in offices, leaving sexual jokes on a computer so someone will find them, and hanging sexist posters where others will see them, she told the group.

Group settings tend to prompt sexual harassment. She said people feel more brave and will do things they probably would not do if they were alone. Some examples she gave were rating people as they pass by, holding up numbers and the elephant walk, which is a form of hazing.

Just because one kind of action is not responded to, it does not mean it is liked, Fink said. Not all people will confront someone when they do not like something, she said.

"By the person not responding, it is almost like they're egging it on even more, and they may think 'well they must like it,'" Fink said.

Peer harassment, she said, is the one of the most prevalent kinds of harassment on college campuses. Peer harassment is when a student is verbally abused by another student.

If someone feels they are the victim of sexual harassment, there are resources available on campus at University Counseling Services and the Women's Resource Center, she said.

The discussion was sponsored by Marlatt Hall staff Eric Tims and Marcus Rogge.

"I think there are a lot of people who have misconceptions and don't get the gist of what it's all about," Tims said.

CAMPUS

K-State to gain from scholarship

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

A memorial scholarship honoring K-State's former associate attorney, Dorothy Thompson, will benefit students returning to the University.

Thompson's family and friends established a scholarship with the KSU Foundation benefiting non-traditional students and supporting the Essential Edge Campaign.

"The amount of the scholarship exceeded $9,000," said Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the KSU Foundation.

Thompson, who died in December of 1992, had been K-State's associate attorney since 1985.

"I am glad her family and friends decided to support the KSU Foundation," Dick Seaton, University attorney, said.

The Foundation works with alumni and friends to raise funds for the University's benefit and coordinates the Essential Edge Campaign.

"The Essential Edge Campaign started in 1988 and will end on June 30 of this year," Dowell said. "The goal of the program was to raise $125 million in five years, and we have already received money and gifts exceeding $148 million."

"The money raised will benefit 11 areas of the University," he said. "They are the eight colleges, athletics, the art museum and University libraries."

The amounts received from the alumni have been great, Dowell said.

"Despite being away for years, the alumni were so impressed while attending the University, they have made many contributions back to the school," he said.

"We have not only broken our goal with contributions like the Thompson scholarship but are able to go well beyond."

'Friendship' to benefit children

"We provide babysitting and transportation for those who need it," Brescia said.

Shaw said the children benefit from World Friendship, too.

"My kids used to go to the nursery. They really benefit from that because they see every color in the rainbow and all different facial features," she said.

There is a membership of about 100 women, Shaw said.

"All countries at K-State are represented here. There's something like 60 countries," Shaw said.

There are also women who teach driving to the international women, Shaw said.

"Some countries have customs that don't let women drive," Brescia said.

Both presidents expressed friendship and diversity as the most important features of the group.

"You see different people who look and dress differently. It's kind of neat because you see different nationalities all in one place," Brescia said.

Shaw said she agreed but stressed friendship.

"Women who come from other countries need contacts and friendly faces. We have that," Shaw said.

Shaw said the hardest part is saying good-bye to departing members.

"You make a lot of good friends. A lot still write," she said.

Artillery round found near White House

One of the rounds found four miles from the White House was 75 years old.

"It was totally intact," recalled Brig. Gen. Walter Busbee, head of the Army's chemical weapons destruction program, adding that the mustard agent inside was 60-percent pure and still lethal.

At other former defense sites: —More than 113,600 pieces of unexploded ordnance have been unearthed from an industrial and commercial area in Edison, N.J., the site of the former Raritan Arsenal.

Among the objects found buried were 83,352 tubes of TNT — boosters for World War II anti-aircraft shells — that had been left a few yards from the main administration building of what now is the Middlesex Community College. In additional sweeps of the campus, no munitions were found, and the campus is now considered clean, officials said.

—Parts of a public park in St. Luis Obispo, Calif., had to be closed after .30 caliber ammunition, grenades, anti-tank mines and a bazooka round were discovered. The land once had been an Army training area. Local officials said they assumed the explosives had been cleared.

—Near Hastings, Neb., hogs burrowing in an abandoned bunker, once part of a World War II ordnance plant, unearthed a Navy hedgehog depth charge. It did not explode.

—At the Tierrasanta subdivision in San Diego, residents fear recent heavy rains may expose more live munitions.

Jim Madaffer, a community activist in Tierrasanta, who moved in about the time the two boys were killed in 1983, says the corps is still conducting periodic sweeps and finding live, leftover rounds.

The community's problems reflect a total disregard by the federal government when it disposes of its property, he said in an interview.

It was not until the mid-1980s that the government began a systematic attempt to determine what former sites may have explosives and toxic wastes left over from military use.

But even today, owners and occupants of many of the former defense sites say they had no idea of the extent of the problem.

"We've been kept in the dark on the investigations that have been done and the adequacy of the investigations for a long time," said Stephen Davis, manager of defense facilities programs at the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Any sexual harassment is wrong

DEAR CASSANDRA,

There is a problem in our workplace, and (no offense) I am writing to you as a last resort.

My fellow male employees and I work with a gentleman who is constantly making sexual proposals towards us.

While most of us feel his way of life is his own business and usually laugh off his advances as a joke, some of us are becoming quite irked at his antics. He is a very likable person and a hard worker.

The last straw came when he took up the game of golf. He is constantly asking us to join him at the course and give him "private lessons."

Cassandra, please give us some direction. Is this sexual harassment? Do we tell our supervisor? Do we approach him? Are we right in speaking out?

Please help. All of us here at work enjoy your column and the Collegian in general.

Thank you,

Wondering at Work

DEAR WONDERING,

You shouldn't have to tolerate this type of harassment at work from anyone. Yes, confront this person and let him know his advances are unwelcome. Talk to your supervisor and let her or him know of the situation.

Sexual harassment, regardless of the gender, is not something to be taken lightly.

Racism, sexism add to ecosystem problem

"The underlying causes of environmentalism are also the underlying causes of racism, classism and sexism," Belanger said.

Odell said all these issues and causes contribute to the environmental problem.

"We aren't successfully protecting the environment like we should be. We need to start looking at the broader causes behind the environmental problems," Odell said.

One issue Odell said he was concerned about was the myth people seem to believe that because of environmental protection acts the United States is getting rid of industrial waste.

"A direct result of the environmental movement has been that the dirtiest corporations have moved to other countries where there is no pollution regulations. So, the problems have just gotten worse," Odell said.

Belanger said even if people make changes to help improve the environmental and related problems, there are still the large systems like government that have to change.

"What the government passes as law and what the media covers and how it covers it are what is perceived to be reality.

"We have to chip away at that perceptual reality and see what the real problems are and what needs to be done to deal with them," she said.

The discussion ended with people saying what they wanted to do effect these issues.

A chemical engineer major said he wanted to think of more effective ways to treat waste, and an architecture major said he wanted to do his part by building housing for the homeless.

Belanger said the Greens Party is a national grass roots environmental and social justice organization.

Recycling becoming popular in Manhattan

Cardboard needs to be flattened, and not all plastic containers can be recycled. Only plastic types No. 1 and No. 2 can be. The most common No. 1 type is the two-liter bottles that soda comes in. These are recycled into carpeting and fiberfill for jackets and sleeping bags.

The No. 2 type plastics are milk jugs and drinking water bottles. The new products these are created into are piping, traffic cones, flower pots and trash cans.

All plastic bottles should be flattened, and the lids must be removed, because they are made of a plastic that cannot be recycled like the bottle.

Wilson also receives products from Wal-Mart in Manhattan. There are drop-off bins in Wal-Mart's parking lot for individuals to dump newspapers, plastics and aluminum. Howie's picks up the products. But Wal-Mart loses money by doing this.

Chuck Patch, recycling coordinator for Manhattan Wal-Mart, said the company loses $5,000 a week.

"When recycling first started, the company allowed $25 million for the project and hoped it would last a year," Patch said.

"They spent that in the first quarter."

There are plans for Wal-Mart to open a new store in June that will do its own recycling. The Lawrence-based operation will be called an Eco-Store.

"The Eco-Store will be where people can bring in their materials, and they will process it right there," Patch said.

Patch said the bins are emptied twice a week and are always full. He said there has definitely been an increase in awareness of the public to recycle.

Monty Wedel, planning special projects director and recycling coordinator for Riley County has seen an increased awareness also. But a lot of garbage is still sent to the landfill in Perry, Kan., north of Lawrence.

Wedel said 100 tons of trash a day is taken to the landfill from Riley County's transfer station because the county has no landfill.

"Riley County has a transfer station where trash is taken. It is then loaded into a big semi and taken to Hamm Quarry that works in conjunction with the landfill," Wedel said.

Wedel said Hamm Quarry is such a large site it could probably handle the whole state for 10 to 20 years.

Wedel said recycling is important, but wanting to protect the environment isn't enough.

"It is only recycled when it is made into another product and someone buys it again," Wedel said.

"To close the loop, people have to buy recycled products as well."

Jobs bill almost defeated

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's jobs bill seemed all but dead Tuesday as Senate Republicans reaffirmed their rock-solid opposition to it upon returning from the Easter recess.

Barring an unexpected new effort at compromise by Clinton, the GOP unity meant that the legislation had virtually no chance in the Senate, where the minority Republicans have blocked it with a filibuster since last month.

And that leaves Clinton staring at what would be his first major legislative defeat — although the administration was loath to say so.

"We haven't given up hope. We never thought this was going to be easy," White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said.

Clinton says the measure, which would be paid for by federal borrowing, would create jobs during a still-uncertain economic recovery. Republicans, however, say the measure would pile billions of dollars onto record budget deficits while doing little for the economy.

"The people of the country are behind us," Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., said, as Republicans emerged united from a closed-door caucus. "They're excited about cutting spending. We've got an issue and we shouldn't let go of it."

"There's no emergency, and we ought to be getting onto more important business," Sen. Dave Durenberger, R-Minn. said.

The bill, a major leg of Clinton's blueprint for restoring the economy, contains $12.2 billion in new spending for everything from new computers for federal agencies to aid for school districts. It also contains $3.2 billion for road-building that would come from the highway trust fund.

Skoog, Henry win by 13 votes

The stump that named the bar sits by a wall, next to the pool tables. Smoke filled the air, and beer flowed freely, as Ed Skoog and Eric Henry celebrated their victory in the race for student body president and vice president.

Approximately 30 well wishers gathered at The Stump in Alta

Vista, a small town 20 miles south of Manhattan.

Both the candidates, as well as their campaign manager, David Frese, confessed to their surprise at winning. The Skoog/Henry ticket won by only 13 votes over opponents Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson.

"I'm surprised we won," Skoog, senior in English, said, with what could only be described as a shit-eating grin on his face.

"I thought we'd get stomped," said Frese, junior in journalism and mass communications.

It has often been suggested that 13 is an unlucky number.

This was true for the Fred Wingert/Jeff Peterson student body presidential campaign Wednesday night. They lost to opponents Ed Skoog and Eric Henry by 13 votes.

"It's politics," said George Wingert, 1986 K-State graduate in agricultural economics and brother of the presidential candidate. "You can lose by one just as you can lose by 1,001."

Wingert, who was awaiting the outcome with Peterson at the apartment of some of their fraternity brothers, spoke briefly to supporters.

"I think the students are going to be in for a long year," he said. "I guess they went back and double-checked it. When they say every vote counts, every vote counts."

The supporters, who filled the apartment and overflowed out onto the front porch, clapped for their candidate.

"Thanks for your help," Wingert

Zoo celebrates Earth Day

Cheetah exhibit grand opening to kick off Saturday festivities

KRISTEEN YOUNG
Collegian

Today is Earth Day — so happy Earth Day to you. No large events are scheduled for the Manhattan and Junction City area until this weekend. This story is a prelude for the events scheduled at Sunset Zoo.

Manhattan's Sunset Zoo is postponing its Earth Day celebration until Saturday. But it will start with a bang, or more appropriately, with a roar, from 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

The celebration will begin with the grand opening of the Cheetah Country exhibit.

Don Wixom, zoo director, said the Sunset Zoo is the first and only zoo in Kansas to have endangered cheetahs on exhibit. The fastest land animal on earth is protected by the Species Survival Plan.

As a result, Sunset Zoo has had to spend a great amount of time and energy preparing for the cheetah's arrival.

A contribution from Steven and Migette Kaup funded the exhibit. The money has allowed the zoo to add another species and renovated space for the cheetah's natural habitat.

"The exhibit was built entirely by the zoo staff and is the largest project we've done," Wixom said. "It includes a shaded African plaza and features colorful educational graphics."

Other earthy activities will occur throughout the day.

Children will have the opportunity to create "trash art," get their faces painted and learn valuable ways to help save the environment.

Activities are not limited to children. "Celebrating Earth Day can be a very positive, fun and educational experience for kids of all ages," Schanee Johnson, curator of education for the Sunset Zoo, said.

Johnson said there will be bio-fact tables set up for the day, with artifacts and information concerning the animals in that area of the zoo.

"Hopefully, this will motivate people to learn and show them just how wonderful animals are," Johnson said.

Prison siege ends peacefully

Five guards released; prison to hear complaints

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LUCASVILLE, Ohio — An 11-day siege in a maximum-security prison neared a peaceful end Wednesday night as surrendering inmates released five guards they had held hostage.

Seven inmates and one hostage had died in the uprising at the maximum-security Southern Ohio Correctional Facility. The inmates initially took eight guards hostage; one was strangled and two were freed unharmed last week.

The remaining five hostages were released shortly before 10:30 p.m., said Jim Mayers of the state Department of Rehabilitation and Correction.

Roughly seven hours earlier, the first of 450 barricaded inmates began giving up. Late Wednesday night, the inmates were coming out of their cellblock in groups of 60 to 80.

In exchange for peaceful surrender, state officials promised to review the inmates' complaints, including religious objections to tuberculosis testing and a federal law that requires integration of prison cells.

Meanwhile, in Newtown, Conn., a disturbance at a state prison Wednesday night left 12 inmates injured. Guards regained control of the prison within two hours, an official said. No guards were reportedly hurt seriously.

The Ohio prison, 80 miles south of Columbus, houses some of the state's most dangerous criminals.

Three of the prisoners were carried out of barricaded Cellblock L on stretchers; three used crutches.

JMC professor speaks at conference in Libya

MICHELLE HAUPT

Expertise in strategic planning issues earned a K-State professor an all-expense paid trip to Tripoli, Libya.

Richard Nelson, professor of journalism and mass communications, was a guest speaker for a symposium at Alfateh University in Tripoli.

Nelson was one of about 200 scholars from around the world who were invited to speak.

"These were mostly scholars and public policy makers," Nelson said. "Libya was interested in bringing scholars from many nations."

One of Nelson's colleagues recommended him to speak at the symposium, which was April 5-7. The symposium was titled the New International Order. Most of the scholars who attended were educated in the United States or Europe, he said.

"I was the only person from America there," Nelson said.

He said the focus of the conference was to advance understanding of how developing nations can improve relationships with other countries, particularly Western nations.

"They are concerned with what developing countries can do to help their countries," he said.

Nelson spoke on how developing nations can improve the effectiveness of external communication efforts. He said his speech was successful.

"There was a lot of interest and follow-up questions."

Nelson took additional handouts about media bias and strategic management for the conference participants.

"They were snatched up," Nelson said.

Although Nelson had previous arrangements to attend another conference on April 8 in New Orleans, he spoke at the symposium on April 6.

"I was there from 6 a.m. to 1 a.m. the next morning, about 20 hours," Nelson said.

Nelson said getting to the conference was difficult. He made stops and changed planes many times throughout the flight. He had to take a 12-hour boat ride to arrive in Tripoli.

"It became an adventure to make connections," he said.

Nelson said the American perception of Arab culture is dated. He said he saw no guns and that the terrorist image is distorted.

"The problem with international communication is the image has a lag time," he said. "They are saddled with an image of terrorism that they don't deserve."

Nelson said a positive aspect of the trip was making contacts for research, as well as increasing the international presence of K-State and the United States.

"Too often, we are Americentric," he said. "We should explore academic opportunities in Arab states."

Carol Oukrop, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said the effects of Nelson's trip were positive.

"It opens new doors for international communication," Oukrop said.

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. I've heard the financial aid office can assist if I have unusual circumstances. What does that mean?

A. The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) collects general information about the student/applicant. The Federal government has given financial aid administrators the right to assist families or single applicants with circumstances not considered normal or that cannot be entered on the Federal form.

Q. What type of circumstances are considered unusual?

A. The following circumstances could allow the financial aid office to make adjustments:

- If you have high medical or dental expenses that are not covered by insurance.
- If your family pays private tuition for elementary or secondary students.
- If one of the parents or the student will have reduced income or loss of income for 1993.
- If you or your parents are classified as a "dislocated" worker.
- If one or both of your parents have died.
- If your parents are divorced since you completed your Federal form.

In addition to the above, the student may have other reasons a financial aid office can make adjustments. Students or parents should write a letter explaining their unique situations for the 1993-94 award year, and send it to 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. I've heard the Federal government considers students "dependent" for financial aid purposes until they reach 24 years of age. Is this true?

A. Yes, under the Federal definition, an independent student is one who is:

- Born before January 1, 1970.
- A veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces.
- A graduate or professional student.
- Married when filling out the Federal form.
- A ward of the court or both parents are deceased.
- Supporting a legal dependent(s) other than a spouse.
- A student for whom a financial aid administrator determines and documents the student's independent status on the basis of extenuating circumstances such as physical or emotional harm. Special circumstances that exist for an individual student rather than circumstances that exist across a class of students may also allow for an adjustment.

Q. If I am classified as dependent, whose information do I report on the Federal form?

A. If you are dependent for financial aid purposes, you must use your parents' 1992 tax information. This would include a step-parent's information if part of the household. Of course, the student's 1992 information is also collected on the Federal form.

Q. It seems like the FAFSA asks for a lot of information. Is it all necessary?

A. The FAFSA collects only information critical to consider you for Federal aid programs. In most cases, the free form is the only form necessary to apply for aid from colleges, state agencies, and the Federal government. However, some colleges, private scholarship agencies, and state agencies may request further information for their non-Federal aid programs. Always check with your financial aid office to make sure. They are there to assist you.

Senate kills Clinton's jobs bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Democrats abandoned their effort to push President Clinton's jobs bill through the Senate Wednesday, as relentless Republicans saddled the new president with his first major legislative defeat.

After fruitless eleventh-hour negotiations between White House officials and Senate Democrats and Republicans, the Senate used a voice vote to approve only the $4 billion bill contained for jobless benefits and strip the rest of the money from the legislation.

Hours earlier, Democrats had lost their fourth attempt to break a filibuster by minority Republicans that had frozen the measure in the Senate since last month.

The Senate vote, in effect, killed one of Clinton's major economic initiatives.

"I'm disappointed but I knew when I came here that we'd have to change some things in Washington," Clinton told reporters after the vote. "The American people won't be surprised, I guess, to think that a minority of one house could keep several hundred thousand people out of work this year."

The jobs measure killed Wednesday contained $12.2 billion to restore forests, provide immunizations for children, create summer jobs for students and finance other programs Clinton said would stimulate the economy and put more Americans to work. It also had $3.2 billion from the existing highway trust fund for road construction.

The vote generated finger-pointing on Capitol Hill.

"While the other side is congratulating each other on proving they are a force to be reckoned with, they have only proved that they are the guardians of gridlock," said Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va.

"If I am any judge, I think the American people are supporting our position on this package," said Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan. "Most people I talk to say cut spending first ... and don't raise my taxes."

Dole also said the battle showed that the White House should seek support from Republicans on future issues, something it failed to do on the jobs package.

"Hopefully, we'll be consulted on health care and some of the other major problems," he said.

The Senate measure now goes to the House, where Democratic aides were uncertain whether a vote would occur this week or next. Liberals there were already unhappy when Clinton had stripped $4 billion from the bill in a futile effort to win GOP support.

But Republicans stood firm, arguing that the package would add billions to record federal deficits while doing little to help a $6-trillion economy. Democrats had wanted to finance the measure by borrowing money, which would drive up the budget shortfall.

In a day of closed-door talks, Republicans offered a much smaller version of the package, worth about $6.5 billion — the jobless benefits money, plus some spending for summer jobs, road building and other programs.

All the programs except the unemployment benefits would have been paid for with cuts in existing programs, a package the Democrats rejected.

Special tours of K-State are available to residents of Kansas, ranging from kindergarten to senior citizens, who want an insider's view of on-campus sites.

"This is an excellent public relations tool and service provided by the University," Gary Pierson, assistant director of new student services, said. "It promotes the University as a service to the surrounding community."

The tours enable K-State to plant a seed in the minds of children and provide an educational experience.

"This is part of our mission," he said.

These campus visits are not only for prospective students, but for parents and teachers as well, Pierson said.

"It's a year-round operation, but the peak season is the beginning of March to the end of May," he said.

People come from as far as five hours away, Pierson said. Most people are from within a few hours so they get through their visits in one day.

Bus tours are available for people with time constraints, people who need a quick overview of the facilities or those who don't wish to walk such as senior citizens, he said.

Some of the more popular tour areas include the College of Veterinary Medicine, agricultural units such as the dairy bar and dairy unit, Bramlage coliseum, and the physics department.

Roger Key, laboratory educational technologist in the physics department, said the demonstrations he gives serve as a public relations tool for the department.

The main purpose of the demonstrations is to remove anxiety and to foster an interest in science so people can learn more about the world around them, he said.

"I avoid giving magic shows," Key said.

"All the demonstrations are explainable and understandable."

Key said the depth of the demonstrations varies with age groups.

"I get valid questions from the younger children," Key said.

"It's refreshing."

The demonstrations are centered around everyday life and deliberately kept simple, generalized and related to all areas of science.

"There are ideas that are common to all sciences, for example energy," he said.

People who come on special tours have seen them advertised, heard from friends who have been on tours or called out of their own interest.

"Ultimately the demonstrations may inspire some people who have seen them to become scientists and engineers in the future," he said.

Field trips like these can help take the fear out of a college education and dispel the myth that some courses perceived as difficult are not really difficult, Key said.

"The friendliness of the people encountered on the first visit usually cause people to return for more visits," Pierson said.

Making the wrong call

THE ISSUE

The Student Senate Tribunal was wrong in not disqualifying a Senate candidate for campaign violations.

Last Friday, Student Senate Tribunal made a decision that was noble and just — they upheld the election committee's decision that arts and sciences Student Senate candidate Liz Ring violated campaign regulations.

With that commendable action behind them, the tribunal then promptly ignored everything they had just said and did two 180-degree turns.

In passing down the sentence to a defendant who had just been ruled guilty, the tribunal, in a consummate display of judicial wisdom, decided disqualifying Ring would be too harsh.

How very compassionate.

The compassion, however, did not last long. Arts and sciences candidate Brandy Meyer, also deemed guilty of violating campaign regulations, had her verdict upheld.

But this time, tribunal saw no reason not to disqualify her.

Both Ring and Meyer were elected, according to the vote count, in the the April 13 and 14 general elections.

Now, in the epitome of simple and logical political thinking, we are presented with a special election that provides Ring, decreed guilty of election violations by two successive committees, with another chance.

This is not a protest cry against Ring — it could have been any one of the more than 100 candidates who vied for Senate seats. This is a call for consistency and logic in tribunal decisions.

Right now, all we have is an extra unnecessary election and a tribunal that has set the precedent that some rules can be significantly bent if they feel sorry enough for the offender.

Mary Farmer tells it like it is

As the 1993-94 Student Governing Association Elections Committee chair, I would like to explain the recent decision by the elections committee to hold a special election for the last Student Senate seat for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Last Friday, Student Senate Tribunal overturned the committee's decision to disqualify Liz Ring, Arts and Sciences Senate candidate, for violation of campaign regulations.

Ring, in the judgment of the elections committee, violated campaign regulations by chalking sidewalks within 50 feet of a residence hall.

Tribunal upheld this decision. However, it contended disqualification was too severe a punishment for the elections committee to place on Ring.

Following the tribunal's decision, the questions surrounding Ring's election to Student Senate came back to the elections committee to answer.

The committee's concerns were centered around the fairness to all candidates involved.

The issue of the 18 arts and sciences Senate candidates elected to Student Senate legitimately was of foremost concern. The committee felt they should receive their positions without question.

The possibility of appeal to the tribunal if an entirely new election for the College of Arts and Sciences were to be held, should any of these candidates not be re-elected, would be tremendous as well.

Those Arts and Sciences candidates not elected to Student Senate were the next highest concern to the committee. These candidates, who did not violate campaign regulations, deserve to be treated fairly in the decision regarding Ring's situation.

The committee also was concerned with fairness to Ring. The question was how to best ensure that all candidates received fair treatment.

In light of the tribunal decision, the committee did not think it was fair to the numerous other Senate candidates to simply hand the Senate seat to Ring.

The committee maintained that by holding a special election these candidates would be given a second chance at Student Senate. All candidates' names, including Ring's, will appear on the special election ballot.

Because there is one Senate seat available, voters will only be allowed to vote for one candidate next week.

Also, the committee felt that because voters will only be voting for one candidate, the need for campaign materials was not as great.

Therefore, all of the eligible candidates for the special election will be allowed to campaign verbally only. Posting campaign materials will not be allowed. Posters, signs, stickers, buttons or any other materials defined in the campaign regulations as campaign materials are prohibited.

All candidates eligible for the special election who did not attend the information session must contact me at 776-0172 as soon as possible to get a copy of the special regulations. The candidates must sign a form stating they understand these regulations.

I stress that violations of these special regulations will result in a candidate's ineligibility.

Fairness was the only concern of the elections committee. The committee believes the special election is the only solution to the concerns surrounding last week's disqualification and tribunal's decision.

We on the elections committee take our positions very seriously. It is our duty to enforce the campaign regulations and to conduct a fair election.

We are confident this decision will provide the voters with a fair election.

Mary Farmer, junior in history, is chair of the 1993 SGA Elections Committee.

SOLUTIONS

Class requirements too much of a burden

Editor,

Since 1981, the curricula for the bachelor of science and bachelor of arts degrees (excluding those in the fine arts, music and music education) in the College of Arts and Sciences have required a course in philosophy. None of the other colleges appear to have this requirement.

Because of a familial involvement, I've become aware of the problems that students encounter getting enrolled in an acceptable philosophy course. Some find the only solution is to enroll in a correspondence course in philosophy from the University of Kansas. This entails not only an added expense above and beyond the K-State fees ($239, to be exact, for KU's Philos 140C, Intro to Philosophy, three credit hours), but it probably also boosts the enrollment figures for our sister institution downstream on the River Kaw.

An inquiry revealed the following: Total full-time equivalent for the fall semester 1992 in K-State's College of Arts and Sciences was 6735; total listed 1992-93 two-semester capacity in the six Department of Philosophy courses that satisfy the requirement was 860, with 866 actually enrolled. However, students who enrolled in the only philosophy course with a level above 100-299 were told by the instructor that the course was intended for philosophy majors and that non-majors might find the course difficult. Excluding that course, the capacity would be reduced to 835 with actual enrollment 851.

Assuming that the required philosophy course should be taken in the freshman or sophomore year because of the 100-299 designation, it follows that there would be 1720 openings for approximately half of the 6735 currently enrolled students. In actual practice, students in their junior and senior years often are still trying to get into a philosophy course.

There are several solutions. The first would be to hire more faculty in the department — an unlikely prospect. The second would be larger class sizes. A third possibility would be to abolish the requirement that undergraduate degree programs in the college include a course in philosophy.

I favor the third option, but I suggest the second option as the most practicable under the present circumstances. I also realize that the philosophers' ideal class size would be one, with a log as a classroom.

I don't remember ever winning an argument with philosophers. I'm certain they will present exquisitely honed arguments to rebut these suggestions.

RECOGNITION

Hey, this spotlight is welded into place

Editor,

Congratulations to the debate team for their accomplishments. Congratulations to all those Truman scholars and others who have distinguished themselves academically.

But please, would someone stop rubbing our noses in it? Enough, already.

Many, many other K-State students have distinguished themselves in their work here but don't get the royal treatment. Likewise, many of my faculty colleagues have given years of toil, sweat and tears in shaping the lives of young citizens but don't get public recognition for their great contributions.

For the most part, these members quietly go about their business without notice from the power elite.

Am I jealous of the debate team's recognition? Yeah, I guess so.

The fruits of one's labors at K-State will emerge later — long after the last touchdown or tournament win. It is only then we should quietly reflect and be truly satisfied — without obtrusive fanfare from silly commemorative T-shirts, Paul Harvey's blathering commentaries, or meaningless government proclamations.

Hmmm. I guess it's really not so bad. Let the big boys have their fun. The rest of us can go about our business. We can look forward to the fine future accomplishments of those great students who do not bask in the sunshine while they are here.

In the meantime, though, I await, chuckling at the new I-70 signs announcing K-State's most recent accomplishment.

WACO: VIEWS FROM NORTH AND SOUTH

Tree bark. There are bazillions of different kinds of tree bark. I'd never noticed this fact before today, but at the suggestion of a friend, I have begun to walk slowly to and from class hoping to notice the minute details otherwise missed. I have begun to treasure the trip to class more than the class itself (and that's saying a lot because I'm one of those weirdos who actually likes going to class most of the time) — the journey more than the destination.

It takes patience to live life this way, the realization that the world will not end if you arrive late, the realization that the destination may not be all that important, after all.

Army tanks and tear gas. Eighty or more people lay buried in ashes, destination reached, but who planned the trip in the first place? Were the FBI and the ATF so eager to reach this end that they would skip the steps getting there? Perhaps they were just impatient.

Walking slowly is not the only step I've taken in this goal to achieve happiness. I've decided to change my journey toward a degree I like and take classes I enjoy. At one time, I focused only on the employment possibilities offered by a degree, quit enjoying classes and failed them. Not only was I not enjoying getting there, I never arrived.

The FBI and ATF also set a goal, we can presume. They were in a hurry to achieve that goal; people died. I cannot help but wonder what the consequences might have been if they'd taken their time, read their road map and driven the speed limit.

On a much smaller scale, tragedies like this happen every day. Getting the job seems so important that friends and family are forgotten. Getting the raise seems so important that co-workers are shoved by the wayside. Getting the grade seems so important that true knowledge is replaced by quick cramming, soon to be forgotten.

Although there are a few who become successful and have fun getting there, there are many more, who, like the FBI and ATF, find themselves facing death when they get to the end of the line. Oh, they may not be laying in a casket, but they might as well be.

Spiritual death, psychological death, whatever you may want to call it, the symptoms are the same, and they are running rampant in society today — alcoholism, depression and addictions. All caused by people living life for the future and forgetting about today. People impatient for goals that may be worthless.

My mother used to tell me to count to 10 before I did anything. The FBI and ATF apparently counted to three, got tired of waiting and moved. On a personal level, these irrational actions to achieve a worthless goal can be tragic indeed. If you were to ask the families of those people in Waco, I'm sure they'd call it inexcusable.

Although Monday's tragic end to the 51-day standoff in Waco, Texas, was a horrifying and shocking sight, it is important to look at the facts surrounding the event before quickly condemning Janet Reno and the FBI for their actions.

One cannot argue the fact that the mass suicide of the Branch Davidians was not intended; yet, blame has been needlessly cast in every direction.

Both acted in the manner they did because of the evidence that supported brutal child abuse by David Koresh and his repeated lies to bring an end to the siege.

One of the first things to remember is that when the siege began on Feb. 28, the raid was one of hundreds per year conducted by the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

AARON
COLUMNIST

Going in, they had arrest warrants for Koresh charging him with numerous violations — including stockpiles of illegal firearms.

This was not a raid done just because the ATF had nothing better to do. This scene is played out on a much smaller scale quite frequently, and had the cult not been tipped off, chances are that no lives would have been lost.

Second, one of the main concerns all along has been the protection of the children. For the most part, none of them probably had the choice of whether to be part of the cult; so, great care was exercised in negotiating and trying to work out their release. To a certain extent, they were successful.

One of the main goals of piping tear gas into the compound was to play on the maternal instincts of the women, in hopes that they would grab the children and flee. Unfortunately, it didn't turn out this way, but actions had to be taken to prevent those children from any more physical or emotional harm.

Third, many people have implied this was a military action. That couldn't be further from the truth. The tear gas used was not lethal. The FBI knew the only way to get into the compound would be to do so in a manner that offered complete protection to the agents, and they didn't use tanks with live ammunition. The agents never intended to return fire, and they never did, despite a heavy barrage by the cultists. These factors indicate that protecting lives on both sides was the main objective.

Finally, people don't seem to care that the siege could have lasted indefinitely. The compound in Waco had huge stockpiles of supplies, possibly enough to last for years.

David Koresh had envisioned years ago an Armageddon, and lots of evidence points to the fact that an apocalyptic confrontation was his ultimate goal.

In conclusion, one doesn't have the luxury of hindsight when trying to handle a crisis, and based on the information learned through the cultists that was released, mass suicide was not seen as a major concern. Koresh and others had been saying it wouldn't happen all along.

The main lesson to be learned is that regardless of the sorrow felt for those who died, the FBI took steps to save their lives. They, along with the president and attorney general, should be praised for their patience.

HEALTH CARE

Females target of tobacco industry

NEIL ANDERSON

Collegian

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment has begun a month-long campaign to inform women of the facts about smoking and tobacco companies' advertising campaigns.

"Research shows that many young women don't decide to start smoking until they're 18 to 21 years of age, and they usually start out as occasional smokers," Dr. Ray D. Baker, director of the KDHE Division of Health, said.

Research has shown that media messages are an effective way to reach young women who are occasional smokers.

"More women took it up and kept it up. That's what we are interested in," Jeanette Mathias-Morrell, health promotion administrator at KDHE, said.

One in five female college graduates smoke, and nearly three in five women with a high-school education or less are smokers.

The preventive messages can only run a month because of the small budget, Mathias-Morrell said.

"We have received a lot of positive responses from the public," she said.

Greg Crawford, director of status.

Crawford said one of the TV spots shows the tobacco companies'

SOME SMOKING STATISTICS

- 28.1 percent of men smoke.
- 23.5 percent of women smoke.
- 13.6 percent of people with a college education smoke.
- Two-thirds of single mothers are smokers.
- Most smokers light up an average of 20 cigarettes per day.

public information at KDHE, said some of the tobacco companies target women with the message smoking is a way to upgrade their opinion as "women make us rich." They try to target the messages at times of day that will reach the most women, he said.

Six months after a campaign finishes running, the KDHE tries to approach it again with another perspective, he said.

The prevention messages are public service announcements on radio, television and billboards.

The percentage of Americans who smoke stayed the same from 1990 to 1991. This is the first time in 25 years that the number of American smokers hasn't declined, according to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention's research.

The numbers for women and black people are also increasing, while more men are quitting.

The CDCP reports said smoking increases the risk of osteoporosis, cervical cancer, fetal and infant deaths and low-birth-weight babies.

Doctors at the CDCP said they believe the increases are due to the availability of discount cigarettes.

Tobacco companies spend nearly $4 billion a year in advertising, and one of the larger targeted groups is women.

The percentage of female smokers went up 0.7 percent, while the percentage of male smokers went down 0.3 percent.

Award-winning composer to speak

LAURA HEIDE

Collegian

Composer and pianist Joan Tower and the Da Capo Chamber Players are the featured guests at this year's K-State Panorama of American Music.

Tower is also the guest speaker for the Convocation lecture on "Choreographing Sound" at 10:30 a.m., Friday, in McCain Auditorium.

CONVOCATION GUESTS

- Joan Tower, composer, will present "Choreographing Sound" at 10:30 a.m. Friday, April 23, in McCain Auditorium.
- K-State students and faculty will perform chamber music composed by Tower at 8 p.m. tonight at the All Faiths Chapel.
- The Da Capo Chamber Players will be performing at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 24.

Tower founded the Da Capo Chamber Players in 1969. She composed many of their works and served as their pianist for 15 years.

"Da Capo is Italian for a new beginning," Craig Parker, associate professor of music, said.

Tower is the Asher Edelman Professor of Music at Bard College, where she has taught since 1972. She is also currently performing her music as well as lecturing throughout the United States.

She was the winner of the 1990 Grawemeyer Award for Music Composition, the most prestigious and lucrative prize in classical music, Parker said.

She grew up in South America, where she acquired a fascination for native music and learned how to play percussion and piano.

At 18, she attended Bennington College and Columbia University, where she earned her doctorate in composition.

Tower has composed works for symphonies throughout the United States including Chicago, St. Louis, and the New York Philharmonic.

Hanley Jackson, professor of music and composer, said he is looking forward to meeting her.

"Tower's music is the best written anywhere and by anybody. She has an elegant style that is difficult to pin-point," he said.

Laurel MacAdam, assistant professor of music, said Tower is one of the few composers today who can earn commission from her works.

"Financially it is not a good time for the arts," she said.

Tower's most successively financial work was "Silver Ladders," a piece she composed for the St. Louis Symphony in 1986. It was the piece that won her the Grawemeyer Award as well as $150,000, MacAdam said.

Todd Petering, Wildcat shortstop, dives back to first base on a pickoff attempt during the Cats' 12-8 loss to Missouri Wednesday afternoon. Petering had three of K-State's seven errors in the game, and he leads the team with five in the last two, both losses to the Tigers.

Tigers have scored 20 unearned runs in 2 games

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

"That's the worst display of defense I've seen in my life — and you can quote me on that."

K-State pitcher Jeff Woita had just seen the Wildcats commit four of its seven errors in the eighth and ninth innings, helping Missouri score 11 runs in the final two innings en route to a 12-8 victory Wednesday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

It was the second game in a row in which the Wildcat defense had committed seven errors, a season high.

Dan Driskill and Brett Bock (0-2) gave up a combined total of only two earned runs. Twenty of Missouri's 28 runs in the last two games have been unearned.

"We win and lose as a team," Coach Mike Clark said. "We've got to make those plays. When the ball came to us, we were on the back of our heels and worried about making an error."

"That was the toughest loss in my 17 years of coaching. We could be 5-7 and in the conference race."

K-State (13-21, 4-8 in the Big Eight) had momentum going into the top of the eighth inning. The Wildcats had scored four runs in the seventh and lead 7-1. Missouri (21-13, 8-7 in the conference) had just one run and three hits off of Driskill.

"For seven innings, we played good ball," Clark said. "He (Driskill) threw great. We took him out because he got tightness in his elbow."

After a strikeout to the first Tiger batter, Driskill surrendered three singles to load the bases. Driskill walked the next batter before he was taken out and replaced by Bock.

Shortstop Todd Petering bobbled a potential double-play ball that would have killed a Missouri rally. Instead, another Tiger came across the plate. Steve Ball, Missouri's seventh batter of the inning, hit a two-run double, and Gary Greene's sacrifice fly to right brought in one more, cutting the Cat lead to 7-6.

After getting the first batter out, Bock walked the next batter, Petering, who committed three errors in the game, missed another potential double-play that would have ended the game. Then, Bock hit Grant Ingram to load the bases.

Third baseman Matt Ketterman misjudged a hit and allowed Missouri to tie the game.

The Tigers took the lead when catcher Chris Bouchard mishandled a play at the plate.

A strikeout later, Greene hit a three-run double to left field and gave Missouri the lead for good. Greene would come in on a Rodney Weary double.

The Missouri linescore of the inning: six runs, two hits, three errors and one man left.

Keith Messa (4-2) held K-State to one run in the ninth to earn the win.

Clark said he was pleased with Bock's performance.

"Brett came in and did his job," Clark said. "He did what he had to do. A couple of individuals lost their composure. We didn't execute."

"They (Missouri) hit three ground ball, and we didn't make a play."

Clark said Missouri didn't have to kill K-State to win.

"They didn't do anything to capitalize," he said. "Last night when we made a mistake, they would come back with a big hit to drive in two or three runs. Today, they continued to hit ground balls, and we would make an error."

"Going into the week, we had the second-best defensive team in the Big Eight," Clark said. "You have to go back 20 years to find as good a defensive team as this."

"We have great kids," he said. "But if this group can't play, we'll find someone who can."

Beane asked to try out for USA national team

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Wildcat point guard Anthony Beane is one of 60 collegiate players nationwide who has been invited to the 1993 USA Basketball men's national team trials May 7-8 in Chicago.

"It's certainly an honor that Anthony deserves, and it's a great opportunity for him," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "I know he will represent K-State in a fine fashion during the trials."

The invitees will be contending for positions on one of two possible USA basketball teams — the 1993 World University Games and the 1993 USA Under 22 team. The finalists will be announced on Monday, May 10.

"I love to compete," said Beane. "And the competition level is going to really high."

Beane finished the season with an average of 10.1 points a game. He dished out 4.6 assists, highest on the team and fourth-highest in the conference.

His total of 42 steals tied Vincent Jackson for tops on the team.

"I think most college coaches would watch this talent and just salivate," said George Raveling, the USA Basketball collegiate committee chair. "I believe we've assembled more than enough talent to stock the World University Games and Under 22 teams and put them in a very good position to win their competition."

Beane was a unanimous selection as the Big Eight's newcomer of the year and a first-team all-Midwest region choice by the USBWA and Basketball Times this season. And because of his knack for the last-minute heroics, he was awarded Sports Illustrated's "Mr. Clutch" award last season.

He said that it is definitely an honor to be invited but that the invitation isn't enough.

"I'm glad to be going," he said. "But I'm going out there because I do want to make the team."

"I'm just as good as any other point guard in the nation."

Other Big Eight players that have been invited to the trials are Colorado's Donnie Boyce, Steve Woodberry and Greg Ostertag of Kansas, Eric Piatkowski of Nebraska, Oklahoma's Jeff Webster and Oklahoma State's Bryant Reeves.

For Pete Herrmann, it's DECISION TIME

MIKE WELCHANS/Collegian

Herrmann: "You've just got to remember that you're suggesting, not deciding. Dana had to calm me down a couple of times. I was always up as a head coach. And you can't do that — that's not my role anymore."

Restricted-earnings coach contemplates future

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

These are days of decision for K-State assistant basketball coach Pete Herrmann.

The question is, after his first year in the Wildcat coaching ranks, can he afford — monetarily that is — to return for another?

"Zoë Baird's employees were probably making more than me," he joked.

Last summer, Herrmann took a drastic pay cut to become K-State's restricted-earnings coach. He was hired by Coach Dana Altman after being released as head coach of the Naval Academy team.

"Pete knew the financial restrictions, but he wanted to stay in basketball," Altman said. "I know it's been hard on him, but there's nothing we can do to help. The rules are the rules."

Those rules, specifically NCAA bylaw 11.02.03, limit Herrmann to an annual salary of $12,000. He may earn an additional maximum of $4,000 for work during summer basketball camps.

But the drastic salary cut that the 44-year-old Herrmann took to coach at K-State has meant more than monetary hardship. It has also spelled separation.

His wife, Sharon, kept her job in Annapolis, Md., as a teacher to pay the family bills.

"I've tried to stay very even-keeled though all of this," Herrmann said. "I tried to do that even when I was fired at Navy. I tried not to get too low."

"I just said, 'I'll get a good coaching job now. That will be my goal.' And I got that good coaching job here. It took awhile, but even during that period — during May, June, part of July — I tried not to get too upset, depressed, or too discouraged."

But the distance took its toll during the season, with the worst moments coming when K-State had big wins.

"Beating Oklahoma here, winning against Temple decisively, beating Iowa State — those are the games you're really excited about the progress that the players are making," Herrmann said.

"Sharon's always been a part of the success or failure the teams have had. My happiness is tempered because she's not enjoying it, too."

After taking the job at K-State, Herrmann moved into a Manhattan apartment with the team's new video/film coordinator, Brian Fish, a graduate student in education.

"With all the positives that K-State has had, and the players have had this year, I think it's eased the pain of the Navy situation a bit for him," Fish said.

"The only thing that has kept the Navy situation around is the inability to get Sharon out here. But he's told me he's happier here than he has been for a long time."

► ROYALS SCORE RUN IN 9TH TO TOP BLUE JAYS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Greg Gagne streaked home from second base on Kevin McReynolds' infield single with two outs in the ninth inning and the Kansas City Royals beat the Toronto Blue Jays 6-5 Wednesday night for their third straight victory.

Gagne opened the inning with a single off Mike Timlin (0-1) and stole second, and George Brett was intentionally walked with two outs.

McReynolds hit a grounder up the middle and Luis Sojo, making his first start of the season at shortstop, stopped the ball behind second. Sojo's throw to first base was high and Gagne never broke stride, sliding home and scoring ahead of the throw.

Jeff Montgomery (1-0) pitched one hitless inning for the victory.

The Royals tied it at five in the eighth when Wally Joyner led off with a double, was sacrificed to third by Brent Mayne and scored on Keith Miller's single against Timlin. Miller, who had two hits, came off the disabled list earlier in the day.

Toronto's Jack Morris failed to win his first game of the year. He gave up four runs on eight hits in six innings, and his record remained 0-3. He began the day with a 17.18 ERA.

► CAT WATER SKI TEAM TO COMPETE IN LAWRENCE

The Wildcat water ski team will compete in its first tournament of the spring this weekend at the KU Spring Fling in Lawrence.

Skipp Wefald will act as the team's coach

THEATRE

Actors put new twist on Hamlet characters

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL

Collegian

Despair, courage, love, death, hate, life. Sounds like something a faithful viewer might see in the latest episode of a favorite soap opera.

But anyone can find all of these universal elements in Shakespeare's play, "Hamlet," which the K-State Theatre Group will re-open tonight and run through Saturday.

Although the play may conjure thoughts of tedious, wordy monologues from a long-forgotten era, the play can reach more people than some viewers may expect.

"I didn't want to go in there acting as the Master Thespian," Kevin Kelly, senior in theater, who plays Hamlet, said. "The part evolves from me and my ideas of Hamlet."

Even though Kelly has had experience with roles in other Shakespearean plays, he said the play's director gave him a list of books about Hamlet and the play's history, and he observed four different film versions.

"I didn't want to be a carbon copy of someone else's Hamlet. I wanted a subdued Hamlet but with energy. Not too exuberant but not wishy-washy either," he said.

Kelly said he feels he wanted Hamlet to be a normal, run-of-the-mill guy and that what happens to his character in the play could happen to anyone.

The fear of performing in a Shakespearean play can also evoke apprehension in the actor.

Duane Brown, who plays Laertes, said this was not the first time he has done Shakespeare, but he always had the fear of doing it even while he was doing it.

But he said he feels the director, Charlotte MacFarland, helped calm his nerves about performing as Laertes.

"She said there are many ways to do each role and no one is wrong — so make it your own," Brown said.

"I got over my fear of that thanks to her."

As for watching the play, Brown said he feels Shakespeare wrote about people in general, and despite what people think, it is as much to do with modern society.

"The politics that involve the royalty of Denmark in the play may be compared to what's going on with Charles and Diana today," Brown said.

Creating Ophelia as a more significant character was also the goal of Erin McGinnis, senior in theater. She had read Hamlet from a set of Shakespearean volumes that her theater-loving grandfather gave her when she was nine years old. She said she had wanted to play Ophelia since then.

She said in the past, the character has been presented as an airhead who didn't have a clue and kind of just wandered around on stage.

"I tried to make her as real as possible. She's young, confused, torn. I want people to look at her and say, 'that's a real teenager' and not 'oh, look, she's pretty.' She's totally aware of what's going on," McGinnis said.

The universality Shakespeare uses in his play may be overshadowed by the eloquent language he used.

"It's so powerful, so many different scandals," McGinnis said.

"Shakespeare was a bawdy writer. Double entendres, sexual jokes, how can it be boring?"

For some viewers the lines of the play may be its most imposing quality.

"Too many people get scared of the so-called 'higher form' of the language. But people should realize the language isn't something one should be afraid of," Valerie Marsh, graduate student in theater, said.

Some of the actors said they hope that people will come see the play will be affected by their version of "Hamlet."

"A lot of people are intimidated about Shakespeare just like a lot of people don't like ballet or opera," Robert McMaster, graduate student in theater, said.

"They think they have to speak four languages or something. I hope they leave there, and even though there's some flowery language, know that it was a good play and will see it again."

REVIEW

Judybats play Lawrence

MEGANNE MOORE

Collegian

"No One You Know" passed through Lawrence Tuesday night, or so the destination display on the tour bus read.

On the road promoting their latest release, "Pain Makes You Beautiful," the Judybats played to an enthusiastic crowd of more than 200 at Benchwarmer's Sportsbar.

Originally, the Judybats were to play with opening act Riverside at Liberty Hall, but there were not enough tickets sold for the 750-seat theater.

Chaos. The buzzphrase for the evening was, "I don't know, but we'll find out." As far as my free review passes were concerned, no one really knew what was up. Nevertheless, we were in.

Hailing from Pennsylvania, Riverside jumped into its one-hour set, playing favorites from their debut compact disc, "One."

An unknown band on a large label?

With a mere glance at the audience response to Riverside, it was clear not many, if any, had a clue who these guys were. The crowd sat motionless as concrete, with puzzled faces.

"We're aware that a lot of people haven't heard of us. We got lucky with our record label (Sire), some friends knew some friends and got us on," Glenn Kochan, bassist, said. The quartet rocked on with hits,

"Waterfall," "Mansfield Park," "Galaxie" and "General Nature."

They have less acoustic appeal live than on their CD. Much to their dismay, they are forever compared to The Ocean Blue, but this performance enabled them to prevail over the comparison.

EARTH WEEK

Forum examines wind power

CORI CORNELISON

Collegian

The celebration of Earth Week continued with a forum on conserving energy Wednesday night in Union 212.

Wind, nuclear and solar energy were discussed.

Gary Johnson, professor of electrical and computer engineering, focused on wind, one of the most available natural resources.

The ideal for Kansas is to build wind turbines with the amount of wind resource available, he said.

"Kansas has wind resource 34 times the amount of electricity we presently consume here," he said.

Johnson said installing wind turbines has many advantages.

Some these advantages are that it does not give off sulfur dioxide, and would save 90 to 175 million trees.

Bruce Snead, residential energy specialist with engineering extension, focused on the more common form of energy — solar — and attempted to provide answers concerning the efficiency of energy.

"We need to understand the big energy-source picture," he said.

Part of understanding the energy-source picture begins with investing in energy efficiency and conservation, Snead said. Kansas ranks last in renewable energy development among other states.

Leadership and commitment from the government and legislators can help make renewable energy more obtainable, he said.

Dean Eckhoff, head of the nuclear engineering department, addressed the more debatable source of nuclear energy.

"Nuclear is probably the most concentrated form of energy we know," he said. "The fears are unreal."

There is no risk concerning nuclear-energy disposal, he said — the handling of nuclear waste represents highly trained people with the finest minds.

All three panelists said in order for the world to become more energy sufficient, it is going to have to start with the people.

"It's our problem, and we need to solve it," Snead said.

Wingert calls election 'big-time loss' for students said. "The sun's going to rise tomorrow."

The crowd fell silent. Many put their hands to their heads, lost in thought.

Wingert and Peterson left the apartment together, leaving the gathered supporters to relish the campaign.

"I realize that Skoog may at first have been joking," Kevin Suderman, freshman in animal science, said. "When he came in last week, he was really serious, and it was a tough campaign."

"I feel glad for Ed, but I still feel remorse that Fred and Jeff weren't able to take office."

Many of the supporters did not wish to comment on the election.

Those who did said they felt the outcome was difficult to accept.

"It makes you feel like each of us could've done a lot more," Larry Whipple, senior in agricultural economics, said. "Everyone put their all into it."

Whipple said he was disappointed that a revelation in last night's candidate debate at Goodnow Hall did not become an issue.

Eric Henry, student body vice president-elect, will go before the Senate Operations Committee today for having three or more unexcused absences from Student Senate meetings.

The committee will conduct a hearing to determine if the absences warrant impeachment proceedings, to be conducted by Senate.

As the crowd of supporters dwindled, Wingert and Peterson reappeared, their faces stoic.

Wingert, his eyes red, said the election was a disappointment, not only for their campaign, but for the student body.

"I think the election was a big-time loss for the students," he said. "I think if you stick around over the next 12 months, you'll see why."

"I guess the only thing to say now is that Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson have more going for them now than their opponents ever will," Wingert said.

Peterson shared Wingert's pride in their campaign effort.

"I guess I've always had the philosophy that out of everything negative comes something positive," Peterson said. "I hope something positive comes out of this for K-State."

"I feel like Fred and Jeff haven't lost, but the students have lost."

Wingert declined to say if he would throw his hat in the ring a third time.

"I'm just really thrilled to have run with Jeff," Wingert said. "People who vote against Jeff get what they ask for."

CAMPUS

Forum addresses harassment

Different views about workplace ethics discussed; some say creating a sterile environment is key

Sexual harassment is a problem on this campus, and it is worse than many of us know, Carol Eichman, University employee, said.

The issue of sexual harassment in the workplace was discussed and debated Wednesday at a forum in Seaton Hall.

Judy Roland, secretary for the Department of Interior Architecture, organized the forum after receiving calls concerning this issue.

"Since I started this, I've had numerous people from all over campus call to tell me that it happens all the time, and absolutely nothing is being done," she said.

Others from the audience expressed the same views.

"I have this terrible feeling that sexual harassment is a much worse problem right here on this campus than many of us even know," Eichman said.

Others, however, had different ideas. Maarten van Swaay, associate professor in the Department of Computing and Information Science, attended the event and said if people constantly have to worry about what they say and do, because of legal technicalities, the workplace will turn into a very hostile place to be.

"If we have to define human behavior by the law, we will eventually turn people into machines," he said.

Eichman disagreed.

"If most peoples' behavior was appropriate, we would never have had a need for these kinds of laws in the first place," she said.

The group also discussed the fact that most affirmative-action groups, or those who are supposed to handle sexual-harassment cases when they do happen, are funded by the state.

"I think that fact discourages people from thinking they have a snowball's chance in hell in these kind of cases. We spend more time and energy trying to cover up for the situation rather than trying to do something about it," Eichman said.

Verna Chapman Lewis, policy consultant staff assistant for the Kansas Department of Transportation of Topeka, led the discussion. She said there are a number of things people can do to eliminate sexual harassment, both as a victim and an offender.

"It is important to remember that, at work, we need to create a sterile environment as it refers to sexual harassment. You have to be careful about any type of behavior that may be misconstrued or misinterpreted," she said.

She said the best thing to do, as a victim, is tell the offender outright, the first time that it happens, that you are offended. Beyond that, people should make sure they are not offending others with excessive compliments, remarks or body language.

"In the case of sexual harassment, an ounce of prevention is worth a ton of cure," Lewis said.

February 17. They announced their candidacy with the ease of those who know they're the first. The first to publicly state their platforms and ideas for the upcoming student body presidential and vice presidential election, Charles Walters and Ian Bautista.

That day, they focused on communication, multiculturalism and parking, but as the campaign progressed, they became the champions of student housing reform.

Their campaign achieved other firsts and differed in many aspects from the seven other tickets that eventually declared. Both Walters and Bautista are non-traditional students raising children.

The campaign brought student housing reform into the limelight for the first time, and Walters said a record number of international students and non-traditional students voted. That's something Walters is proud of.

He's also proud of the fact his campaign team came from diverse backgrounds.

grinning sheepishly.

Perhaps he was nervous — so, he complained a bit. He said he was somewhat disappointed in the student body. Their campaign was issued oriented, he said, but it seemed students just wanted sound bites.

"Housing reform," Walters asked. "How do you make that into a sound bite?"

He was silent and thought for a moment, then he pulled a sound bite from another campaign.

"Free basketball tickets," he yelled, waving his arms in the air.

"I didn't see much of him," Wendy Walters said. They married in 1991 and have a two-year-old daughter, Christina. "He wouldn't come home until real late at night."

However, she was an integral part of the campaign and didn't feel left behind, she said.

"Charles and I have known each other for six years," Wendy said. "So, I don't need to see him every minute of the day. I know he's there."

She talked with him in the morning before classes, she said, and tried to wait up for him at night.

Although Christina didn't see much of her father, Wendy said she took her to some of the debates.

"She always wanted to know where her daddy was. So, I took her to see," Wendy said.

But keeping a two year old up late was not always possible.

"There is a difficulty in keeping a two year old on a schedule," Charles said. "There were times we said, what the heck, bring her along. It's funny, that's one of the things you have to factor in when planning a campaign schedule."

"She did wear a button to day care every day," he laughed.

She also attended a press conference. Charles kept her out of day care for a day to spend time with her but had to attend a press conference.

"I kept her home with me. I wanted to see her," he said. "She kind of waved a flag in the background."

Do they have any regrets, sacrificing family time for a campaign that didn't win? Yes and no.

"I do," Wendy said. "I regret us spending so much time on the issues and

During a late-night campaign meeting a week before the election, Walters ponders his position and the organization of his campaign staff.

"Hi, I'm Charles Walters and I'm running for student body president."

It was about 40 degrees that Tuesday, the first day of the election. The sky was a steely gray and a damp drizzle fell from the sky. This added up to damp handouts and cold, numb fingers, which make campaigning difficult.

But Walters said he wanted the students, who came in floods between classes and spurts otherwise, to make an informed decision. So, he kept handing cards out, long after someone from his campaign was supposed to have relieved him, and long after he could have escaped to the warmth of the K-State Union.

"Don't take this wrong, but I feel like I'm prostituting myself," he said,

On election night, Walters' running-mate, Ian Bautista, and his girlfriend, Elsa Diaz, share a kiss as Charles, right, reflects moments after receiving the news that they had not made it into the run-off election.

At home in Jardine Terrace Apartments, Charles helps his wife, Wendy, prepare an evening meal. The couple are both full-time students and parents, and Charles is a mayor of Jardine.

Kevin Gigot, senior in mechanical engineering, guides a baja buggy through some ruts in the bike trails at the Tuttle Creek Reservoir spillway during a test run before traveling this week to El Paso, Texas. The buggy is the Society of Automotive Engineering's entry into a regional contest.

Members of the Society of Automotive Engineering are out to win a baja buggy race this weekend at the University of Texas, El Paso.

More than 800 hours of research and development were put into preparing for the competition, which will run Thursday through Saturday, said Jeff Colwell, senior in mechanical engineering and president of SAE.

Colwell, Kevin Gigot, senior in mechanical engineering and team captain, and Tom Darnell, senior in mechanical engineering, will be in El Paso. Four other students will accompany the group.

On Thursday, the group will be judged on their production cost report presentation, sales presentation and quality of workmanship.

Darnell said the cost report is a production budget for the manufacturing of 4,000 of the vehicles.

Performance events will take place Friday. The buggy will be judged on an acceleration run of 150 feet, how fast it can make it to the top of a hill and how fast it can maneuver around a course set with cones.

The final competition is the four-hour endurance race on Saturday.

Darnell said 60 cars will compete. However, the results of past races have shown that 50 percent will not make it halfway through the race.

"It is extremely rough terrain," he said. "It is a 2-1/2-mile track equipped with boulder-sized rocks, washed out gullies and rocky hills."

Both Colwell and Darnell are optimistic about winning.

"If the endurance race goes well, we hope to place in the top five," Colwell said.

Darnell said he thinks they are going to win.

"We have been prepared for the last three months and are now cleaning up the last details, which most of the time you never even get to," he said. "We are organizing our spare parts and preparing plans of attack in case something goes wrong."

Darnell said every buggy must be equipped with the standard eight-horsepower Briggs and Stratton motor, which could not be modified. No faculty involvement in the research or building of the buggy was allowed. Raw materials and money were donated by sponsors.

Colwell said this is the third year K-State has participated in the event.

Greenhouse effect makes Earth livable

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

The greenhouse makes Earth a place where life can exist, Carl Bender, professor of physics at Washington University in St. Louis, said while speaking on the greenhouse effect Wednesday in Cardwell 102.

"It's extremely good that there is such a thing as the greenhouse effect. I like the greenhouse effect. It makes the earth livable," Bender said.

Without the greenhouse effect, the Earth would be zero degrees Fahrenheit, but with it, the Earth is 59 degrees Fahrenheit.

He said the real problem is, human beings carry out activities that produce greenhouse gases. Examples of these gases are freon, methane and carbon dioxide, which is the most important greenhouse gas.

Bender said 1,000 years ago the concentration of carbon dioxide in the air was fairly constant. Since the Industrial Revolution, however, activities such as coal burning and clearing forests for farming have caused the level of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere to keep rising.

Forests are cleared at the rate of one acre per second worldwide, he said.

Actual burning of the forests is causing the production of carbon dioxide, Bender said.

The solution to the problem is to chop down the trees, grind them, put them in a coal mine and leave them there, he said.

The present level of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere is 752 gigatons, and it is increasing at the rate of three gigatons per year because of the activities of the ocean, plants and people, he said.

The concentration of carbon dioxide increases with population growth as the demand for energy rises, he said. The average American produces 20 tons of carbon dioxide per year.

East Germany is the largest per-capita producer of carbon dioxide, followed by the United States and Canada, he said.

Greenhouse gases act like a blanket warming the earth, Bender said.

He said with the increased industrialization, it is predicted the temperature will keep rising.

There is a correlation between the rise in the level of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere and the increase in temperature.

"It is very clear that the environment we live in is changing rapidly," he said.

The effects of global warming will increase the temperature of the Earth by three degrees Fahrenheit and cause the ocean to rise one meter.

"What should we do?" he questioned.

Recycling is not the answer because the amount of energy it saves is negligible compared to the amount of carbon dioxide produced in automobile production, he said.

It is clear that population growth is the problem, he said.

The world population increases by 100 million people per year, he said. Population has doubled in the last 40 years.

"Something is going to happen," he said.

The political leaders do not understand the problem and cannot produce a meaningful solution, he said.

Solutions such as an increase in the price of gasoline, a baby tax and a driving tax are solutions he would suggest, he said.

Earth Day at Sunset Zoo promotes recycling

The zoo also will be taking aluminum cans for recycling. There will be recycling stations set up on Saturday, but the zoo recycles all year long.

"We always recycle," Johnson said.

"And then we take the money from the cans and use it to buy things to improve the zoo, or we purchase land in the rain forest."

Johnson said they have all kinds of promotions this year to celebrate the zoo's 60th anniversary. One is the give-away of a Jeep Isuzu.

Even though this may not appear to further the environmental cause, it may create an interest in conservation, Johnson said.

"Every month we have a special event for our anniversary," Johnson said.

"All of them don't go with conservation, but we hope to get them to the zoo and there they can learn about conservation."

Assistant coaching took adjustment for Herrmann

But it took time for Herrmann to adjust to bachelor living again.

"There was a transition period there for them — September, October, November — that they spent a lot of time at the house," Altman said of Herrmann and Fish. "After that, he and Fish kind of got comfortable living together. But we still see him regularly, and he still stops over to eat."

"And he's a good eater."

Going from the head coach at Navy to an assistant at K-State also took some adjustment for Herrmann.

"The first couple games," Fish said, "He'd jump up and want to say something, and I'd grab him by the pant leg and say, 'Ho, Pete. This isn't our team.' It would get kind of comical."

"You've just got to remember that you're suggesting, not deciding," Herrmann said. "Dana had to calm me down a couple of times. I was always up as a head coach. And you can't do that — that's not my role anymore."

But his role in getting the team prepared to play was what impressed K-State's players the most this season.

"When he introduced himself to me, he had already watched a lot of film on us," forward Aaron Collier said. "He told me what were my strong points as a player, and what I really needed to do to become a better player."

"He scouted a lot of teams, watched their players and told us really what to look for, and that was really beneficial for us this year. He really did a lot for this team."

Herrmann has said that the best job for him is the one he has today.

"My job this season was really pure basketball. Help the players be better individually, and help the players get ready for competition as a team.

"That was the main thrust of my job, and as a teacher, there's nothing better," he said. "And the players succeeded, which made it even more fun. I hope something can be worked out so I can be at K-State."

But the financial aspects of working at K-State have driven Herrmann to look at other possibilities.

A few weeks ago, his name was mentioned as a possibility for the open head-coaching position at North Carolina-Asheville.

"I want what's best for Coach Herrmann," Altman said. "If he can find another job, one that financially provides for he and his family, then he's got to take it."

Herrmann will go with the team on their seven-game exhibition trip through Scandinavia in May but will fly back early to see his daughter, Lisa, graduate from San Diego State.

"I miss the girls," Herrmann said. "They're big fans, and they're big K-State fans."

"Lisa's married to a good guy, and the biggest thing now is to get Sharon here, and get settled in, provided they make any adjustments in the restricted earnings rule."

Herrmann said that the NCAA commission met last week to discuss the restricted earnings rules, but no action is expected in the near future.

And if there are no adjustments at all made in the off-season, will he return for another year in the Wildcat coaching fold?

"I honestly don't know," he said. "It's doubtful — it's very doubtful."

"Living apart from your wife for a whole year is one thing, but to try to do it for two years — that's just not a good situation."

Skoog, Henry give credit to supporters talked to a crowd of supporters and photographers, and his eyes spoke volumes.

"Everything mattered," Skoog said. "Everyone we talked to, everything we did. You look over at absolutely everything we did and realize it was crucial."

But the pair were quick to give credit to their campaign team.

"They did all the work," said Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications. "There's nothing to walking around and blabbing about issues."

"I'm proud of the work everybody's done," Skoog said.

Skoog also gave credit to the other students who ran in the race.

"I don't think we could have made it this week without the support and research of the other 10 people running for this race," Skoog said.

"Fred and Jeff ran a great race," Henry added. "They're good people."

Skoog called his parents when some of the excitement had worn down a little. He said his parents congratulated him but hoped the job won't interfere with his studies.

A campaign supporter broke into the conversation and expressed his enthusiasm for Skoog.

"Everybody likes Ed," Eric Melin said. "He's a good guy, and we trust him very much. A lot of people helped him by telling everybody they knew about him."

Skoog smiled.

"This is a recognition from off campus and people in the residence halls and greets that there is a lot of work to be done on campus and on the University," Skoog said.

He said he was also pleased Henry was elected, because he is a non-traditional student.

"I think that's remarkable," Skoog said.

Waiting on election day was nerve-racking, Henry said.

"You know, when you're up against such stiff competition as Fred and Jeff, you've got good reason to be nervous," Henry said.

"It has been a treat to campaign against two guys like this. Jeff is as fine a guy as I've ever met. He really is a fine guy. Fred is the consummate politician, articulate speaker, a nice fellow. This doesn't mean Fred Wingert has to stop being a voice of students at K-State."

Getting elected was one of the nicest surprises Henry has had in a long time, he said.

"I feel honored and excited to get to work," Henry said.

And how does Skoog feel about being elected?

"Elated. You know how they say before you die your whole life flashes before your eyes. Well, my whole college life flashed before my eyes," Skoog said.

He said he remembered moving into Marlatt as a freshman and living in a "rat trap" off campus his sophomore year. He said he thought of all the people he's known that have moved away or dropped out of school.

"I thought of all the work we've done," Skoog said. "And all the people we've met, whether they agreed with me on this or not."

"Peace, love and happiness."

Judybats bring crowd to frenzy in Lawrence

About six songs later, 10 brave souls baptized the clean, shiny dance floor and were joined by another 100 when the Judybats finally hit the stage at 11:15.

Headlining the set with upbeat songs "All Day Afternoon," "Incredible Bittersweet" and "Geography," the Judybats sparked the crowd to rush to the stage for more.

The crowd barely stopped to gasp, only to be slammed with more adrenalin.

Animated vocalist Jeff Heiskell entertained the crowd with his amusing anecdotes between songs.

"I hate it when my Gap shirt comes untucked out of my Gap jeans — I bet none of you out there are wearing any Gap," he said.

The audience screamed in response.

The Judybats played the favorite, "Ugly On The Outside," which includes lyrics that are probably true in Heiskell's case.

"You step up to the microphone and lots of people want to take you home but you don't even like the way I sing/baby I think that's the sweetest thing."

Slowing down for one lighter-sounding, sentimental song, "Wasting Time" was one of the closers before the encore song.

Wrapping this party up, the Judybats dedicated their last song to a high-school girl, who apparently had really big hair.

The tune, "I Want to F Your Hair," was basically about this guy who liked girls with fluffy, luxurious locks.

Walters works to define issues affecting students not campaigning."

Charles explained what he thought she meant.

"Our campaign team spent two months solely on research. We had a well-thought-out reform agenda," Charles said. "The lesson is, by the time we finished researching what we thought were good issues, we looked around and all the senators and people who worked on campaigns were already aligned with other candidates."

"I'm really proud of the work we did. I don't have any regrets, so to speak."

He and Ian like to take credit for defining the issues, Charles said.

"How can I have a regret? We didn't win, but we still can do a lot of things without being president," he said. Charles has spoken with the two remaining candidates, and both have vowed to try implementing his student-reform agenda.

"My involvement did not end last Wednesday," Charles said. But last Wednesday, the day they lost the election, was not easy for him, he said.

"The hardest thing I've ever had to do in my entire life was keeping a straight face when the phone call came, and turning to those 30 supporters who had worked for three months and telling them we didn't make it," he said softly.

The drizzle had let up some, but it was still cold.

"How are you doing? Have you voted already?" he asked passersby.

A group of international students walked by and called, "We voted for you," Walters smiled.

"It's been stressful on our family," he admitted. "We haven't had the time to spend with our daughter we'd like."

What else has been hard about the campaign?

"One of the hardest things is getting used to the fact people can be apathetic," he said, returning to an earlier theme. "I guess I was naive."

This apathy is demonstrated when a student takes a card and passes by, without saying a word or stopping to talk with Walters.

"What do they learn when they do that?" Walters asked. "That's hard for me. But I play the game, because I have to."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

I repeat, any harassment is wrong!

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a small problem. I am a very cheerful person. I was raised to believe grudges and bad feelings are unhealthy. I can put up with almost anything. However, there are some things I feel very strongly about. My cheerful attitude has become sort of a joke in my wing of the dorm.

Recently, my roommate and several of the others on the floor began to talk about the issues they know I feel strongly about. They have told me to my face that they are just trying to make me angry to see what I would do. It has gotten to the point of being harassment, and I have to struggle to keep from losing my temper.

My problem is, how do I get them to stop behaving like this before our friendship is completely lost? I'm not sure what I would do if I lost my temper (my brother gets very violent), and I would like to be able to look back on these people in the future and think of them as friends.

Sincerely,

Getting Frazzled

DEAR FRAZZLED,

You want to look back on them as friends? You have got to be kidding me. What kind of friends are they that they deliberately try to provoke you? That's the question you need to be asking.

It's good that you do try to keep your cool. Too often, people don't bother to exercise a little control on their mouths. Sometimes, though, a little temper tantrum can ease tensions. It might not ease the tension between you and your dorm friends, but it might ease some of your stress. If you keep things bottled up, you won't be able to stop yourself from losing your temper.

This is not a simple case of ignoring the bullies until they get tired of the game. Walking away from the fight is exactly what they are trying to keep you from doing, and talking about the subjects in a rational manner will not work either. They will keep saying the exact things that will make you angry because that is their goal.

One thing you might try to tell them is that your opinions on those subjects are unchanged; so, why should you fight about them? Then tell them the only thing they will succeed in getting you mad about is their treatment of you.

If they want to be your friends, then they had better stop provoking you. After all, are they willing to lose your friendship for the sake of proving a point?

If this doesn't work, and you feel like you can't control your temper any longer, go to your room and hit your pillow. At least it's a harmless way to blow off some steam.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

This is in response to a letter submitted by the female-hall resident named "concerned". Having a guy living in the hall can be very uncomfortable. It also violates some of the rights of the female residents.

My suggestion to her would include more than just talking to her hall director. The best thing she can do is document every incident where she sees the gentleman going somewhere he shouldn't, doing something he shouldn't or staying past hours.

In a K-State residence hall, any student can document, or "write up," anybody else for actions they see as inappropriate. The next time she sees any guy in the bathroom, all she has to do is go to her front desk, ask for an incident report form, fill it out and turn it in. She or any of her friends who are tired of this guy and the actions of his girlfriend can fill this form out. It will be a much better way to solve the problem.

I'm sure your residence adviser wants to help, but she cannot do anything unless she sees misconduct. Living in the residence halls means taking on some of the responsibilities for your living environment.

A concerned R.A.

DEAR R.A.,

Thanks for your suggestion. Sometimes the best solutions come from just simply knowing what your rights are.

Election results protested

BRIEFLY

A complaint was filed requesting a new election because polls were not open in the Veterinary Medicine Complex during the times published in the Collegian.

WADE SISSON

Collegian

Wednesday's election for student body president and vice president might be conducted once more.

A formal complaint lodged Thursday night by Mike Ford, veterinary medicine senator-elect, requested a new election.

The complaint is that polls at the Veterinary Medicine Complex were not open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., as reported in the Collegian on election day.

"We feel our 375 students were not given accurate information and consequently were not able to be involved in the election of the next student body president," the report stated.

Signed by members of K-State's American Veterinary Medical Association chapter, the complaint requests another election for the College of Veterinary Medicine on Wednesday, April 28 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"We don't feel we had an opportunity to vote because the election was held at a time that was not reported in the Collegian," Ford said.

Mary Farmer, 1993-94 Student Governing Association Elections Committee chairperson, said polls at the complex did not open until after 1 p.m.

"There was no one to man it at that point in time," Farmer said.

An SGA Constitution by-law states that polls at the complex must be open for two consecutive hours.

"We had no committee members that could be there from 11 to 1 for a two-hour block."

Farmer said committee members were sent to the complex as soon as she learned polls at the complex were closed. Those polls remained open from 1:15 to 3:45 p.m.

The complaint states an SGA by-law, which calls for the release of candidate lists, election regulations, date of election and voting procedures to campus media, was violated.

"The Collegian reported that polling places would be set-up in the Vet-med Complex from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.," the complaint states. "We, as Vet-med students, expected, because of this by-law, that this was accurate information, and in fact it was not."

Election committee members were unable to explain how the incorrect information was obtained by the Collegian.

The complaint also states a precedent was set in that no signs publicizing the election were in the complex this year.

Addressing Student Senate last night, Farmer said the committee will conduct a hearing on the matter today at 9:30 a.m.

Farmer said the committee has three options: let Wednesday's election results stand, have an election exclusively for veterinary medicine students or conduct another campus-wide election.

"The opinion of those on my committee is that that's not fair (having an election exclusively for the College of Veterinary Medicine)," Farmer said. "If there's a run-off, it should be for the whole campus."

If only veterinary medicine students vote, they would have information that wasn't available to Wednesday's voters, Farmer said.

If the complainants are not Pushing promises

Scott Wissman, senior in pre-med, is joined by his former running mate, Scott Truhlar, senior in pre-med, in doing 93 push-ups in front of the K-State Union Thursday afternoon. Wissman and Truhlar took 30 minutes to fulfill their campaign promise of doing as many push-ups as they got votes during the general election held last week.

Members of the crowd sang the K-State fight song, and began chanting Skoog and Henry to help the duo's spirit while they squeezed out the very last push-ups.

Both Truhlar and Wissman expressed gratitude for those who didn't vote for them.

Senate passes several bills

SGA constitution amended, Lafene hours modified

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Two bills were moved from first readings into special orders in Student Senate Thursday.

The bills addressed the K-State-Salina constitution and special election regulations. Both bills were passed.

The first bill approved the K-State-Salina constitution and by-laws to promote increasing unity between the College of Technology and K-State.

The special election regulations bill affects the last position of arts and sciences senator. There will be a special election on April 27-28 in the K-State Union to elect the last position.

A resolution that modifies the operation hours at Lafene Health Center was passed by unanimous consent.

This resolution changes Lafene's regular hours to Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., including the noon hour. Extended general medical clinic hours will be Monday through Friday, 4:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m. and Saturday, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

The extended general medical clinic hours include a physician on duty in the facility, an open pharmacy, medical records and cashiers/insurance, and laboratory and X-ray personnel on call with no after-hours charge.

This resolution eliminates after-hours charges, currently $8, charges to call in a physician, laboratory personnel and X-ray personnel, all with current charges of $15.

Also passed by unanimous consent was a bill that amends the Student Governing Association's constitution to be more specific when addressing a senator's primary college.

A special allocation to the K-State water ski team of $925 was passed. This allocation allows the water ski team to purchase women's jump skis, a required safety helmet and a new trick rope.

A bill that would allocate $4,925 to SGA for the purchase of bike racks, sign and bike route maps was killed because it violates the SGA standing rules.

"It must be a special, unique, nonrecurring expense," said Rachel Smith, arts and sciences senator and junior in English.

Steffany Carrel, arts and sciences senator and sophomore in journalism and mass communications, was appointed as the chair

Medical examiner disputes report

Doctor says there's no evidence of cultists being shot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Investigators began removing bodies from the burned-out rubble of the Branch Davidian compound Thursday as the top medical examiner disputed earlier federal assertions that some of the victims had been shot.

"We heard rumors ... that there were several people who might have shot themselves or who had been shot," said Dr. Nizam Peerwani, who heads the Tarrant County medical examiner's office in Fort Worth. "There is absolutely no evidence of that as far as we are concerned at this stage."

Carl Stern of the Justice Department in Washington said Wednesday at least three bodies suffered gunshots. That raised speculation that cult members may have committed suicide or been shot by other cultists before Monday's fire that ended the 51-day standoff.

"I am not sure where they received that information," Peerwani said.

Stern on Thursday defended his statement, saying that Peerwani's medical team has only just started its investigation.

Cult leader David Koresh and 85 followers are believed to have died in the fire that broke out as the FBI attempted to force a surrender by using armored vehicles to punch holes and pump tear gas inside their compound. Nine survived, six of whom claim the FBI started the blaze.

The FBI says Koresh commanded a fiery mass suicide.

Peerwani said 35 bodies, most of them "soft and crumbling" have been found, including some children. But, he said, none have been identified.

He said one body already removed and examined was a man in his 50s who died from smoke inhalation.

FOUR TELESCOPES STOLEN FROM CARDWELL HALL

Four telescopes, currently irreplaceable, have been stolen from Cardwell Hall.

Barry Adams, director of student laboratories in the physics department, said he discovered the instruments missing April 16.

The telescopes — one eight-inch Celestron and three five-inch Celestrons — were stolen from Cardwell 407, a storage room that once housed the planetarium.

Adams said the total replacement cost of the instruments is roughly $10,000.

"There is absolutely no way we could replace them right now with the current fiscal situation," he said.

Adams said the telescopes must have been stolen within the last two weeks because that was the last time the inventory was checked.

"Whoever did it really knew what they were doing," he said.

"What they'd done is taken the telescopes right out of the storage boxes and stacked the boxes neatly back in place."

"They had to have a key there was no sign of forced entry," he said.

He said the locks on the storage room were just changed in January.

Adams said there is a $100 reward for information leading to the return of the telescopes.

"Those things are fairly rare, especially the five-inch scopes," Adams said.

"We'll probably get some kind of lead on them."

Your Q. & A. About Financial Aid

Q. I've heard the financial aid office can assist if I have unusual circumstances. What does that mean?

A. The Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA) collects general information about the student/applicant. The Federal government has given financial aid administrators the right to assist families or single applicants with circumstances not considered normal or that cannot be entered on the Federal form.

Q. What type of circumstances are considered unusual?

A. The following circumstances could allow the financial aid office to make adjustments:

- If you have high medical or dental expenses that are not covered by insurance.
- If your family pays private tuition for elementary or secondary students.
- If one of the parents or the student will have reduced income or loss of income for 1993.
- If you or your parents are classified as a "dislocated" worker.
- If one or both of your parents have died.
- If your parents are divorced since you completed your Federal form.

In addition to the above, the student may have other reasons a financial aid office can make adjustments. Students or parents should write a letter explaining their unique situations for the 1993-94 award year, and send it to 104 Fairchild Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506.

Q. I've heard the Federal government considers students "dependent" for financial aid purposes until they reach 24 years of age. Is this true?

A. Yes, under the Federal definition, an independent student is one who is:

- Born before January 1, 1970.
- A veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces.
- A graduate or professional student.
- Married when filling out the Federal form.
- A ward of the court or both parents are deceased.
- Supporting a legal dependent(s) other than a spouse.
- A student for whom a financial aid administrator determines and documents the student's independent status on the basis of extenuating circumstances such as physical or emotional harm. Special circumstances that exist for an individual student rather than circumstances that exist across a class of students may also allow for an adjustment.

Q. If I am classified as dependent, whose information do I report on the Federal form?

A. If you are dependent for financial aid purposes, you must use your parents 1992 tax information. This would include a step-parent's information if part of the household. Of course, the student's 1992 information is also collected on the Federal form.

Q. It seems like the FAFSA asks for a lot of information. Is it all necessary?

A. The FAFSA collects only information critical to consider you for Federal aid programs. In most cases, the free form is the only form necessary to apply for aid from colleges, state agencies, and the Federal government. However, some colleges, private scholarship agencies, and state agencies may request further information for their non-Federal aid programs. Always check with your financial aid office to make sure. They are there to assist you.

Saving Earth daily goal of grocery co-op

KRISTEEN YOUNG

Collegian

Editor's note: This is the fourth part in a four-part series focusing on Earth Week.

Earth Day is officially over, but members and shoppers of People's Grocery Cooperative continue to do their part in saving the Earth year-round.

Jayne Link, manager for People's Grocery Co-op, said the store has been at its present location since 1985.

When it opened, there were few items on stock, and the store was only open one day a week.

"We had a curtain over the bottom shelves, and we would spread things out on the shelves so it would look full," Link said.

Now, the store is open Tuesday through Saturday, and all of its shelves are undisguisably full.

But Link said there are still a lot of people who don't know about the store or its products.

"We are one of Manhattan's well-kept secrets," Link said.

Link said one of the misconceptions people have that may scare away customers is they think membership is required to shop there. Anyone can shop at the store.

People's Grocery is a cooperative owned by 170 households. Each household owns one share of the store, and a household may consist of up to four people.

Link said by allowing each household to own only one share, no one has more control than anyone else, and the store is managed by democratic control.

Anyone can become a member and part-owner. Members must make a $100 investment per household. Then, in return, members are offered monthly discounts and may participate in electing the store's Board of Directors, as well as serve on committees for the cooperative.

The grocery store is housed near the corner of Colorado and Eighth streets in a home that has served as many different grocery stores since 1911. It offers its members and customers items they wouldn't be able to find in larger grocery chains.

The store's items, as well as its employees, promote natural foods and provide education about environmentally friendly products.

Organically grown herbs, teas and vegetables line the shelves. They sell bread from Salina that has been stone ground and baked in brick ovens. The refrigerators are stocked with specialty cheeses, meat substitutes such as vegetarian hot dogs and with eggs from chickens who are given free range rather than put into cages and mistreated at factories.

"Our customers question where our eggs come from because they don't want ones that have been mass-produced," Link said. "They don't want to contribute to the treatment of animals that are de-beaked, de-winged and put into small cages.

That is how some of the chickens exist."

But when chickens are given free range, they are allowed to eat fresh greens and scratch. Link said this is not only better for the chickens, but many of the customers claim these eggs taste better.

The People's Grocery Cooperative supports other cooperatives through buying environmental products.

The store sells a cereal called Rainforest Crisp. The cereal contains nuts that have been purchased by a non-profit organization called Cultural Survival. The organization helps tribal people and ethnic minorities defend their land and human rights.

"We also sell beauty products that are cruelty-free," Link said. "They aren't tested on animals, or they don't contain animal products."

Greg Pickerell, assistant manager for People's Grocery, said some of the most popular items are the specialty cheeses and spices. But many people come in for the organically grown products.

Link said raising products organically is a different way of taking care of the Earth and farmland. No pesticides or herbicides are involved. She said 98 percent of the store's produce is organically grown.

Selling environmentally safe products and educating customers on how they can be better aware of environmental issues is just part of People's Grocery's mission.

"Because we sell organic products, biodegradable cleaners and because we use minimal packaging and promote sustainable agriculture," Link said, "we promote Earth Day, every day."

ECM SUNDAY FORUM

THIS WEEK—APRIL 25

7 p.m.

THE PANAMA DECEPTION is the untold story of the 1989 U.S. invasion of Panama. It explores the U.S. relationship with Panama from 1903 to the present and exposes Noriega's longstanding relationship with the CIA, DEA & George Bush.

THE PANAMA DECEPTION reveals how and why mainstream media collaborated with the U.S. government to censor information and deceive the American public, and how they distorted reports about the actual devastation and human rights violations, which continue today. THE PANAMA DECEPTION shows that the invasion was not intended to achieve the officially stated goals of arresting Noriega; protecting American lives; protecting the Canal; and restoring democracy to Panama... but rather, created a structure permitting the U.S. to abrogate the Carter/Torres treaty, allowing the U.S. military to maintain bases there after the year 2000; helping Bush get over the embarrassment caused by Noriega's actions; neutralizing the recent resurgence of Panamanian nationalism; and using the invasion as an excuse and opportunity to test out new weapons.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Thank your favorite secretary

WE SUGGEST

Secretary's Week is almost over. If you haven't thanked your secretary, do it. If you have, do it again.

It's Friday. Have you thanked your secretary this week?

In case you forgot, this week — April 19-23 — is Secretary's Week. A week set aside to praise the efforts of the women and men behind the desk who are the backbone of corporations and businesses.

These people do many jobs during a day for a business. They keep records up to date, take care of business clients and other writing tasks to make a corporation work efficiently.

But instead of taking them out for lunch or giving them a bouquet of flowers, why not a present that would last a long time?

Many secretaries are people supporting a family. A gift could be a day-care plan or a health-care plan for the entire family.

Why not set up a program that would give secretaries a little more money? Give them stock in the business or set up a program to invest in bonds.

Even if it is Friday, thank your secretary with a gift of that will be cherished for a long time.

ELECTION

Casting doubts on the quality of leadership

Editor,
Isn't it now obvious that the best candidate won the student body presidential election? Fred Wingert's comments in the April 22 Collegian reinforce the notion that Wingert is just another small-time politician, void of a genuine personality and lacking any of the tact that one would suppose a person in his position would have.

Wingert's contention that "Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson have more going for them now than their opponents ever will," is as ridiculous as anyone referring to themselves in the third person.

Obviously, Ed Skoog and Eric Henry have plenty more going for them as human beings (as well as president and vice president) than Wingert will ever have, simply because honesty, genuine concern for people's welfare and an interest in improving conditions for everyone's benefit are things a self-serving junior politician will never understand.

For the first time in my five years at K-State, I feel represented. Students, consider yourselves blessed.

Apology is in order for sour election remarks

Editor,

Fred Wingert needs to start apologizing. His reaction to his loss was way out of line. What he said in the April 22 Collegian illustrates this point.

"I think the students are going to be in for a long year."

That was a very subtle way of saying Skoog and Henry will be detrimental to K-State. Fred subtly insults them again by saying "... Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson have more going for them than their opponents ever will." Fred should try to be more gracious in his defeat.

"People who vote against Jeff get what they ask for." This implies two things. First, Fred once again is saying his opponents will do a horrible job. Second, that Skoog and Henry won, not because the voters liked the duo's ideas but because we are prejudiced against Jeff.

A lot of us would have voted for Jeff. It just happens that we think Wingert would be a bad choice. His reaction proves our case.

Finally, Fred said, "I hope something positive comes out of this for K-State." Judging by Fred's actions, I know something positive came out of this: Skoog and Henry won.

Comments display no grace under pressure

Editor,

I was elated Thursday morning to see that Ed Skoog and Eric Henry had won our recent election. I felt even better about supporting their ticket after reading the disappointing comments from the loser, Fred Wingert.

"I think the election was a big-time loss for the students." Come on, Fred, everyone knows you're an absolute politician. We didn't vote against Jeff Peterson, we voted against you.

Politics have changed; you can't just run a campaign anymore, or you would have won. We even had to pay to mail ourselves fliers from you.

I wish someday that I could run for office, but I know that I have to build a history to stand on first. If you really want to go to Congress for Kansas, don't make everything a stepping stone and learn how to be graceful.

REVIEW

Writer ruined movie with tell-all review

Editor,

I want to thank Andrew Tomb. I was looking forward to viewing "The Devil's Eye," one of the few Ingmar Bergman films I have not yet seen. I now no longer need to. Andrew Tomb's review revealed the details of the film's entire story, right up to its end. So, I will no longer be enchanted by any surprises the plot has to offer.

Come on, Andrew, the purpose of a review is to either titillate or discourage the potential viewer of a film, and you don't do that by giving away what happens next.

But since you've saved me $1.75, I can honestly say I wish I'd talked to you before I watched "Presumed Innocent," "The Crying Game," "The Third Man," or "Witness for the Prosecution." You could have revealed the surprises of the plots to me, and I could have saved my money.

THE MEDIA MORBIDITY

Today, they sift through the rubble. Like old ladies at a garage sale, they're picking through the remains. "Bullets," they say, "We're finding bullets in some of the bodies, and some of the bodies are so charred we'll never be able to identify them. We have no dental records."

Wicked. They search for more and assess the costs.

They tell us the cult leader killed his own children before the fire. They tell us how, curiously enough, a mad-man's prophecy was fulfilled.

Janet Reno, a woman with a name like Las Vegas, tells us she didn't expect things to end like this.

Oops.

It's a consolation prize for the people. We expected a fire, a much bigger one, in Los Angeles. But the fuse petered out on the recent King trial. No death, no destruction.

Instead, the magnifying glass focused on a religious fanatic in rural Texas. And as the light grew brighter, the people got what they wanted.

Not everything, though:

Cameramen did not capture David Koresh on film, walking to his death with a halo of burning rock 'n' roll hair. We did not see him put that final bullet into his Texas brain.

Sick shit is nothing new to the American people, nor is the fascination associated with it. In fact, today's generation is missing out.

When I was a kid, we saw Jim Jones on television. He took 900 people with him. Count 'em, 900. And he convinced them to drink their own poison. Koresh was nothing.

And what about Charles Manson, that mass-murdering dog? He killed a pregnant woman long before we'd dreamt of such a crime.

Again, Koresh was small beans.

However, never before has the press been there anticipating mass murder. In days past, no one was camped on the sidelines in Winnebagos, waiting for death and eating Waco chili dogs. Press coverage is where Koresh broke boundaries in mass murder.

Of course, the media are necessary. Without journalists, the public would be even more misinformed. We'd be blind as both citizens and consumers.

In recent times, though, the press has felt an obligation to take us on morbid field trips.

Somalia— boy, did they help there! How about Grenada? And last year's Los Angeles riots? Did the press have any influence there?

Nah...

But let's concentrate on Koresh. Koresh, who was accused of child molestation and carrying illegal arms, was informed by a member of the press of the ATF raid. He was given air time by area radio stations to broadcast his message.

Above all, Koresh was given time to preach his vision of the apocalypse. And as ATF agents and scores of journalists surrounded the compound near the end, Koresh felt the tension mounting and perhaps felt justified in seeing his prophecy as coming true.

Instead of defusing the situation, the press helped to add dramatic tension. In the case of an obviously disturbed person such as Koresh, it wasn't such a good idea. In an effort to raise ratings, they prodded and pushed a dangerous man.

Now people are dead, and they didn't need to be. What advice, though, can we tell the media and the ATF next time they plan a field trip?

TOM LISTER

Deadly force does not a true war make

"It is impossible to live with those we regard as damned; to love them would be to hate God who punishes them; we positively must either reclaim them or torment them." — Jean Jacques Rousseau

Seventeen children died last Monday in Waco, Texas, so that the fears of the American people could be assuaged. Their crime? They had the profound misfortune to be trapped by a contest of wills between David Koresh's "crazy cult" of Branch Davidians and the collective will of the American people as manifested in the armed strength of the FBI.

Rodney King nearly paid with his life so that the rest of law-abiding America could rest safe in the knowledge that one less social deviant was loose to threaten them. His crime? King had the temerity to be a black man frightened at the prospect of facing taser and billy-club wielding Los Angeles policemen charged with enforcing the laws of the United States. A random video camera managed to capture the fulfillment of his fears.

What do these people and events have in common? They are merely the most recent and visible casualties in America's increasingly paranoid struggle with its own fears. First, we had a "War on Crime," followed by a "War on Drugs." It is no coincidence the nation's efforts to eradicate perceived deviance are couched in the rhetoric of battle.

The image of Waco that burns in my mind is not of the Bradleys knocking down walls or of the wind-fed fire that consumed the Branch Davidians but of the American flag hoisted by victorious FBI agents over the smoldering ashes of the battlefield.

What was the crime that David Koresh committed so heinous that he and those who followed him deserved to die?

Was it the weapons possession charges the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms attempted to arrest Koresh for originally? Was it the allegations of child abuse the FBI cited as one of its justifications for the operation it began last Monday?

Or was it because the behavior of the Branch Davidians fell outside what mainstream America has deemed acceptable, allowing them to be labeled deviant and therefore no longer deserving of the protection of the law?

What crime did Rodney King commit that merited his fate? Speeding? Evading arrest? Or was it because the color of his skin immediately made him a deviant in the eyes of mainstream America and his modest transgressions were more than enough to judge him criminally deviant and deserving of whatever treatment he received?

mainstream considers acceptable. Despite the massive amounts of money and resources being devoted to combat it, crime does not seem to be going away or even declining.

More black men are going to jail these days, not fewer. Everyone from rappers, to gays and lesbians, to purveyors of pornography, to environmental extremists are finding themselves further isolated by the fears of mainstream Americans. If I were Randall Terry and his merry band of Operation Rescuers, I would see the Waco disaster as a chilling warning to those that straddle the line between acceptability and deviance in this country.

The increasingly indiscriminate use of deadly force in this "war" against crime is bound to backfire. The "we had to burn the village in order to save it" explanation offered up by the FBI in Waco is no more valid than when the U.S. Army used it in Vietnam. A familiar, haunting question comes to mind: How many more casualties will there be before we figure out this war cannot be won through the use of firepower?

Drake Relays to offer Cats stiff competition

The K-State track and field teams return to action this weekend at the 84th Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa. After a good showing at the KU Relays last weekend, the squads prepare to take on a higher-caliber competition at Drake.

"There is no question that there is better competition in every event than at KU," Wildcat interim coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Because the relays are a highly competitive meet, the teams are limited in size.

"We're not taking a lot of people up there," Rovelto said. "They don't offer a lot of individual events."

Many events, Rovelto said, are by invitation only. K-State's Nicole Green will run in the women's 100-meter dash, 200-meter dash or 400-meter dash. The 200 and 400 meters are both by invitation only.

Paulette Staats is scheduled to compete in the 1,500-meter run but won't know until the team arrives in Des Moines if she will be invited.

Rovelto expects Staats to participate after her second-place finish in the event at KU.

"Paulette is running very well right now, and she's competing hard," he said.

Staats said she is ready for the challenge of high-caliber competition.

"Right now, I feel pretty good and expect to do well," she said. "It gives me a chance to see what I can do against very tough competition."

The women's team will also send an entry in the women's distance medley relay. Green will run the 400-meter leg, Irma Betancourt will run the 800 meters, Jennifer Hillier will run the 1,200 meters, and Staats will anchor with the mile leg.

"I like running the relay," Staats said. "It's all about team effort and not an individual thing."

The squad will also send several athletes in the field events, including Gwen Wentland in the high and long jumps. Wentland is coming off a second-place finish in the high jump at KU.

"Gwen had a great meet at KU," Rovelto said. "She just keeps improving."

The men will also send a distance medley relay. Chris Pryor (400), Randy Helling (800), Anthony Williams (1,200), and Francis O'Neill (mile) will compete for the Wildcats.

Also competing will be Dante McGrew in the triple jump, which he won at KU.

Included in the competition at Drake will be seven men's champions from the 1993 NCAA Indoor Championships and eight women's champions. Also slated to compete are Olympians Michael Johnson and Gwen Torrance.

Three Wildcats to play Colorado despite injuries

The Wildcat tennis team will wrap up its 1993 season at the Big Eight tournament this weekend at the Homestead Tennis Club in Prairie Village.

K-State, 6-13 overall and 3-4 in the conference, will begin the tournament today with a 9 a.m. match against Colorado — a team K-State faced just last week in Manhattan.

Coach Steve Bietau said even though the Cats lost the match 7-2, it may have been to K-State's advantage.

"We had a lot of close matches against Colorado," he said. "I think our players left that match feeling like, 'That is the team we have a chance to win against if we can play a little better.'"

Five of the matches against Colorado were three sets.

The late season and recent tough match-ups have taken a toll on the team.

Three players are nursing injuries, but still plan to play today. Susana Labrador, Martine Shrubsole and Evelia Alvarez have minor injuries that won't prevent them from playing, Bietau said.

"The injuries are something you expect after four tough matches in a week," Bietau said. "But we've had a fairly light week to get everybody rested and ready to go."

Susana Labrador, the team's No. 1 seed, said she is ready to play.

"I'm injured right now, and I'm not practicing very much. But yes I'm going to play," she said. "Obviously, it's not good to be injured. You don't know how your body is going to respond."

But Labrador said she doesn't plan on dwelling on her injuries.

"Putting attention on our injuries will do us no good," she said. "This is our last show."

Suzanne Sim, who defeated her last Colorado opponent, said the match will be a tough one.

"I think it will be a real close match," she said. "It will be our third match, and hopefully we can beat them this time. I think we're going to have a lot of confidence going into this one."

"Hopefully," Sim repeated, "We can beat them this time."

The Wildcats are the fifth seed in the tournament, and Colorado is No. 4.

"We need to finish as high as we can," Sim said. "We start doing that by beating Colorado and continue from there."

And beating Colorado, Bietau said, is just the first step.

"We have two goals right now," he said. "We want to beat Colorado. And we want to place as high as we can in the Big Eight."

Kentucky football player shoots self during game of Russian roulette

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. — A University of Kentucky football player was in critical condition after shooting himself in the head Thursday while playing a form of Russian roulette.

Ted Presley, 22, a junior from Hopkinsville, is being treated at the University of Kentucky Medical Center.

Presley, a walk-on, fourth-string cornerback, was shot shortly before 11:50 a.m. Thursday in the dormitory, school spokesman Ralph Derrickson said.

Kentucky football players gathered at the hospital's emergency room Thursday morning and later at the E.J. Nutter Center to pray for their teammate.

"We are all stunned," Kentucky football coach Bill Curry said in a statement. "Our entire football family has been grieving about this situation since the first instant."

Presley was shot while he and his roommate, Jason Smith, 21, also of Hopkinsville, were playing a form of Russian roulette they called "chicken," Derrickson said. A bullet was placed in one of the chambers of a six-shot revolver, and the second time the gun was passed to Presley, the weapon fired.

None of the others involved in the game was a football player, university officials said.

The incident is being investigated as an accidental shooting, and no charges had been filed Thursday, Derrickson said. However, he said university policy forbids firearms on campus. It is not yet clear who owned the gun.

K-State drops 3rd straight

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Wildcat baseball team lost its third game in a row — and fifth in seven games — Thursday afternoon, falling to the Creighton Bluejays 6-3 in Omaha, Neb.

K-State fell to 13-22 on the season, while Creighton improved its overall mark to 23-15. The Bluejays are 6-2 against Big Eight teams this season.

Wildcat starting pitcher Kevin Wicker got roughed up, giving up six runs and seven hits in five innings of play. He gave up four runs in the first two innings, and K-State couldn't make up the difference.

Defensively, the Cats had two more errors, bringing their total for the last three games to 16.

Offensively, K-State's bats were silent until the eighth inning. Bluejay starter Brian Fabeber shut out the Cats for seven innings, giving up just two hits.

Fabeber was relieved in the eighth inning, and Brian Culp ended the shutout by hitting his team-high ninth home run — a three-run shot that also drove in Tim Decker and Adam Green.

The lone bright spot for the Cats was relief pitcher Jake Voos, a freshman, who pitched three scoreless innings to close out the game. He gave up just one hit, struck out two and didn't walk anybody.

The Wildcats continue Big Eight play with a three-game series this weekend against Oklahoma State at Frank Myers Field.

K-State and Oklahoma State first play a 7:30 game tonight and will continue the series with a 2 p.m. Saturday game and a 1 p.m. Sunday contest.

Robinson ruining Royals

Is the pressure on for Hal McRae? ESPN reported Sunday night that McRae's job is on the line, depending on how the Kansas City Royals perform in their current homestand.

Royals General Manager Herk Robinson on Monday gave the standard "He's our man" reply, which usually means that the reports of McRae's demise as the Royals' bench boss are true.

Monday night, I sat back and contemplated everything that has happened since that fateful night in the fall of 1985. We all know the play — Jorge Orta called safe when he was clearly out on an infield single, and the Royals went on to win the game and the World Series.

Since that time, the boys in blue have seen one manager get cancer (Dick Howser less than a year later), one recycled good ol' boy (Billy Gardner), a couple of interim bosses and two longtime Royal teammates struggle as the manager.

And as I look at all of that, I see the problems that have befallen the Royals being blamed on the managers.

But the real problem isn't in the dugout — it's in the front office.

Back in the late '70s and early '80s, when the Royals put their best teams on the field, the farm system was the anchor of the club.

Willie Wilson, George Brett, Amos Otis and a host of others all had gone through the Royals farm system. Frank White was the most successful graduate of the now-defunct Royals Baseball Academy.

And when the need arose, there was enough talent on the farm to help key a trade.

Free agents in Kansas City? Never happened. That was the way the Yankees played ball.

But, by the late '80s, the farm talent had been depleted, and the move toward signing free agents began.

Former GM John Schuerholz wisely jumped ship and went to Atlanta, where the farm teams were solid because of the efforts then-GM Bobby Cox had made to build the system.

And the worst stretch in Royals' history began.

Now, the Royals during the past few years have begun work on rebuilding that farm system. But the expansion draft hurt.

Players who should have been a part of this year's Royals team found themselves unprotected and now in Miami. Jeff Conine could have been that solid-hitting outfielder that Kevin McReynolds has failed to become.

And Luis Aquino had given the Royals solid innings in whatever role they asked him to fill.

And that's a flaw of the front office.

I've always felt Herk Robinson wasn't cut out for this job. After all, what was his capacity with the team before becoming GM?

Director of facilities.

Robinson is the man who last year made the decision to keep David Howard and Terry Shumpert on the roster out of spring training.

Robinson is the man who traded Bret Saberhagen and Bill Pecota to the Mets, in return for Gregg Jefferies (now with St. Louis), Kevin McReynolds (on the bench, where he belongs) and Keith Miller (the best of the trio, now on injured reserve).

And he's done the worst thing he could do — he's signed free agents.

So don't go blaming the Royals' woes on what the boss in the dugout is doing.

These problems go deeper into the organization.

On Monday, Ewing Kauffman announced a plan to keep the team in Kansas City after his death.

Now, let's hope he makes the same commitment toward rebuilding that team through the farms, beginning with getting rid of the deadwood in the front office.

Yes, Herk. That's you.

Tutoring service formed

Students work in conjunction with professor

STEPHANIE HOELZEL
Collegian

Juniors and seniors in architectural engineering are creating their own tutoring service for students in the major. The service is called Student Teaching for Essential Education and Learning — STEEL.

"We have found many freshman and sophomores get discouraged when they take some of the core classes for architectural engineering," Amee Ulrich, junior in architectural engineering, said. "We want to offer them the opportunity to receive all the help they need, free of charge, to encourage them to stay in the major."

The service will be offered to students, free of charge, during the day. This will also make it possible for them to get help without having to come back onto campus, Ulrich said.

"We want to make it accessible to everyone and make it so these students can build a better relationship with the upper-class majors. We feel this will help keep people in the major and help prevent them from becoming discouraged," Ulrich said.

Money for the service was initially going to be earned through a softball tournament. But Ulrich said there isn't enough time for the students to have one.

"We decided to cancel the tournament because we didn't have the time. There are too many people with projects due," Ulrich said. "At this point, it just isn't possible for us to do it."

Instead of the tournament, students will be asked to donate money toward the tutoring project next fall.

"We will ask people for $5 or so, just so we can offer money to those students who will need to be compensated for their time spent tutoring. In addition to the money we collect, Charles Burton, our professor, has offered to match the amount out of his own pocket," Ulrich said.

Before students can voluntarily donate money to the cause, the donation process will have to be approved by the dean of the college.

"We have to make sure that the process is OK'd by the dean. Then, if the students can raise $750, I will match that amount. We figured that we need at least $1,500 as minimum to make the program into what we want," Burton, professor of architectural engineering and construction science, said.

The purpose of the tutoring is to offer a better system in the department.

"We want students to feel more comfortable with the material and their tutors. That's why we want to offer them tutoring in the department. We also want to make the service more accessible and convenient to the students when they are on campus," Burton said.

The tutoring service is tentatively scheduled to begin in the fall.

Workshop to focus on changing times for wildlife management

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

The latest problems surrounding wildlife management and damage control will be the topic at the 11th Great Plains Damage Control Workshop April 26-29 in Kansas City, Mo.

Bob Henderson, extension specialist for animal damage control, said this is one of the biggest workshops in this field.

"There are about 160 people registered so far for the workshop," Henderson said. "There will be wildlife biologists, specialists and researchers, city managers, waste managers, farmers and ranchers, environmentalists and others concerned about wildlife at the workshop."

"It would be great to have a lot of K-State students attend," he said.

"Depending on when you register, there are special rates available to students through Continuing Education."

Topics to be discussed at the workshop include control of urban skunk and rat populations, prevention of coyotes from killing sheep, bird damage and rabies management, as well as animal rights.

"We will be focusing on the changing times and the responsibilities that go with that," Henderson said. "This will include how damage control is conducted."

He said on the first day of the workshop national committees will meet to discuss issues.

Guest speakers on April 27 will be Ted Ensley, secretary of Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks; Mike Hayden, former assistant secretary of the U.S. Department of Interior; and Donald Hawthorne, of the USDA Animal Damage Control program.

Henderson said students have an opportunity to get involved with the workshop.

"That evening certain students will be presenting reports on various aspects of wildlife management. Students will at least be representing K-State, Nebraska and Missouri," he said.

On April 28 the workshop will feature endangered-species issues in wildlife damage control, case histories of wildlife damage control actions. Outstanding student presentations will receive awards.

The workshop will wrap up Thursday with field demonstrations of deer, Canadian geese and coyote damage control programs.

Grant to promote equality

Multicultural center gets $1.8 million to help reach Midwest school systems

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The Midwest Desegregation Assistance Center received a $1.8-million grant.

The center, which is located in Bluemont Hall, provides assistance about race, sex and national origin to promote equal educational opportunities.

The federally funded center reaches elementary and secondary school systems in Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri, Juanita McGowan, race desegregation coordinator, said.

Originated in Manhattan in 1978, it is one of 10 centers of its kind that were set up by the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

"Kansas State is just our home base," she said. "Each state has their own specific needs."

Services the center offers include staff development in the form of conferences, workshops and inservice. It also provides technical assistance and resource materials.

"What we hope to do here is help provide cooperative relationships," McGowan said. "We want equal outcome for all students regardless of race, sex or national origin."

The center also works on a multicultural curriculum and on promoting harmony, she said.

The grant was won by competing against several organizations, Charles Rankin, director of the center, said. The center has been designed to assist schools in providing educational equity, he said.

Rankin said some of the problems the grant addresses are in their second and third generations.

"We really try to provide the school districts anything they request," Rankin said. "We focus very heavily in staff development."

All services the center offers are free. Schools can utilize multicultural, nonsexist materials provided by a multimedia resource center.

Cult experts cite warning signals

Branch Davidians one of many cults that attract vulnerable people

ASSOCIATED PRESS

"Anybody who thinks they're not vulnerable is a prime candidate to get involved."

LANA LITTELL
FORMER CULT MEMBER

BARRINGTON, Ill. — Cynthia Kissel thumbs through a worn yellow binder fat with printouts of names: religious sects predicting the end of the world, self-improvement groups heavy on quirky psychology.

"Somewhere in here is another Waco waiting to happen," Kissel said. "What happened with the Branch Davidians is confirmation of what we know is going on out there."

Kissel runs the Cult Awareness Network, a clearing house and information central about cult activities, from a cluttered suburban Chicago office.

She and other cult watchers see the tragedy in Waco, Texas, as more of a pointed warning than simply an isolated event that got out of hand. They said this week's deaths and the 1979 massacre in Jonestown, Guyana, reflect a vast problem simmering below the threshold of public awareness.

"The big explosions like Jonestown or Waco are more exception than the rule. The real concerns about destructive cults are the psychological and emotional wreckage they create," said Craig Branch of the Watchmen Fellowship, a ministry that tracks suspected cults from its base in Birmingham, Ala.

No one knows how many destructive cults and sects exist in the United States. Kissel's binder holds 1,500 names gleaned from newspaper clippings, court documents and thousands of calls to the network's hot line.

Some of the groups have legitimate purposes, Kissel said. But her group's efforts show that most, despite wildly diverse beliefs, share stunningly similar patterns of mind control, group domination, exploitation and physical and mental abuse.

Cults in the United States rarely receive official scrutiny. They are commonly written off as catch-all for society's outcasts, those not smart or stable enough to know they are being exploited.

But those familiar with cults said almost everyone is susceptible to their lure at some time in their lives.

"We in this country think we would know if someone was trying to tamper with our freedom," Kissel said. "It's an attitude that creates a blind spot to the fact that someone might be trying to recruit us."

Lana Littell was a Los Angeles Sunday school teacher who passed a rigorous investigation when she adopted a child. Within two years, however, after joining a meditation group to deal with uncertainties in her marriage, she sold off possessions and moved to Oregon with other members, cutting off friends and family.

"Anybody who thinks they're not vulnerable is a prime candidate to get involved," said Littell, who spent 19 years in the cult.

Her experience left a painful legacy. Littell severed ties with her dying mother, repeating cult philosophy that her mother was to blame for her cancer. She remains estranged from her father and has little or no contact with her two grown children, who remain in the cult.

Arnold Chanon Bloch, a Los Angeles psychotherapist, counseled hundreds of ex-cult members. The theme in all their lives was a quest for "powerful and totally encompassing solutions to their pain," he said.

"The majority were not mentally ill, but normal people who had experienced either some kind of loss or failure, or who lacked a sense of purpose or spiritual direction," he said. "I believe given the right circumstance, a majority are vulnerable to manipulation by a skilled, charismatic leader."

Steven Hassan had just ended a college romance when three particularly attractive women approached him on the street in Boston and invited him to a weekend workshop in self-awareness.

It turned out to be a recruitment ploy by the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church. What followed was classic cult indoctrination: scanty sleep, meager food, long talks stressing an important mission.

"It's a soft sell," said Hassan, who now counsels cult members and their families. "You meet these happy people who tell you you're special. They tell you, 'There's a meaning to your pain, and you're being chosen by God for some reason and tell us more about your life.'"

What followed fit the pattern Kissel and others said defines destructive cults:

- Long indoctrinations that wear down normal reactions. Hassan learned to chant, "Crush Satan, glory to Heaven, peace on Earth," to smother doubts about Moon. Similar "thought-stopping" techniques are used by many groups, including the Branch Davidians.

- Alienation from family and friends and total dependence on the group.

- Absolute obedience to a charismatic leader. Questions of legality or morality are banished. The "special mission" transcends societal rules.

Blaze causes problems with identification of dead

Peerwani said many of the children killed in the blaze — there were believed to be 17 children 10 years old and younger — may never be found because the blaze may have "literally incinerated their bodies."

The 35 bodies will likely be transported to Fort Worth and examined Friday, Peerwani said.

Dr. Rodney Crow, a forensic dentist from Fort Worth who is assisting in the case, said dental records may be the only way to identify the victims.

"There are no faces on some of them, and the faces are just completely powder," Crow said. "Hopefully, the teeth, taking a much higher temperature to destruct, will be in this debris. But as it stands now, I have seen several that the facial features are completely gone."

Crow said identification could take months because many of the dental records will have to be obtained from places as far away as Australia, England and the Caribbean. Many of the cultists were foreigners.

Crow said nine bodies have been located in a bunker containing "millions of rounds of ammunition."

The standoff began with a weapons raid Feb. 28 that left four federal agents and several cultists dead. The fire has greatly complicated the cases of those facing charges because it destroyed much of the evidence.

Cult survivor Renos Avraam was ordered held without bond as a material witness Thursday.

The tear gas the FBI used against the cult will be banned from warfare in 1995 under an international agreement reached in January that outlaws chemical weapons. But it is still allowed for domestic use and is safe, a State Department official said Thursday on the condition of anonymity.

1993 NYSD Planning Committee would like to thank those students, faculty, staff, administrators and community agencies that made the K-State Campus/Community Service Week a success.

Keep up your contributions to service!

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

Now take off your pants.
Now rub snow on your head. Bark like a dog.

Right now, as you read this, there are men in various states of undress, standing in the bitter Wisconsin snow.

They are cold. They are embarrassed. They are poor.

Such is the tragic tale of the victims of the notorious "snow queen" of Stevens Point, Wis.

Debra Dobbs, 31, pleaded innocent last Tuesday to three counts of theft. These accusations stemmed from incidents where she allegedly picked up men in bars, drove them around in her truck, persuaded them to take off their clothes, then get out and rub snow over themselves.

Then she drove off with their clothes and money.

Authorities say one man was left in his shorts and another was left in only socks and a shirt.

The important lesson here for vulnerable males is — layer your clothing, preferably cotton, so that your body heat isn't lost. Also, try to refrain from rubbing snow on yourself.

Happy birthday, Sam!
Hey Sam? Sam? Sammy!

In a weird ironic twist, doctors have found that men are 21 percent more likely to suffer a heart attack on their birthday than on other days of the same week.

Doctors at the Robert Wood Johnson Medical School in Anaheim, Calif., studied 118,955 records of heart attacks treated over five years at 90 New Jersey hospitals.

According to the doctors, the likely reason is overindulgence — smoking and drinking as part of the birthday festivities.

"A birthday is a big event," said Dr. James Muller, a physician at Deaconess Hospital in Boston.

And evidently a lot of people's last event as well.

It's just such a hassle changing clothes so often.

There are some men, recovering drug addicts, at a state-affiliated halfway house in Trenton, N.J., who are wondering just what they have gotten themselves into.

Hmmm, how do we put this? OK, in 1989 Ismael Rodriguez escaped from this particular halfway house three weeks before he was to be released.

When Johnny Law caught up with him, Rodriguez said he escaped because he was tired of being made to wear women's clothing.

Now the state wants to know why the halfway house has a therapy program, in which cross-dressing skits are used to break the image of street-tough criminals.

The skits, written by halfway house residents, require other residents to wear make-up, high heels and wigs while they are taunted and propositioned by other residents.

"It's a fun event," insists David Kerr, president and founder of the house. He said that in 25 years, no more than five men out of more than 7,000 have refused to participate.

"There is peer pressure," he conceded.

Talk about cruel and unusual punishment.

Frank Bacon — one hell of a guy and a great writer.

What a dilemma we had trying to figure out who gets top birthday honors this week — the late singer (and winner of the World's Worst Haircut contest 15 years running) Roy Orbison or the even later writer William Shakespeare.

Well, because we can't very well start giving tribute to members of the Travelling Wilburys (we have our standards, however low they may be), we decided that Bill Shakespeareonic gets the nod.

William Shakespeare was born on this day in 1564 in famous Stratford-on-Avon, England. He also died on this date 52 years later. In between a man named Francis Bacon wrote a whole lot of poems and plays and let Bill take all the glory. That's the vicious truth of life, kids.

Other neat things:

•1616 — Spanish poet Cervantes died in Madrid. Everything that he wrote is legit.

•1954 — Hank Aaron of the Milwaukee Braves hit the first of his record 755 major-league home runs, in a game vs. the St. Louis Cardinals.

WEEKEND

Dear Diary,

Editor's note: The following story ran on April 2. Due to reproduction complications, it was illegible. The Collegian and the Weekend staff regret the error.

May 11, 1915 — I must admit that it was only when I began to keep a diary that my ideas began to take shape and pour forth. To whom could I have confided all the thoughts that fill my mind if not to a diary? Confidant that I love, do you promise to keep the heart that I have given you, the thoughts that I have expressed only to you?

—Anais Nin, poet and author

The secrets of millions rest inside battered wire notebooks, immaculately bound volumes, and semi-organized 3-ring binders, all tucked away in closets, locked drawers and hidden discreetly beneath mattresses.

For centuries, diaries and journals (two words for essentially the same thing) have served as confidants to people of all ages, from all points of the social fabric. For the most part, these books are jealously guarded and for good reason — it is within these pages that the souls of the scribes are laid bare.

Christina Baldwin started keeping a journal in 1960 and, after 33 years and countless filled notebooks, she has become one of the foremost authorities on the art of journal writing. She sees journal writing as one of the most basic forms of self-help.

"I believe the mind is trying to have a relationship with us and help us grow in our own lives. Most of the time, when we're not being introspective, we act like the mind isn't saying anything," Baldwin said from her home in Minneapolis, Minn.

"That's what a journal is — you turn to the voice in the mind and say 'What's going on there?' It gets to be a time to talk to yourself."

In the course of two books — "One to One, Self-Understanding Through Journal Writing" (1977) and "Life's Companion, Journal Writing as a Spiritual Quest" (1991) — and in seminars she runs throughout the nation, Baldwin encourages people to use their journals in ways that can help them the most.

A journal is often such an intensely private item that to ask someone you barely know if they keep one is only second to the outrage of asking them if you can read it.

"I never, ever, ever like to let people read my journal," Tanya Monforte, a senior at Manhattan High School, said.

Her first journal began in the fifth grade but soon came to a screeching halt after her younger sister read it. It is an episode like this that has caused the premature death of many a journal.

Baldwin noted that often it isn't easy to contribute the utter honesty that a true journal demands, particularly if there is always a chance of such honesty being violated.

"I would say that it takes courage to be introspective," she said, adding dolefully that "the society we live in doesn't value introspection."

Jenny Doocy, junior in social science, likened allowing people to read one's diary to egotism.

"It'd be like me having pictures of myself all over," she said.

'Alive' captures true essence of fight to survive

Based on a true story, film doesn't pull any punches

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

After watching an airplane torn in two pieces and seeing passengers sucked out of the remnants, the viewer will know this week's Union Program Council movie, "Alive," isn't going to pull any punches.

Yes, people may not feel like traveling in an airplane after experiencing this true story about members of the Uruguayan rugby team and some of their relatives whose plane crashes in the desolate Andes mountains.

But, this story goes beyond the usual hokey disaster "Airplane '77" movies.

The survivors don't just sit around and wait for someone to come get them. The leaders and followers of the survivors emerge and immediately begin deciding what to do with the injured and dying.

Two passengers who have medical training try to help the victims.

The group tries to fix the plane's radio, but the batteries are in the other half of the plane, which had crashed some distance from their campsite.

But their positive thinking only gets them so far. Their food rations of chocolate, cigarettes and wine begin to disappear, and even their leader, Antonio, becomes discouraged when he finds out the search party is called off.

It is Nando, played by Ethan Hawke, who holds everyone together and makes the most vital suggestion to ensure the group's survival.

His suggestion is the movie's most sensitive aspect, as the survivors decide to eat the flesh of the dead passengers. They realize it is the only way they can get enough strength to get the batteries for the radio or travel far enough to find other help.

The rest of the film involves the group battling for survival through avalanches, frostbite and the fear that they'll never be found.

Director Frank Marshall manages to evoke a powerful, taut reality from all the actors, which makes the movie even more disturbing. It doesn't matter that, besides Hawke, most of the actors are unknown. This is not a set-back to the film, simply because the performances they give can relate to how anyone might feel if this happened to them.

Marshall tells the story of people who will do anything to live. The theme runs throughout the film, but it never gets predictable or mundane.

He also touts the idea that God will save them, as many of the passengers pray the rosary every night, trying to keep some kind of hope that they will get past this tragedy.

Since this film was based on a true story, its impact may make viewers deeply contemplate what they would do if this would happen to them. Would they be one who would give up all hope of living, or would they be the one who would fight to stay alive?

BILL WATTERSON

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Just tell him you want to go

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a small dilemma I hope you can help me with. Two members of the same fraternity are calling me. One is an ex-boyfriend, and the other I know through a mutual campus activity.

Their final party of the year is approaching. Through a reliable source, I am aware neither of them have a date. I am really interested in attending this party with my ex-boyfriend. The problem lies with the other guy. I am afraid he will ask me first.

My friends have said I should accept the first invitation I receive. However, I am at the point where I am afraid to answer the phone. I am getting really paranoid and am at a loss as to what to do.

I have not been active with a greek organization, but I have been to many parties with my ex. This party is especially memorable because he is graduating and leaving me behind.

How do I get my ex to ask me, if I even get asked at all.

Desperately Seeking Sanity

DEAR DESPERATELY,

First of all, I don't think I would want to go to a party with someone I had to "get to ask me." If your ex-boyfriend wants to take you, he will ask.

Secondly, I think you're awfully concerned about something as insignificant as a fraternity party. It's not the beginning or the end of your world. And if it is, I feel sorry for you.

That said, as for this business of accepting the first offer you get — it sounds OK as long as you would enjoy going with either guy. Just don't play games, and quit dodging phone calls. This isn't junior high. And don't be a snob and turn the "other guy" down in the hopes your ex will come around.

If I were you, I'd try a little honesty with everyone involved.

This is the '90s, sweetheart. Why not just tell your ex you'd like to go. Perhaps he's "at a loss" as well. And if the "other guy" asks you and you don't want to go, simply tell him no. Sincerity has been known to work before.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I realize you probably get many fake letters; however, this is not one of them. I only feel comfortable talking to an anonymous person. Please help me.

I've been dating a wonderful guy for about a year. We are both deeply in love and have discussed the possibility of marriage. My problem stems from our sex life.

He has always been the instigator. This has been great until recently when he asked to tie me up and have anal sex. I feel really uncomfortable about this. I have heard his friends joke about domination and using animals for sexual activity.

Is this healthy and normal, or am I just too inhibited? I wouldn't mind trying this, but I'm worried what he might suggest next. All I want is for him to be happy and satisfied with me. What should I do?

Confused

DEAR CONFUSED,

You said it yourself: "I feel really uncomfortable about this." Happiness and satisfaction are mutual things. You shouldn't have to do something you don't want to do just to please your boyfriend. If he's as wonderful as you say he is, he should understand.

Just for the record, I don't think you're inhibited. But take away the tying-you-up part, and trying new things to spice up your sex life is perfectly OK, as long as the feeling is mutual.

Diary offers personal adviser though writing

And is not a journal simply that, a picture of oneself? Take Doocy, who follows an eclectic approach to the perspective in which she documents her life. Rather than a simple log of daily activities, hers is the story of her emotional life told through a fictional character she calls Catherine.

"I will never, ever write in my journal 'I.' It's never 'Jenny did this' or 'Jenny did that,'" she said, admitting that this could almost be construed as the antithesis of journal writing.

"It becomes kind of a crutch because you cannot say how you feel," she said.

"I'm not free with my emotions, not at all. It's a weird, weird, weird thing."

Yet Doocy's journal is her proven safety net, and it looks the part

— a handsome volume crammed sloppily with sheets of various sized paper containing a multitude of jottings. She writes whenever the mood strikes her, but her motivation is glaringly apparent.

"I cannot ever write in my journal when I'm happy because I have nothing to admit," she said.

Baldwin has seen this scenario before in her seminars.

"A lot of times people tell me they write a lot in pain and crisis but after it is over they don't know what to write," she said, adding that journal writing by no means must be a strict daily ritual.

"When I feel pent up and ready to write, I'll sit and do it," she said. "I follow the creative tension."

For some, it is the availability of time or the significance of events that dictates an entry.

"In the summer, I write a lot more, almost every day," Monforte said.

"More recently, since I've been really busy, only three or four times a month, just if something important happens."

The pressures of the clock are what Baldwin blames for a lull in journal writing among college students.

"Those years, 18-22, are not the most introspective years of your life," she said.

"In college, you're too busy studying what everyone else says. The idea of spending 15 minutes writing one more thing can sound not that appealing."

As an example, Baldwin noted that in her four undergraduate years at Macalester University in St. Paul, Minn., she filled only one notebook, the same amount of writing she covered during only one year in Europe.

Baldwin said she realizes journal writing is not for everyone.

"There are some people who just don't like writing," she said.

"If you can tolerate the idea of writing, I would recommend it. It's the most adaptable form of therapy."

Both Monforte and Doocy recognize this value in their writing.

"Journals make you come to your own conclusions about problems, and that's what writing does," Monforte said.

"I don't talk about my problems — I write about it just so I don't bring anyone else down," Doocy said.

"You just have to write whatever. I can get pages and pages out of one thought."

Baldwin said she feels journal writing is often unseen or unspoken of, yet prevalent among much of society.

"It is an act that cuts through educational levels, genders, age groups," she said.

"I am constantly amazed at how many people are writing."

satisfied with the committee's decision, it can be appealed to student tribunal.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, met with Farmer, Student Body President Jackie McClaskey and the candidates of Wednesday's election to prepare for such a complaint.

"My advice to the election committee is to make the best possible decision they can," Bosco said. "Student government is a big deal here, and 13 votes can certainly bring scrutiny."

"It's important to ensure that the election has been fair," he said. "It's important that the election committee respond fairly and in a timely manner to the complaint."

of Academic Affairs and University Relations committee.

In first readings, four bills addressed special allocations to SGA.

These bills included an allocation that would allow SGA to purchase a paper shredder for $260, a plain-paper fax machine for $1,918, assign a graduate student to evaluate parking options and conduct a study and provide an office assistant for the summer.

The athletic ticket sales policy was amended to include a no-alcohol clause, proposed by David Frese, arts and sciences senator and junior in journalism and mass communications.

"This ensures safety, our (K-State's) image and the future of the campus," Frese said.

The amendment states anyone found with alcohol in the campus area will lose the group's place in line. It also states the group may not join on another group's list.

At press time, Senate was discussing the remainder of the athletic ticket sales policy bill.

Chamber Players," he said.

Martin said he believes concerts such as this one offer important cultural experience to students' futures and allow K-State to offer more diversity, as well.

"I think it's important to offer students the chance to learn about things they may not have known about before. It's an important adjunct to the classroom, and it also makes the university a more interesting place to be," he said.

Lu feels the Da Capo Chamber Players are a typical group to perform in such a prestigious series as this.

"It's a reflection of the caliber of the series, as well as the caliber of the group," she said.

The ensemble consists of a flute, clarinet, violin, cello and piano. Martin feels this was part of the reason they were invited to perform at K-State.

"It's an unusual group of instruments, and they're all very personable people, so that combination worked well for us," he said.

The final concert will be at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain Auditorium. Admission is $12, $10 for senior citizens, and $6 for students and children. Tickets may be purchased in McCain box office weekdays from noon to 5 p.m. or by calling 532-6428 during box office hours.

Tickets are also available at the Manhattan Town Center, the K-State Union Bookstore and the ITR at Fort Riley.

RADIO

Sex goes electronic on campus station

Class project leads to one-shot show featuring panel of 2 K-State professors

LYNN ANDERSON

Collegian

A one-night stand — via radio? "Sex Over the Airwaves," a sex-and-relationships radio talk show on K-State's KSDB-FM 91.9, went with a one-shot format, airing solely from 7 to 8 p.m. Thursday.

The show was organized by a group of seven students in David MacFarland's Audio II class, with a discussion panel consisting of Betsy Bergen, professor in human development and family studies, and Bill Griffith, professor of psychology.

Initially created to serve as one of the group's final graded projects, the sex talk show seemed like the perfect idea, said Catalina Thompson, junior in broadcast journalism and the sex show's host.

"While we were discussing talk shows to do, sex came up as in most college student's conversations," Thompson said. "We wanted to pick a topic people can relate to and thought we'd get a lot of callers this way."

Panelists were chosen on previous experience in relation to the college listening audience, Thompson said.

"We had heard about Dr. Bergen and her highly recommended expertise in the field," said Jason Kramer, junior in radio and television and the show's technical engineer.

Bergen said she prefers not to be called an expert, but that she is nationally certified as a sex educator and sex therapist.

"I don't know it all," Bergen said.

Reaching several different groups of students, Bergen teaches a variety of sexual classes at K-State both on the undergraduate and graduate levels. Along with her 28 years of teaching, Bergen said she had gained insight from her small therapy practice in Topeka, where she resides.

"I prefer to educate than to fix problems," Bergen said.

Serving as the male counterpart, Griffith developed the Human Sexuality Behavior class in 1971. He said he gained experience through clinical and sexual research, and had done some extensive dealing in the topic of pornography.

The two-member panel took turns fielding questions from callers as they covered topics ranging from bacon grease and STDs as well as educating children on sexual issues.

Bergen suggested that society return to the basics in order to begin to take sex and its repercussions seriously.

"Sexuality is all that you are," Bergen said. "We seriously must deal with it because it influences all aspects of our life."

Another issue that was focused on was the idea of interracial relationships and their current acceptance within society.

"We still have to come a long way," Griffith said. "Many people are still upset by the whole thing."

Both panelists said they thought it was necessary to detract from the everyday humdrum, and not fall into a sexual stalemate, which often occurs after a couple's sexual relationship begins to feel as though it's lacking.

"Start in the morning, or set the alarm for 3 a.m. — quickies are a marvelous thing," Bergen said. "Use your ironing board. Just think of the excitement of trying to stay on it."

Student response to the sex advice was exemplified in the numerous calls that consumed the hour-long show.

Someone called and asked if it would be aired on a regular basis, said Claire Shroeder, senior in radio and television and project participant.

Run-off elections set for Wednesday, again

Tribunal upheld decision to have another election

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Two student groups have decided a new run-off election for student body president and vice president will take place Wednesday.

After receiving a formal complaint about the April 21 run-off, the 1993 Student Governing Association Elections Committee decided Friday afternoon that another run-off should take place on May 5.

Mike Ford, veterinary medicine senator-elect, said he lodged the complaint after being asked by other veterinary medicine students why polls at the Veterinary Medicine Complex were not open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., as reported in the Collegian.

"In previous years, it had been from 11 to 1, and it was put in the paper that way," Ford said. "The problem is we didn't have time to vote."

Committee members heard testimony and comments for several hours before making the decision.

In response to the committee's decision, student body presidential candidate Ed Skoog and Joel Gruenke, Graduate School senator-elect and graduate student in statistics, both appealed to Student Tribunal, which met at 5 p.m. Friday to consider the appeals.

Mary Farmer, junior in history and elections committee chairperson, said the complaint charged the committee with violating a portion of the Kansas State University By-Laws to the Constitution pertaining to polling places at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

"The committee honestly believes that this is our mistake," Farmer said.

The intent of the committee, she said, was to open polls at the Veterinary Medicine Complex from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Michelle Merrick, election committee member, was sent to the complex after 1 p.m. She said she was in the Trotter Hall lunchroom for 30 minutes, and it took approximately 10 minutes for her to move to a more visible location.

"I had a lot of people express to me that they were really upset we weren't there from 11 to 1," Merrick said.

The by-law states polls at the complex must be open for two consecutive hours deemed most appropriate by the committee.

"In the past, tables were always set up from 11 to 1 out at vet-med," Farmer said. "There's no question the two consecutive hours that are the most appropriate is 11 to 1, because that's when the Guidelines have been finalized for the new Student Governing Association primary election Wednesday.

In a meeting Sunday with the 1993 SGA Elections Committee, the candidates for student body president and vice president requested the special election be moved up a week, Mary Farmer, elections committee chairperson, said.

The candidates said they thought having the election so close to final exams would be unfair to their campaign workers, the elections committee and to the candidates themselves, Farmer said.

After deciding Friday to have a new campus-wide run-off, the committee originally decided the election should take place on May 5.

"We've turned over our lives for this, and with finals, we didn't feel it was fair to have it next week," Farmer said.

The committee decided the election for the last arts-and-sciences seat should be Tuesday and Wednesday.

Farmer said the committee decided the run-off should not

WASHINGTON D.C. — Hanging from apartment windows, lining the sides of the street and walking dead center through the streets of D.C., the issue of gay rights this weekend ran straight into the homes and lives of America.

By 9 a.m., the lawn surrounding the Washington Monument and the mall area was covered with people. Everywhere people were walking, talking and most of all soaking in a day they had long been anticipating.

"This is going to be a catalyst," Randy Winkler, Atlanta, said.

The Parks and Recreation Service estimated the crowd at 350,000, while march organizers put the total at about 1 million. Regardless of the numbers, one thing was certain — a desire to be seen and heard.

"I came to support my friends who are gay, lesbian and bisexual because I think they should have the same rights that I have as a heterosexual," Michelle Reinmiller, Lincoln, Neb., said.

"It is about love and who you want to spend your life with. It is not about gender."

Messages of tolerance and diversity were echoed throughout the day. Balancing the need for valuing differences were pleas for action.

"To the members of Congress, we say get over it. To the justices of the U.S. Supreme Court, we say, in one united voice, get over it," said Phil Donahue during his speech before the march.

MAZOUR LAWSUIT QUESTIONS POLICY CONSTITUTIONALITY

The allegation of civil-rights violations brought against K-State by Mark Mazour begins winding its way through the legal system today.

A pre-conference hearing is scheduled for Judge Harlan Graham's chambers between K-State attorney Jennifer Kassebaum and Mazour's attorney, Greg Kieffer. The conference will examine what issues are to be argued and make sure that all paperwork relevant to the case is in, Kassebaum said. Kieffer could not be reached.

Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, was found to have violated K-State's sexual-violence policy last fall after an alleged rape at the basketball ticket campout. The criminal charges were later dropped.

In his lawsuit, Mazour alleges his civil rights were violated because of bias on the part of Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life and chairperson of the panel that found him guilty of violating the policy. His lawsuit asks that K-State's sexual-violence policy be found unconstitutional and that sanctions imposed upon him by the panel be removed or lessened.

Course packets now cheaper, legal

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

The process of designing and buying course packets isn't as much of a hassle these days.

Professors are now able to make arrangements to have their course packets on the shelves with textbooks at the K-State Union Bookstore.

Heather Anderson, senior in journalism and mass communications and K-State marketing representative with Custom Academic Publishing Co., said her organization is stressing getting materials copied legally.

In a flier produced for the company, it is stated that a recent court decision has cleared the gray area concerning the U.S. copyright law, which deals with intellectual or original works. Thus, it is no longer proper to copy copy-righted materials for educational use without the permission of the publisher or the author.

"It used to be you could copy materials for educational use," Anderson said. "If the instructor doesn't get permission now, they face up to $100,000 for each violation."

"We can get permission from publishers and have it printed," Anderson said.

The materials are picked up from the instructor's office and sent to Oklahoma City to be approved and published. The process usually takes four to six weeks.

"The professors don't have to worry about a thing," Anderson said. "There's a lot of communication involved."

After the materials are approved and published, they are sent directly to the bookstore and sold on the shelves with other books required for courses.

Cora Cooper, instructor of music, said she has used the services for two semesters now.

"I looked into it because of copyright restrictions, and they did a real nice job," Cooper said.

Cooper said the advantages included getting the materials she wanted the students to have for a cheaper price, access to information that wasn't as readily available otherwise, and the fact that it was legal.

Linda Wiemers, book department manager at the K-State Union Bookstore, said the bookstore began offering Custom Academic Publishing Co., course materials last fall. She said the bookstore requires copyright certification of all materials on the floor and has been pleased with the company's services, which meet the legal requirements.

"This is a hassle-free way for the professors," Wiemers said.

All they have to do is decide what they want, and it's out of their hands.

"I think that's the biggest advantage. They don't have to mess with it."

Heath Higbie, 1992 K-State graduate, gives the answers of a meat-judging test to a class from Coffeyville. The children, members of a 4-H Club, were given a chance to examine the different meats in Weber Hall before taking part in the Block & Bridle meat-judging contest.

Meats judged in local contest

Beef, pork, lamb products and carcasses evaluated

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

Meat products and carcasses were evaluated by 42 participants in the Block & Bridle's annual meat-judging contest this weekend.

The products evaluated vary a little from year to year. Mainly meat products and carcasses are evaluated, John Unruh, coach of the meat-judging team, said.

"The products we used this year were beef, pork and lamb," he said. Brian Dunn, president of Block & Bridle, said the meat comes from various sources.

The livestock used generally comes from the University farms, Dunn said. He said sometimes the products come from other places, like Iowa Beef Packers.

Unruh said some of the products this year were associated with the Fair Judges Clinic.

"The event was held this weekend because it was in association with the Future Farmers of America meat-judging contest on Sunday," Unruh said. "They basically use the same meat products."

Dunn said it takes so much time to set up the cuts that it's good to let the meat be used in as many contests as possible.

The meat-judging competition is open to anyone.

"It is not a team activity either," Unruh said.

"Everyone is judged by officials made up of last year's judging team. Therefore, anyone who wants to participate can participate."

Dunn said the judges ranged from beginners to some who have judged many times.

"Some students judge in conjunction with classes," Dunn said. "The judging is used as class work as well as a contest for others."

Block & Bridle is a national organization involved in beef, sheep, swine and horses.

"The main interest is animal-based, but our members have a lot of different majors from across campus," Unruh said.

►CESAR CHAVEZ DEAD AT 66

SAN LUIS, Ariz. — Cesar Chavez, a child of the fields, who organized migrant farm workers and led a nationwide grape boycott in the 1960s, was found dead Friday, police said. He was 66.

Police Lt. John Miranda said a United Farm Workers Union official and a union attorney found Chavez, the union's leader since its founding in the '60s, in a room of the house where he was staying while in Yuma on business.

He said there was no indication of foul play or a struggle.

Chavez spoke at K-State during the spring 1991 semester on his work to organize the farm workers.

FROM AP AND STAFF REPORTS

Agri-marketing team travels to Orlando

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Last week, eight students traveled to Orlando to represent K-State at the National Agri-Marketing Association conference and competition.

The marketing team spent about six months perfecting a marketing presentation on a product in the agriculture industry.

Basing their information on an actual product, they invented improvements to the product and then created a marketing campaign.

The 26 teams were broken down into heats for the first round of competition. K-State made it into the top 10, John Riley, team and chapter adviser, said.

"The top 10 was really tough, and there were really diverse opinions. There were eight judges for semi-finals, four at each table. The rankings at one table were completely opposite the other table.

They just finally had to come to a consensus among themselves," Riley said.

The team practiced for eight continuous hours in last-minute preparation once they arrived in Florida.

"I was very pleased at the manner in which they presented themselves during the competition. In the first heat, they hit it. They gave it as well as any team could be expected to give it. Their presentation style was superb,"

The K-State chapter also held an edge in the competition for NAMA scholarships. Out of six national scholarships awarded, two were awarded to K-State students.

Galen Wentz, chapter president and junior in economics, received the Ferguson Successful Farming Scholarship. The $1,000 scholarship is awarded to one junior member of NAMA. It is based on academic accomplishments, extracurricular activities and contributions to NAMA.

Janet Bailey, chapter secretary and junior in Animal Sciences and Industry, received a $250 NAMA Careers Scholarship. This scholarship had the same basic criteria as the Ferguson Successful Farming Scholarship; however, it was not limited to juniors.

"It felt really good to be chosen by the national judges. A lot of emphasis is put on your NAMA contributions, therefore, being chosen shows the judges recognize your NAMA work. It makes me feel like I've done something good for NAMA," Bailey said.

The competition is sponsored by professional chapters of NAMA across the nation. With the competition and the trade show involved, over 1,000 professionals attended the conference.

Competing since 1983, K-State students have an excellent reputation with the professionals.

"They present themselves very professionally. The professionals who meet other NAMA groups respect K-State students. They know our students will be the ones attending the sessions and workshops, while their colleagues are off playing. K-State students exhibit interest in the professionals and the program," Riley said.

An example of K-State's reputation is seen in the national awards individuals returned with, as well as the Special Projects Award that K-State NAMA chapter received.

The Special Projects award recognized the projects of the K-State chapter. Throughout the year, NAMA has sponsored many events including the Agri-Business Careers Fair and mock interviews. It also produced brochures for the Cattlemen's Day and Kansas Junior Livestock.

"K-State has a reputation for being a really strong team. We don't have tryouts, prerequisites or age requirements. We have freshmen and fifth-year seniors on the team, which is a traditional mix from the past. A lot of universities are very selective in their teams. I feel K-State's success is that we give everyone a chance to contribute," Bailey said.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Making an appeal appealing

THE ISSUE

Wefald said he will uphold the decision of the SGA Elections Committee and Student Tribunal.

WE SUGGEST

To be fair, all appeals should be considered at each level, based upon evidence presented.

K-State will have another run-off election to decide who will be the next student body president and vice president.

The Student Governing Association Elections Committee decided to go with another run-off election after a complaint was filed concerning the operation of the polls in the Veterinary Medicine Complex. An appeal of this action made by a different student to Student Tribunal resulted in the same decision.

Following tribunal's decision, current student body president Jackie McClaskey said if there is an appeal of this decision, K-State President Jon Wefald said he would uphold the decisions of the student groups — if they were the same.

Wefald's decision to uphold the decision of the two student groups is admirable. It shows that he puts a lot of faith in the decisions made by students.

But by doing this, he is also denying a chance for those on the losing end of the decisions to have another chance to present their arguments.

An appeal is still possible. But when Wefald made that decision, he made any appeal a futile effort.

The appeal process is a system. A system that can only be effective if all levels make their decision without any bias — based only on the evidence presented in the written appeal and during the hearing.

If tribunal's decision is appealed, Wefald should take the time to make a ruling on the appeal — based on the evidence presented.

It's only fair to everyone involved.

Kings and Messiahs

JOHN HAWKS

Pardon me if I'm missing something, but I see only one thing in common between David Koresh and Rodney King: They're both criminals. Many people, amid claims of a decaying legal system, appear to have forgotten that fact.

Los Angeles Police Department officers unquestionably used excessive force when they confronted King, and a federal jury has determined that the two chief officers involved violated King's civil rights. King distinguished himself during the L.A. riots with his call to end the violence.

But the fact remains that when King was apprehended by the police, he was committing a crime. He led state troopers and city policemen on a high-speed joyride through L.A. This is not a legal activity. It endangered the public and the police trying to catch him. Car chases may be glamorized on T.V. crime shows, but I can remember a couple around here, and they are not safe. Rodney King is a criminal.

Making King into a hero is wrong. The officers who beat him up should be punished, but he deserves punishment as well. "Hasn't he been punished enough?" you ask. The answer is no. If I steal $500 dollars from you, and you beat me up while trying, I should not get to keep the $500. Yet King, in committing his crime, has done just that.

King is not, as some contend, a "black everyman" fighting a system that does not care. As long as King is used for a symbol for all black men, I will be ashamed for everyone who obeys the law and goes unrecognized. King may be a victim of the police, but we are victims of him.

David Koresh, too, was a criminal. His case, too, can show us that law enforcement in the U.S. is not perfect, but it is not an indictment of the system. Children and innocents needlessly died in the Branch Davidian compound, but their deaths were not the fault of law enforcement agents. Their deaths were the fault of one man, a man who betrayed them with promises of immortality.

Like King, Koresh endangered both the public and law enforcement officers with his actions. The initial raid on the compound was one of more than 100 routine firearms raids conducted by the ATF each year. No one expected the brutal response of the Davidians, or the maniacal ruthlessness of their leader. An ordinary situation quickly became extraordinary, but not due to ATF or FBI mishandling of the case. It was instead due to the extraordinary lunacy of one man.

We cheat ourselves and we cheat the law enforcement agents who work for us if we blame the unfortunate endings of these two situations on them, or if we cite these as evidence for the decay of the standards of law enforcement in this country. No one is perfect, and mistakes can happen in any tense situation. Policemen are not robots, nor would anyone wish them to be.

Law enforcement agents are bound by strict guidelines of conduct, and when they break those rules, they too must be punished. But we must not, in those cases, make the criminal our hero. If we do, then we run the risk of being duped, as the Branch Davidians were duped in Waco by David Koresh. Our system is not perfect, but it is not out to get us.

David Koresh claimed to be the messiah. The press has tried to make Rodney King into one. We must recognize, however, that there are no messiahs. Each of us can only try to do the best we can. This is true both for law enforcement officers and for citizens. No one could ask anything more.

READERS WRITE

► RIGHTS

Free speech is limited by listeners

Editor,

We are writing in response to the article written by John Hart, "The price of pluralism," which appeared in the April 20 Collegian.

In this column, Hart stated, "The First Amendment was not written to make everyone feel comfortable and good about themselves," which we think is a totally ludicrous statement.

Personally, we're glad someone stole the banner because it made us feel uncomfortable. In fact, we wish we had taken it ourselves. The sign being there was infringing upon our rights. The one thing most people seem to forget, especially writers, is that your rights end where another's rights begin.

We feel it's unnecessary to censor newspapers, magazines and song lyrics because we have the choice to read the newspaper that we want, or listen to the music that we want. But when you put a banner we don't particularly care to see somewhere we can't help but see it, we have no choice but to look at it.

This is infringing upon our rights as Americans. This is where you cross the boundaries of your rights into others.

If you want to see the banner, hang it in your room — that's fine with us, but don't infringe upon our rights to contentment and happiness just so you can get your belief across.

Pictures, letters lean too far for reader

Editor,

And the Collegian considers itself non-biased? What are you all thinking?

I thought the election day edition was kind of funny. There on the front page was Collegian columnist Ed Skoog — twice — deified by your "non-biased" writers, while his opponent was disputed, proven wrong. The front page.

And today I open to the opinion page and see not one but four personal attacks on Fred Wingert. Those are not letters to the editor. They are slaps in the face, lemon juice in a paper cut. Perhaps I can understand printing one letter, but four?

Now, I am certainly not endorsing Wingert. He has stuck his foot in his mouth a few too many times for me. However, that does not give a "non-biased" student-funded, open-minded organization the green light to publicly beat someone to death.

I hope that in the next election the Collegian can keep its friendships to itself and allow a fair vote.

► RESPONSE

Tribunal decisions based on differences

Editor,

Appearances can be deceiving. Your lead editorial on April 22 suggests that the appeals from Liz Ring and Brandy Meyer were essentially the same case. They were not.

Student Tribunal (not Senate Tribunal, as it was referred to) hears each case and makes a decision based on the evidence and circumstances surrounding that case only. The cases of Ring and Meyer were very different. Many more extenuating circumstances existed in the case of Ring, and they were taken into consideration.

Anyone who witnessed both hearings would likely agree, whether or not they concurred with the decisions, that the cases were inherently different. It is easy to see a conflict and lack of consistency when looking at the face value of these cases, but I am surprised at the editorial board's lack of insight and research on this issue.

Arguments can be made for and against each decision, but they should not be grouped together. Student Tribunal is made up of students concerned with fairness to all students involved in any judicial issue. They heard both cases and weighed all the options. The decisions were controversial, but they were separated and based on the specific merit of each case.

THE MYTH OF THE DRUG WAR

There has been much rhetoric in the last 30 years or so about a pressing social issue: drugs. Efforts by the government to stop the use of drugs have been stepped up in the last 12 years because of increasing public attention to the "crisis" in America. The public's collective attention was drawn to it because our children were being enthralled by this menace.

The scope of the drug distribution in the United States is extensive. Let me rephrase that — it is probably of truly megalithic proportions. I emphasize "probably" because no one can gather reliable information about the scope of the drug trade.

The simple fact is there is a demand for psychoactive substances. This is so because of the grand Western tradition of using such substances as a means of relaxation and recreation. This tradition is ingrained into our society very deeply and may perhaps be partly biological in origin. The recreational altering of consciousness can be seen early in our lives, the classic example being dizzying oneself on merry-go-rounds.

Later in life, the manifestation of the desire to alter consciousness is recreational drug use. This desire is not confined to either our culture or our species. That certain chemical intoxicants are pleasurable has been known in virtually all human societies. It is precisely because the substances are pleasurable that they have been remembered and incorporated into tradition.

The "problem" stems from the fact that the U.S. government surrendered its regulatory control of the drug market to the drug entrepreneurs. When the government made certain psychoactive substances illegal, it forced the drug trade underground and prevented itself from gaining information crucial to stopping the trade. The one and only contact the government has with underground drug dealings is through the criminal justice system. This contact will yield the unwise drug dealers and only by chance the wise ones. This means the government's strategy is, by nature, inefficient. The reason wise dealers do not get caught is that they usually deal only to people they know. Would you sell something illegal to someone you don't know? The crime of drug trafficking goes unreported because the people the laws are designed to protect make conscious choices to break them. In this way, the crime of drug trafficking differs from most other types of crime.

Since there is this demand for chemicals, someone will be desperate or enterprising enough to capitalize on the drug market. There is much money to be made by selling drugs. And if there is anything that is to be called American, it is the freedom to make money. Since the government relinquished its control over regulation of the drug supply, the entrepreneurs have taken control.

Ronald Reagan and George Bush waged a war on drugs by attempting to cut the supply of the drugs. They attempted to stop the drugs coming into the country by hiring more agents, using more and better technologies and pumping more taxpayer money into drug enforcement programs.

In 1989, total federal drug-enforcement costs were more than $5 billion. Since then, the costs have risen. There are other costs as well, at the state and local level, and most estimates of these costs are about as much as the federal expenditures. Yet, this sum of money is enough to stop only 10 to 15 percent of the drugs coming into the country. Well more than $5 billion per year to let 85 to 90 percent of the drugs come into the United States.

It seems to me to be a vast expenditure to fight a battle that can not be won. They did also try to curb the demand with the "Just Say No" campaign. Whether Nancy Reagan was aware of it or not, the slogan is quite eloquent, as it satisfies both sides of the issue. It did little except to get children to parrot three small words. It does not appeal to reason, only to sentiment.

So what does this mean? The U.S. government has decided that potentially harmful drugs are not for our citizens, with two exceptions — nicotine and alcohol. By making drugs illegal, the government gave virtually all control of the drug trade to entrepreneurs and addicts. The point is this: America is in a Catch-22 and won't get out of it until the cultures values change or the government attempts to legalize and regulate the drug trade.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Netters take 5th in Big 8

RON LACKEY
Collegian

The Wildcat tennis team defeated the University of Nebraska Sunday to take fifth in the Big Eight tournament in Kansas City.

The Wildcats began the tournament by taking on the Colorado Buffaloes Friday morning. K-State was closely defeated by Colorado, 5-3.

K-State's No. 1 seed, Susana Labrador and No. 6 seed, Evelia Alvarez were the only singles players to post wins against the Buffaloes.

K-State's doubles duo of Suzanne Sim and Maria Shrubsole also posted a win.

"We had a shot," Coach Steve Bietau said. "We played them closer than we did then when they were here. But it wasn't enough."

No. 6 seed Evelia Alvarez said it was a close contest.

"We had a chance to beat them," she said. "Unfortunately, we couldn't."

"It's tough," she said. "Matches can sometimes go either way, but we just couldn't beat them."

As expected, the Wildcats won their second match on Saturday. The Cats delivered a perfect 6-0 mark against the Tigers, a team that is privately funded and offers no scholarships to its athletes.

Alvarez said the Tigers didn't pose the team much trouble.

"They tried, but they're not like really tough," she said. "You just have to do your part and that's it."

The Wildcats finished up the season against Nebraska on Sunday, posting a 5-1 win and taking fifth place in the tourney.

"We played a good match against Nebraska," Bietau said. "The team really played well."

Alvarez said the team showed a good effort against the Cornhuskers.

"This time, we won 5-1," she said. "We didn't even have to play any doubles matches. It was really a good day."

"The whole team gave a really good effort."

Two of K-State's tennis players were chosen for the 1993 All-Big Eight women's tennis team. Both Labrador and Sim were selected Sunday following the tournament.

With the season ending on an uphill swing, Bietau said he was pleased.

"It's always nice to finish on a positive note," he said. "This was one of our best performances of the year."

"There were some individual performances that were exceptionally good. Some of the younger players made improvements that I like to see."

With that, Bietau said he thinks the Wildcats are going to be a contending team in the future.

"We are consistently going to be an upper division team in the conference," Bietau said.

But Bietau also said he had reservations about the program.

"We still have a long ways to go as far as stability in the program and doing things that are going to get us into that upper division."

Cowboys sweep weekend series

Cats outscored 46-16 in 3 losses to No. 18 OSU

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

41-12.

K-State lost the first two games of the weekend series against Oklahoma State by a combined total of 29 runs.

Sunday afternoon, the Wildcats nearly salvaged the final game of the three-game set against the Cowboys, losing 5-4 at Frank Myers Field.

The weekend sweep improved the Cowboys' record to 27-11, including 16-7 in the Big Eight. Oklahoma State, which is 5-0 against K-State this season, entered the series as the 18th-ranked team in the nation.

K-State fell to 13-24 overall and 4-11 in the conference. The Wildcats have lost eight of their last 10 games.

"I was proud of the way we fought back after getting our rear ends beat twice," Wildcat coach Mike Clark said after Sunday's game. "I feel bad because the kids stuck their necks out and fought."

"They didn't deserve this." Sunday's loss may have been especially painful because of the way things transpired.

K-State loaded the bases in each of the last two innings but came up empty both times.

Chris Wolf grounded into a tailor-made 6-4-3 double play with the bags full in the eighth inning, wasting two singles and a walk.

Cowboy pitcher Greg Dean walked the bases full in the bottom of the ninth, again putting the tying and leading runs on base. But pinch-hitter Scott McFall grounded out to the first baseman, ending the game.

"That's all you can do," Clark said. "We put ourselves in the position to win the game, and that's all you can ask for."

All four of the Wildcats' runs were scored in the bottom of the fourth inning. Oklahoma State scored a pair in the top of the fourth and was clinging to a 4-0 lead when K-State struck.

Tim Decker led off the inning with a single. He stole second, advanced to third on a Brian Culp ground-out and scored on a wild pitch.

Dave Hendrix then walked and went to second on a single by Jay Kopriva. He scored on a single by Wolf, and Kevin McMullin drove in Kopriva with another single.

Catcher Chris Bouchard finished off the scoring by driving in Wolf with a ground-out.

But all in all, the Wildcats scored just 16 runs in three games against the Cowboys — a team that entered the series with a team ERA of 5.1.

But it was K-State's defense that may have cost the Cats Sunday's game.

In the fourth, Fred Ocasio walked. He advanced to second on a ground-out and scored from second on a wild pitch.

On that play, Bouchard, a walk-on catcher, thought the ball hit the batter's foot, and he protested the call to the umpire. Meanwhile, Ocasio rounded third and scored.

"My problem is that I was too worried about the umpiring on that play," Bouchard said. "I take full responsibility for the run."

An inning later, Oklahoma State scored an unearned run when Todd Petering couldn't cleanly handle a throw by first baseman Hendrix.

The Cowboys' Peter Prodanov was stealing when Cat pitcher Robert Merriman caught him leaning. Hendrix hesitated before throwing to second, and Petering dropped the ball. Prodanov advanced to third and scored on a ground-out.

"We have a walk-on catcher and a freshman at first," Clark said. "I can live with those plays."

The Wildcats got routed in each of the first two games of the series, falling 24-4 Friday and 17-8 Saturday.

The Cowboy's Jason Heath drove in 10 runs Friday night, tying the single-game record for a Big Eight game.

The Cats continue Big Eight action this week with five games against intra-state rival Kansas.

K-State and KU square off Tuesday and Wednesday in Lawrence, then return to Manhattan for three weekend games.

ATHLETIC DEPARTMENT

AD search committee announced by Wefald

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The search is on.

On Friday afternoon, K-State president Jon Wefald announced the members of a search committee to find a new athletic director.

"We have been able to gather an outstanding and representative group of K-State supporters and University personnel to head up this most-important search," Wefald said.

Members of the group will include Lee Borck, Larned; Jim Cheatham, Edmond, Okla.; Max Moss, Wichita; D.L. Smith, Topeka; Mark Truitt, Kansas City; and Jack Vanier, Salina.

The search will be chaired by Bob Krause, K-State's vice president for institutional advancement.

"I am confident that this committee will do an outstanding job in conducting this search," Krause said. "We will immediately begin to advertise the position."

"It is my hope that the committee's recommendations will be forwarded to the president by August, with the new athletic director in place early in the academic year."

The selection process for the finalists will include campus interviews with the committee, K-

State coaches, athletes and members of the athletic administration.

Jim Epps has been leading the athletic department since the departure of Milt Richards in January of this year.

Richards resigned the position after 18 months on the job. He cited philosophical differences as the reason for his departure and has since been hired at the State University of New York in Albany, N.Y.

Campus members of the committee include the men's basketball coach Dana Altman and football coach Bill Snyder. Former basketball coach Jack Hartman will also assist in the search.

Other campus members include Jackie McClaskey, student body president; Mary Molt, chair of the Intercollegiate Athletic Council; Mark Moore, president of the KSU Foundation; Bob Snell, K-State faculty athletic representative; Veryl Switzer, associate athletic director; and Fred Wingert, student representative of the IAC.

"I have charged the committee to conduct a thorough and open search for the best possible individual to lead our athletic programs into the 21st century," Wefald said.

Royals make 3-run 1st stand in 3-2 win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A little bit of Brian McRae's football past crunched the Baltimore Orioles Sunday.

McRae tripled and scored by barreling over catcher Chris Hoiles on a grounder, sparking a three-run first inning that led Kansas City over the Orioles, 3-2.

"It felt good. He was open, so I knew I could get a good shot at him," said McRae, a defensive back and wide receiver in high school.

"It was a little bit of a flashback (trying) to cause a fumble."

"I was trying to go right through him and knock the ball loose," he said. "I'm not a morning person, so I don't like these day games. That kind of woke me up. It got my juices flowing. It gets you riled up."

The throw from first baseman David Segui was high. Hoiles dropped it an instant before he was hit by McRae and was given an error.

"Maybe the throw was a little high," Hoiles said. "But he got there in a hurry. He can run, so he got there in a hurry."

"I thought we had a chance to get him. It might have been a different situation if the throw had been in front of me."

McRae led off with the triple after consecutive triples by Mike Devereaux and Cal Ripken had produced a run for Baltimore in the top of the first.

Kevin Appier (2-1) gave up two runs and six hits in 7-1/3 innings, while striking out seven and walking one.

Jeff Montgomery got the final four outs for his fifth save.

Ben McDonald (1-2) pitched five innings, walking four and striking out four.

The Orioles added a run in the eighth when Ripken reached base on a fielder's choice, took third on a single by Harold Baines and scored on third baseman Keith Miller's throwing error.

The Royals have made it a practice this year to run from third whenever the ball is put in play, and it finally paid off. Wally Joyner walked after McRae's triple, and George Brett hit a grounder to Segui.

McRae gave Hoiles a forearm to the nose. Joyner went to third, and Brett took second. Felix Jose singled in a run, and Brent Mayne hit a two-out single for another.

Notes:

■ Kansas City stranded a season-high 12 runners.

■ All three games of the series were decided by one run, and Baltimore has been involved in six straight one-run games, the most since August 1974.

■ The Royals won their second series of the season.

■ Royals infielder Curtis Wilkerson got his first hit of the season.

■ Harold Baines struck out three times and is four for his last 24.

Jose to have examination

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Royals outfielder Felix Jose left the team Sunday to have his sore left shoulder examined.

Jose was to fly to Birmingham, Ala., to have the shoulder examined by Dr. Jim Andrews, a specialist who is Bo Jackson's personal doctor and who has operated on Boston pitcher Roger Clemens.

Jose, a switch-hitter, has been bothered by the shoulder since early in spring training. He has not been able to bat right-handed, and Manager Hal McRae has been forced to pinch hit for him when a left-handed reliever is brought into the game.

Jose left after the Royals' game against Baltimore and was expected to return Monday in time for a game against Detroit.

Numerous examinations by the Royals have failed to turn up a cause for the aching shoulder. The Royals have said they can only find inflammation, but they are mystified that it has gone on this long.

Jose, acquired just before spring training from St. Louis for Gregg Jefferies, was hitting .226, but four of his last seven hits were for extra bases. He hit his first home run Saturday.

Golfers hope improvement continues at Big 8 tournaments

"They've had an up-and-down season," he said. "Two tournaments ago, we won a tournament. But before that, we finished 12th in an 18-team tournament."

"Elliott thinks Jacque and I have the best chance of going on to regionals," said Hahn, who finished 11th last year when the tournament was in Manhattan. "He thinks I can be all-Big Eight."

Brian Frownfelter, Wildcat midfielder, chases a loose ball during the Cats' 16-6 win against Kansas.

"It might be different if they were a bunch of nice guys. But a lot of them have attitudes."

And Kansas' brief lead, Waldron said, was an eye-opener.

"We said, 'Oh — you want to

Because the Collegian reported polls at the complex would be open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and because no signs were posted in the complex to state otherwise, Farmer said the committee felt it was their duty to allow the veterinary medicine students to vote.

Gruenke said the current by-laws require no notification about candidates or polling information to anyone.

"There cannot have been a violation, as there are no rules to violate," Gruenke said.

Gruenke then addressed the original complaint's mention of veterinary medicine students' schedules.

"Additionally, vet-med students can, and in this election did, vote in the Union," Gruenke said. "They had the opportunity to vote — they just didn't get a special chance to vote. That is, they had the same restrictions of every other student on campus."

One of the grounds for Gruenke's appeal was that the committee "reached a decision in an unjust manner due to an inherent bias on the part of the hearing board."

Gruenke pointed out that Susan Scott, co-adviser to SGA, said at the committee hearing Friday morning she felt the committee was responding out of guilt.

"It is unfair for a biased group to make decisions that affect the entire student body," Gruenke said.

The committee's decision to have the new primary election on May 5 is unfair to students, Gruenke said.

"Many graduate students have no finals — have no reason to be on campus on May 5," Gruenke said. "To hold the special, special replacement election on that day is detrimental to my constituents, who out-number vet-med students six to one."

Farmer said the committee admitted a mistake was made and wanted to find the fairest remedy.

"The committee felt we did make a mistake by not being out there, and yes, it did hamper the election," Farmer said.

Farmer said there was no question the elections committee did intend to have a poll open at the Veterinary Medicine Complex from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

"On a vote of six to two, we decided that we admit the mistake, and that we need to hold a new run-off election," Farmer said.

Skoog said all the points of his appeal had already been covered by Gruenke, and he withdrew his appeal.

At 9:40 p.m., after 3-1/2 hours of deliberation, Student Tribunal Chancellor Jeff Hanson announced tribunal's decision to uphold the election committee's decision to have another campus-wide run-off election.

Tribunal ruled the committee did violate the by-law, stating polls at the complex must be open for two consecutive hours deemed most appropriate by the elections committee.

However, tribunal requested the election committee reconsider the date of the new run-off election, which was initially set for May 5.

The elections committee decided

Sunday the primary election will instead take place Wednesday.

McClaskey told tribunal members that President Jon Wefald said he would uphold the decisions if both student groups were in agreement. She said Wefald had asked her to make the announcement once tribunal's decision was given.

Gruenke said Sunday he intends to appeal tribunal's decision to Wefald today on the basis that the tribunal hearing was unfair.

"The process was inherently unfair," Gruenke said. "I'm going to ask President Wefald to direct tribunal to hold another hearing at which I can present a structured argument."

Gruenke said he was not given enough time to adequately write his appeal statement and added that appeals are usually based on the written report of the committee hearing in question.

Such a report was not available until the tribunal hearing convened at 5 p.m.

March on Washington brings visibility to 'gays care, domestic partner status and political action were all predominant themes throughout the day. The most pervasive attitude was pride and heightened visibility.

"Several times I had goose bumps and tears in my eyes," Robert Morrison, Atlanta, said. "For so much of our lives, we are told how undesirable we are. There is so much pain growing up. Today, we could be ourselves and be proud."

People everywhere wore shirts proclaiming their sexual identity. Strawn around their necks were pride rings. In their hands were signs reading slogans such as: "Lesbian Rights Now," "End Discrimination: Civil Rights for Lesbians and Gay Men," "Silence equals Death" and "I am Straight but Not Narrow."

Aside from any sign or T-Shirt though, the participants made the strongest statement with their presence. Walking through the streets of the U.S. Capitol, they held the hands of their partners.

"It was great to walk with a million people and hold hands," Morrison said. "It was great to see straight people feel uncomfortable because they always try and make us feel uncomfortable. For once, they were in our world."

Down Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol, the streets and the sidewalks lining them were a sea of people.

Anti-gay activist Rev. Fred Phelps, Topeka, protested with about 20 others on the corner 15th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Phelps and the others shouted at the marchers as they passed.

The Kansas contingency responded by chanting "No more hate" in response to Phelps' statement of "God hates fags." As the contingency passed, marchers shouted "Shame" and continued on their way to the Capitol.

"We are here because we want the same rights as the straight people," said Donna Holsenback, a mother from Tucker, Georgia.

"We stood up to say that for seven years we have been trying to be a family, and nobody has helped us. We can't pay taxes together or have a legalized marriage. It's just not fair."

The spirit of the march was evident throughout Washington.

One woman told the story of her ride downtown earlier that morning. While she was waiting for the metro, she saw a gay choir singing. A heterosexual family watched. When one of the children looked up at his mother and asked why they were singing, the mother said they were singing for their freedom.

One politician expressed hope for acceptance of homosexuals.

"We must live together," Jesse Jackson said during his speech. "This is America. We are a multicultural and multiracial country. This is no place for ethnic cleansing and sexual oppression."

"Smile through your tears, rise above your circumstances and find the silver lining in that cloud," Jackson said.

As the crowd slowly dissipated, the grounds were peppered with signs of change.

Winkler had a message for the youth of America: "I hope your generation appreciates the work that has been done and continues to push us forward."

occur on the same day as the arts-and-sciences election because one of the candidates might gain an unfair advantage.

Students in the College of Arts and Sciences can vote for arts-and-sciences senate candidates Tuesday or Wednesday, but will not be able to vote for president and vice president until Wednesday, Farmer said.

Elections committee members will remind those arts-and-sciences students who vote on Tuesday to return Wednesday for the presidential run-off.

Polls will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday in the K-State Union, while polls will be open from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Veterinary Science students have the option of voting in the Union Wednesday, Farmer said.

Candidates for student body president and vice president are prohibited from making any expenditures, Farmer said.

The only campaign materials allowed on campus are shirts and buttons. Other leftover campaign materials are prohibited.

Farmer said only verbal campaigning will be allowed.

Ed Skoog and Fred Wingert have agreed no debates will take place before the run-off Wednesday.

ZERO TRES LAD

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Problem is just like bad movie

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem, and maybe you can help me.

Like most college students, I never have enough money. I have a hard time trying to pay both my rent and my car payments on time.

I have a beautiful girlfriend. I love her dearly. When we walk around campus, I notice how the other guys look at her. I feel lucky to have someone so beautiful and nice.

My problem started about two months ago. Some guy at a party we were at offered me $250 to have sex with my girlfriend. My first instinct was to say "no." But I started thinking I needed the money. I knew whatever happened my girlfriend will always love me. It didn't matter if some other guy touched her. I know she is mine.

After some convincing, she agreed. The guy paid me with a check. The next day when I went to cash it, it bounced. That was just the beginning of my problems. Lately my girlfriend has developed a rash. I feel guilty about everything. What should I do?

Should I buy my girlfriend flowers to make up for everything? Cassandra, I need your help.

Feeling Guilty

DEAR IDIOT

If your letter is true, which I sincerely doubt (sounds a lot like an awful movie that's currently out), you are a complete and utter moron.

But first things first. Flowers won't cure a rash. I suggest you and your girlfriend see a doctor (and a psychologist). And if in the future you both consider prostitution as a way to make some extra money, I hope you develop enough common sense to not accept personal checks. Crimeny.

I also suggest that you find some worthwhile hobby. Sending juvenile letters to advice columnists is no way to live.

Finals schedule incorrectly listed

BRIEFLY
Varney's K-State Campus Datebook and the Spring 1993 Line Schedule both have incorrect final examination times listed.

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

If you think you already know when your finals are scheduled — double check.

Mistakes have been reported in the final examination schedule in the 1992-93 K-State Campus Datebook provided by Varney's Bookstore and in the Spring 1993 Class Schedule.

Dan Walter, textbook manager at Varney's Bookstore, said they were given the wrong copy of the spring examination schedule, and therefore, the wrong schedule was sent to the printer.

"Basically, it's our fault," Walter said. "The whole thing is wrong. We certainly apologize for the confusion and hope we can get everyone the correct information."

Jon Levin, owner and general manager of Varney's, said more than 3,000 of the datebooks have been sold.

"It puts the faculty in a real bad position," Levin said. "I guess next year we probably won't print the spring schedule."

Kevin Boyd, graduate teaching assistant in the Department of Economics, said a student in one of his classes pointed out the schedule differences to him.

"There's going to be some big problems, I'll bet," Boyd said. "The issue may not be addressed in other classes."

Boyd has mentioned the discrepancy in final examination times to his classes and has written the correct final examination times on the board. He said he's worried, however, about the students who don't come to class and won't know the correct examination time.

Monica Parrish, secretary with the Office of the Registrar, said the final examination schedule in the Spring 1993 Class Schedule also has corrections and additions.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said the registrar's office is doing everything it can to make sure the correct information is known.

"We are going to be sending a letter to all faculty members," DeVault said. "Hopefully, they'll have it by Wednesday."

All faculty and staff members who are on the master list with Printing Services will receive the information, and the correct schedule of examinations has been provided.

DON'T MISS YOUR FINAL!

The finals schedule in the Spring 1993 Class Schedule (line schedule) and in the 1992-93 K-State Campus Datebook (provided by Varney's Bookstore) are incorrect. Here is the correct schedule for this semester's finals.

Follow the directions on Page 14 of the class schedule to find out when your final will be, with one exception. In the second paragraph, the last sentence should read, "For example, a course that regularly meets MWF at 11:30 will be examined on Tuesday, May 11, 11:50 a.m. to 1:40 p.m."

Musician explains successful composing

RANCE AMES
Collegian

Action and reaction. For Joan Tower, that is the key to composing music.

Tower, a successful composer and pianist, spoke to more than 130 people in McCain Auditorium for the final lecture in the Convocation Lecture Series on Friday.

The title of her lecture was "Choreographing Sound."

"Every action has a reaction to that action," Tower said. "This concept is a very fundamental part of the music I compose."

She explained her theory.

"If I played a note on a triangle, you would think that sounded high," Tower said. "But if I played a very low note before the triangle, you would think, wow, that is really high."

Tower said she is a notated composer.

"Everything that I compose must be written down in a blueprint that is incredibly specific," she said.

She said the elements of space, rhythm, texture, color and pitch are all a part of music.

"Writing these elements down in such a precise manner can make it difficult to keep the sparkle to a piece," she said.

Tower showed the audience how she composes music by reconstructing how she developed "Silver Ladders," an orchestra piece she composed.

"I began this piece with one instrument, the timpani," Tower said. "I usually start my pieces at a low level of activity so I can slowly bring my listeners in."

She works her way up from one timpani to four drums, and then brings in the chimes.

"The chimes are a very different sound. This creates havoc in the piece," Tower said.

Because the drums must go up to compete with the chimes, Tower said she then brings in snare drums and symbols. All this results in a crescendo.

"The reaction to the crescendo is the whole orchestra coming in," Tower said.

The piece keeps going up over a long period of time.

"That is where the name 'Silver Ladders' comes from," she said.

After describing how she choreographed "Silver Ladders," Tower played a tape of the first eight minutes of the piece for everyone to hear what she had just described.

"You get the feeling of going up as an idea in this piece," Tower said.

BRIEFLY

JUDGE SETS DATE TO HEAR ARGUMENTS

A date has been set to hear arguments in Mark Mazour's amended petition for judicial review against K-State.

Jennifer Kassebaum, University attorney, said Judge Harlan Graham set June 29 as the date in a pre-conference hearing yesterday.

Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, alleges his civil rights were violated when a panel, acting under the K-State policy prohibiting sexual violence, found him guilty of violating that policy last fall.

He also alleges the policy is unconstitutional and that Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life and chairperson of the panel, was biased.

Mazour was arrested last fall on charges of rape and sodomy after an incident at the basketball ticket campout. Riley County District Attorney Bill Kennedy did not take the case to trial because of what he deemed insufficient evidence.

Kassebaum said the pre-conference hearing did not focus on Mazour's specific complaints. Instead, she said the conference was primarily for scheduling.

May 10 was set as the date for Greg Kieffer, Mazour's attorney, to file any request for additional discovery or evidence.

Graham has also required written briefs from both parties to be provided to him no later than June 1.

Kieffer did not return phone calls seeking comment.

SGA to ask Union to change food rules

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

K-State Union will be asked to make an exception to its rule stating all food items served in the Union must be purchased from a K-State Union Department.

The proposal will be presented to the Union Governing Board by Student Government Association on April 29.

The issue became important when student government had to pay the cost of the rental for international groups having activities off campus, said Sarah Caldwell, junior in English and SGA coordinator of finances.

"Students shouldn't have to pay twice. It's kind of like a double tax," she said.

This privilege will be limited to the International Coordinating Council, which sponsors activities such as Indian Night, African Night and International Night. Venues have to be found off campus for these events, Caldwell said.

It is hoped the board will be willing to make an exception to the rule for cultural and educational functions of which food is an integral part, Union Director Jack Sills said.

It is common for organizations to restrict the use of products to their own. The issue of sanitation is also a reason the Union does not allow groups to provide their own food, Sills said.

Also, if all the groups using the facilities of the Union were to provide their own food this would make the Union financially incapable of sustaining itself, he said.

TRIPPING WITH SHAKESPEARE

REVIEW BY SHAWN BRUCE

It was, in all regards, a fitting finale. A sold-out crowd gathered at the Bottleneck in Lawrence Saturday night to say goodbye to Trip Shakespeare.

The band plans on taking a year off from the music scene, beginning sometime in the early hours of May 23, after a final show in the band's hometown of Minneapolis, Minn.

Until then, Trip Shakespeare is making a trip throughout the country, playing the bars and honkytonks it played early in their careers.

And because of that, the band's performance Saturday night came off as a tribute and a way of saying thanks to the fans.

Taking the stage at 11:30, the band seemed determined to leave as many people as possible "Shakespeareanized" before riding off into the hiatus sunset.

The crowd, packed elbow-to-elbow in heat that would melt teflon, greeted even new and unfamiliar songs like "Star" with loud approval.

The most roaring approval, however, was reserved for songs off of the band's last two albums, "Across the Universe" and "Lulu." Both had songs that were examples of quirky pop music at its finest but paled in comparison to the band's live performances of those songs.

"Turtledove" opened with the a cappella voice of Dan Wilson singing "I come back to town today" before the rest of the band kicked in, led by John Munson's thundering bass guitar.

During "Bachelorette" the crowd sang along, at times so loud it seemed to be in a battle with the sound system to see who could sing louder.

Matt and Dan Wilson's guitar playing was at times quiet, at other times reminiscent of what garage-band jam sessions in the 1960s must have been like. Without a doubt, enough $1.75 bottles of Dos Equis beer were being consumed to cast a hallucinogenic-type atmosphere over the sweating fans.

But just when you were ready to bring back bell-bottoms, the band played the song "Let Me Tell You A Romantic Story."

The song is about an aphrodisiac pair of slacks that basically allows the wearer to have his way with women. The problem lies in the fact that both Wilsons and Munson can't agree in the song who actually was wearing the slacks and got the woman in question.

As the music played in the background, a verbal argument broke out between the three, with each calling the other two a liar.

It was fun, it was goofy, and it said a hell of a lot about men.

The band was brought back for two encores and played the college-radio classic "Tool Master of Brainerd" to the biggest applause of the evening. For the last song, Trip Shakespeare played the old classic "Time of the Season."

But in between the two, and much more impressive, was their version of the classic Neil Young song "Helpless." The harmonies, intermingled with soft and then painfully loud guitar, turned the idea of surrender into something almost sweet.

At the beginning of the show, Munson looked at the crowd and told how nice it was to be back at the Bottleneck.

"It feels good," he said.

It certainly did.

SADD puts end to happy hour

THE ISSUE

The national organization of SADD voted to no longer accept money from the alcohol industry.

WE SUGGEST

After 11 years of industry donations, SADD saves its integrity.

Saturday, the national organization of Students Against Drunk Driving voted in a behind-closed-doors meeting that it would no longer accept donations from liquor companies.

It seems since its formation in 1982, the organization, which promotes keeping young people from being killed in drinking-and-driving accidents, has collected millions of dollars from various alcohol companies.

In the past, SADD, which boasts an international membership of 6 million, has accepted donations from the likes of Anheuser-Busch Co. and the Strohs Brewery Co., as well as the Distilled Spirits Council. Anheuser-Busch alone donated $1.6 million between 1982 and 1991.

Money well spent.

However, questions arise as to the type of message this sends to the youth of this country. Some say an organization founded for the purpose of keeping young drinkers away from their keys compromises its integrity by accepting donations from liquor companies. That makes sense.

Due praise is deserved by SADD for waking from an 11-year sleep. Too great a number of our nation's young people are killed in drinking-related accidents every year. An organization such as SADD is much needed. However, should these funds come from the silent indirect contributor to these deaths?

Probably not.

The beauty of gridlock

Like a phoenix, gridlock recently rose from the ashes of the apparent death it suffered during President Clinton's inauguration. Last week, Senate Republicans issued Clinton his first major legislative defeat by rejecting his $16.3-billion economic stimulus package. Instead, they settled for a diminutive $4-billion unemployment benefits bill.

Clinton responded to the defeat by lamenting the evils of gridlock, the congressional phenomena that he convinced voters they were sick of during the election. With gridlock, Clinton for more than 200 years. Our founding fathers designed our system for gridlock. One branch of government can't lord over another, and democratic elections assure diverse representation, diverse opinions and diverse ideologies, as well as a lot of arguing, conflict, and gridlock.

I remember learning that history lesson in my eighth-grade social studies class. Unfortunately, history is becoming a moot variable in much of public debate. The more liberals can divorce our nation from the lessons of history and convince us that the only good ideas are "new" ideas, the more successful they will be.

Gridlock is a sign our government is healthy. It slows down the legislative process, but democratic systems are inherently cumbersome. We could follow Castro's lead and establish an expedient government, but then we would have to worry about being arrested or shot during the night as we slept. I'd rather have gridlock.

I agree opposing legislation solely because of a party label is petty. Yet, what many citizens fail to realize is that the recent gridlock between Senate Republicans and President Clinton is the result of sincere philosophical differences. It's also true that political parties are not formed and developed on an arbitrary basis. Parties are built around a few philosophical positions, and are often in direct conflict with the philosophies of other parties.

supporters (yes, George Bush made similar arguments) claim the government is paralyzed, unable to meet the needs of citizens.

Nevertheless, Clinton is not alone in treating gridlock as an evil force that should be eradicated from government. Fidel Castro, from the nation of glorious cigars, can't stand gridlock either. In his system, he can draft legislation, hustle it past lawmakers and sign it into law before our Congress has finished one round of debate.

The former Soviet Politburo didn't have much of a problem with gridlock either, since there weren't any other political parties to oppose their legislation. When gridlock appeared to be a threat, they could always shoot the opposition or send them to Siberia. China doesn't have a problem with gridlock either; neither does Iraq.

It's all very marvelous. Authoritarian, totalitarian, communist, or otherwise one-party systems are generally free from the horrors of gridlock. Unfortunately, for lover-of-diversity President Clinton, America is not a one-party (Liberal Democrat) system.

In fact, the principle of gridlock in many ways represents the essence of a democratic system. An attack on gridlock is an attack on a pillar that has supported our nation

Advocating gridlock is not equivalent to resisting change, contrary to the myths propagated by the media and liberal politicians. Republicans often want change as much as Democrats do — the difference is their plan for change. Disagreeing with Clinton's economic stimulus package does not mean Republicans are opposed to change; it means they're opposed to disaster.

Economists from the National Association of Manufacturers predict that Clinton's economic plan will produce only 150,000 of the expected 400,000 jobs next year. During five years, they forecast the plan will reduce job creation by more than 1.2 million jobs.

With Bill Clinton and his tactics of doom, four more years of gridlock is exactly what America needs.

ELECTION

Candidates respond to Collegian story

Editor,

If comments that were made in the Thursday, April 22, Collegian by either of us offended anyone, we are sorry. We appreciate the fact that the Collegian has made every attempt to be fair thus far in the election. We felt that the coverage of our election results party was maybe an exception.

We had requested a clarification of the context in which statements were made. In addition, we asked for a correction of a statement, but in both cases we were denied. Though our effort over the last month may not have received enough votes to win, we took great pride in the fact that we expressed a positive image and view of K-State students.

Those were some of the same views we shared when the call came in that we lost by 13 votes. However, only one Collegian staff member was there to shoot pictures and report the story. It really was not our fault that the other staff member was late, was it?

Instead of a truly accurate account, we got some mistakes. On Friday, we got a record number of letters highlighting the inaccurate statements. To set the record straight, we both feel that Ed and Eric are good guys. We enjoyed getting to know them better over the last few weeks. We do disagree, however, on some issues and the way that K-State should be represented.

We really don't want any special treatment, just a fair shake. We appreciate the Collegian printing this and you reading it. Thank you.

Attacks don't have a place in this election

Editor,

"If we're going to live together, we've got to play together first."

Spike Lee maybe didn't think that quote would mean that much at the time, but it is clear that even in Kansas, we have trouble with even the simplest things in life.

My letter is in direct response to the letters published in the April 23 issue of the Collegian.

How sad is it that people feel the need to put down another person in order to make themselves or ideas look better. I was raised that if you support a person or their ideas, do just that — support them. Never in my life was I told that in order to follow one candidate you need to be not only against, but detest and defame, the other in order for your candidate to look like a winner.

We should be proud that we have two candidates that passionately want to represent K-State. I feel that I am lucky to know both candidates personally. I feel even better that I know how I should represent them — gracefully. I plead to all students to vote for their choice for student body president and vice president if there should be another run-off.

I also urge future writers to make sure you understand what you read. Try the journalism style and read it three times. I think you will find out that Fred Wingert's brother was the one with the quotes you cited.

Let's grow up. If we can't do it here in Manhattan, how do we expect the rest of the world to get along? Actions speak louder than words. Just vote.

Darby Wallace
Junior/Public relations

Candidate has side that some don't see

Editor,

After reading the four letters in Friday's Collegian trashing Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson, I felt the time has come to shed light on the real Fred.

I am not an expert on campus issues, and I am not a student senator, but I have known Fred for a long time. We both grew up in Ottawa, attended the same schools and were involved in 4-H together. My senior year, both Fred and I served as co-captains of the football team together.

As a teammate, Fred was someone you could trust, someone who really cared about people and someone who could be counted on. When things were not right in the school, it was normally Fred who seemed to be the one who spoke up for students. Having said all of this, I must say that Fred has faults, and he is human.

He probably should not have said some of the things he did minutes after the election, and knowing Fred, he regrets he did. But we can't forget he had spent the last five weeks very committed to K-State and students. He is, after all, just a 21-year-old student.

The reason I wrote was that comments like politician, self-serving, etc. just are not true. These comments were made by people who didn't know Fred and judged Fred on comments he made after receiving the news he lost the closest race in the history of K-State, 13 votes out of 3,000 cast.

I have read more than a year's worth of Ed Skoog's and Eric Henry's columns in the Collegian. However, I am not slamming them for inappropriate material that appeared in the Collegian. Remember, they had months to think about those statements — Fred had at max a few minutes.

As I said before, I may not know everything about K-State, but I have observed and have known Fred Wingert for many years. The information in the April 23 Collegian is just plain inaccurate, and printing all four letters was just a little too much. The Collegian seems to like picking on Fred and Jeff — could they be rooting for their own Ed and Eric?

Though it might be too late, I didn't think a little truth would hurt.

Is exclusive Vet Med polling place justified?

Editor,

I simply cannot understand the decision to hold the election again. I realize it was a close vote, and I realize polls were not open at the Veterinary Medicine Complex when they were supposed to be, but it's not as if the vet-med students were denied the opportunity to vote. Anyone who wanted to could have made it to the K-State Union sometime between 7:30 a.m. and 6:30 p.m. I know vet-med students are busy, but if they had really been intent on voting, they could have done so.

The way I see it, it is a special privilege for vet students to be able to vote at the complex as it is; they are the only college with a polling place set up just for them.

I know the decision to re-run the vote has been upheld through several levels of bureaucracy, but in my opinion, the wrong decision has been made, and I wonder if the same decision would have been made if the outcome of the original election had been different.

Graduate student/English

Have you ever heard of adjectives, adverbs?

Editor,

I would like to take exception to a statement made by Stephanie Fuqua in the post-election cover story in the April 22 Collegian. Fuqua describes Ed Skoog: "with what could only be described as a s—eating grin on his face."

Using obscenities is not the only way to describe facial expressions, as the editor or any English or journalism professor could have told the writer.

Obscenities are used for "shock" value or by those whose range of communication is extremely limited. Neither of these applies in a publication from an institution of higher education whose readership extends considerably beyond the student body.

It seems the Collegian should be striving to meet the highest standards of journalism rather than the lowest.

RESPONSE

Questions from a quest columnist

Editor,

Why must you change a title and remove the punch line from an article?

In the April 21 Collegian, you published an article I had written for the "What Do You Think" feature. The original title was "Making Friends ... a Risky Business." Your change to "Why can't we all be friends?" changed the tone from one of challenge into one of whining.

As if that were not enough, you also gutted the article by removing the questions at the end, which are the equivalent of the punch line of a joke. For your readers, the questions you cut off are included below:

Would you clam shut and remain a loner, or open up to make friends, at the risk of getting a bruise?

Would you tell others to bug off so they cannot hurt you, or listen to them because they may well become exciting friends?

Would you prefer to see our society encased in a rigid straitjacket of imposed rule, or would you rather make up your own mind on how to deal with those around you?

If you make it clear that you trust nobody, would you expect others to trust you?

If you stand ready to listen openly to others, would you expect those others to listen to you?

Would you get mad at people who disagree with you, or would you try to reason with them, to see whether you can find some common ground?

TOLES

SPEECH

Students are learning 'lies'

KEVIN STRECKER

Collegian

Burton Folsom Jr., an author and Murray State University history professor, spoke Monday night about "the three lies" learned in college. His speech was sponsored by College Republicans and the Young America's Foundation.

"Lie No. 1 is that textbooks are reliable. I find that they are very unreliable. In fact, a Texas high school found 5,200 errors in a textbook used in their school," Folsom said.

"At the college level, it is not so much lies, but distortions."

Christian beliefs have been important in history and need to be in the textbooks, he said.

"Some think that Columbus was crazy, but it's noted that Columbus' journey was a mission from God," Folsom said.

Lie No. 2 is the government can solve problems, he said.

"I really question if the government can solve anything," Folsom said.

He said politicians say they can fine-tune the economy, but they haven't for 60 years and still can't. Appealing-sounding programs are what many politicians use, he said, but they have to raise taxes to pay for these programs.

"My point is that these programs raise taxes, and you can't create jobs this way. You can't take money out of the private sector and put it into public sector and expect to create jobs."

Folsom defined the misery index as an index that is achieved by adding inflation and unemployment together.

"The four best misery indexes occurred during the four tax cuts in the last 70 years," Folsom said. "When taxes are raised, the rich will put money into tax-deductible products. In the past we have doubled amount of revenue by cutting the tax rates."

Folsom said President Clinton is increasing taxes from 31 to 37 percent.

"If history represents itself, we will see a drop of money that comes in revenue," Folsom said. "We could see a double in our national debt."

Folsom said "safe sex" is lie No. 3.

"People, you have been lied to. Even wearing a rubber does not prevent pregnancy," he said. "The HIV virus and others can slip through the pores in a condom. There is no such thing as safe sex."

He gave some statistics about sexually transmitted diseases in America. Thirty-three thousand

Cat football players get taste of NFL's free-agent market

REGGIE BLACKWELL
Collegian

The K-State football team didn't have anyone go in the NFL draft Sunday or Monday, but the Cats are getting a good look at the free-agent market.

At least five members were contacted by NFL teams Monday after the draft wrapped up. Eric Gallon, Chris Patterson, Toby Lawrence, Gerald Benton and Tony Williams each said they heard from an NFL team.

Gallon, the Wildcats' leading rusher the past two seasons, said he is going to New England. He said he was also contacted by the New York Jets, the New York Giants, the Chicago Bears and the Pittsburgh Steelers. He said he chose New England because of the team's interest in him throughout the year.

Gallon was predicted by many publications to go in the fourth or fifth round, and he said he was disappointed in not being drafted.

Gallon said the knee surgery he had prior to the 1992 season probably had something to do with not being drafted but was not the determining factor.

Lawrence said he may join former Wildcat tight end Russ Campbell in Pittsburgh. Lawrence was a starting guard and tackle for four years at K-State and said he's happy to have the opportunity to play professionally.

The Wildcat offense was also represented by Benton, the speedster from Florida. Benton said he will probably join Warren

Moon and the Houston Oilers.

The defense was also represented in the free-agent market.

Patterson, a four-year starter at linebacker, was contacted by several teams. He declined to comment on the teams right now because he is weighing his options.

Williams, a St. Louis native and four-year starter at defensive tackle, said he is deciding between Cleveland and Miami. He said he will base his decision on whether he will be asked to play offense or defense.

Along with those five players, four other former Wildcats have opportunities to play professionally, according to several scouting reports. They are Sean Snyder, Jody Killian, Jeff Simoneau and C. J. Masters.

GOLF

K-State squads in 7th at Big 8 tourneys

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Both Wildcat golf teams completed the first day of the Big Eight championships in seventh place Monday afternoon.

Because Colorado doesn't have a women's golf team, K-State's women are currently in last place after two rounds at the Firethorn Golf Club in Lincoln, Neb.

Valerie Hahn leads the women with a first-day total of 169. She is in 20th place, 14 strokes behind Shelley Finnestad of Iowa State.

Overall, the Cyclones are in first place with a total of 624, 21 strokes ahead of Oklahoma State. The Wildcats shot a two-round total of 694 but are only one stroke back of Missouri to climb out of the cellar.

Denise Pottle is just two strokes back of Hahn and in 24th place.

Dallas Cox is in 29th with an 89, Jacques Wright has a 179 and is in 30th, and Debbie Chrystal is currently in 34th with a 184.

The men shot a first-day, two-round total of 619, 36 holes behind first-place Oklahoma State and ahead of only Missouri's 637. Golfers had to contend with a 25-mph wind at the Prairie Dunes Country Club in Hutchinson.

"I think that's about as bad as we possibly could have played," K-State coach Mark Elliott said. "There's no excuse for us to shoot as high as we did."

"The conditions weren't that great, but I don't think the wind was the most important factor."

Only two players in the entire tourney, neither of whom plays for K-State, shot par Monday.

Richard Laing led the Cats with scores of 74 and 76. He is currently in 13th place, 10 strokes behind Alan Bratton of Oklahoma State. Laing finished last season's tourney in seventh.

Sophomore Brett Waldman shot a 78 in the first round, then improved his play and shot a second-round total of 75. He is currently in 21st place with a 153.

Other Wildcat scores include a 157 by Jim Brenneman (27th), a 159 for Chad Judd (31st) and a 165 for Will Seibert (36th).

"It was just one of those days," Elliott said. "There just better not be two in a row."

SPORTS DIGEST

► TIGERS BEAT ROYALS 5-3 FOR 11TH WIN IN 12 GAMES

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Detroit Tigers, coming off three lopsided victories, struck for four more runs in the first inning, two on Kirk Gibson's double, beating Kansas City, 5-3, Monday night for their sixth straight victory.

Detroit won for the 11th time in 12 games. The Tigers trounced Minnesota 12-4, 17-1 and 16-5 at the Metrodome during the weekend.

Tony Phillips, the leading hitter in the American League, led off the game with a single, and Lou Whitaker was hit by a pitch from Mark Gubicza (0-3).

Travis Fryman followed with a single, and Phillips scored on center fielder Brian McRae's error. Gibson doubled for a 3-0 lead, stole third and scored on a wild pitch.

The Royals' ninth-inning rally was stifled when Brian McRae lined into a double play with two on and nobody out after Kansas City had already scored two runs.

► CHIEFS PULL NO SURPRISES IN FINAL ROUNDS OF DRAFT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Not only were the Kansas City Chiefs the last team to act in the draft, but their choices were among the most predictable.

An offensive lineman was Kansas City's first choice — perfectly logical for a team that just acquired 36-year-old quarterback Joe Montana but gave up 48 sacks last season.

Will Shields, a 300-pound right guard from Nebraska who won the prestigious Outland Award as the nation's top interior lineman, was the 74th player taken Sunday and the first by Kansas City.

In the fourth round, the Chiefs took Jaime Fields, a 235-pound interior linebacker from Washington.

In the fifth round today, the Chiefs selected offensive tackle Lindsay Knapp, a 6-foot-5-inch, 276 pound, fifth-year senior from Notre Dame. Their selection in the sixth round was Darius Turner, a running back from Washington. In the seventh round, the Chiefs selected Danan Hughes, a wide receiver from Iowa.

Struggling Cats to battle 1st-place Hawks

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State baseball team travels to Lawrence today for the start of a five-game series against the Kansas Jayhawks at 7 p.m. in Hoglund-Maupin Stadium.

These two squads finished in the Big Eight cellar last season, each team sporting an 8-16 conference record. Since then, the teams have gone in different directions.

The Jayhawks are 32-10 and tied with Oklahoma State for first in the Big Eight with a 13-6 Big Eight record, while the Wildcats are 13-25 and 4-11 in the conference — good for sixth place.

Kansas has won seven of its last 10 games, despite losses in two of three games to Missouri last weekend. After starting the season 3-3, the Hawks have gone to win 22 of their next 25 games.

Their average game score is 10.5 in their favor.

"We've had a good season," Kansas coach Dave Bingham said. "I feel our senior kids have done very well. We knew this would be a good team."

The 32 wins make the third-highest total in Kansas history, and the Hawks still have nine games to go before the Big Eight tournament.

Bingham said the team's seven seniors have been the factor this year. Seniors who have stepped up are Jeff Niemeier, John Wuycheck and Jeff Berblinger.

Niemeier leads the team with 63 hits; Wuycheck is the team leader in runs batted in with 47, and Berblinger has eight home runs and a team-high 28 stolen bases.

Meanwhile, K-State has lost eight of its last 10 games. But K-State coach Mike Clark said the team can turn around.

"We've got an 11-game season left," Clark said. "We got to come out and compete hard."

"We shot ourselves in the foot several times. If we can play hard and win some games, we can finish with a good season and play in the post-season."

"Our attention has to be good. We are going to have to put our necks into it."

Dan Driskill (3-5) will get the nod from Clark for tonight's game. Driskill, who is 2-0 against the Hawks, will face Chris Corn (7-2). Corn is the staff ace, leading the team in both strikeouts (61) and wins.

Kansas will send Tom Stewart (5-3) to the mound for Wednesday's game. Clark said he has not decided who will start that game for the Wildcats.

K-State won three out of four games last year in Lawrence, but Kansas leads the all-time series 146-123 (70-46 at home).

The Hawks have a 23-3 home record, and the Wildcats are 1-11 on the road.

Champs. Again.

The Wildcat men's soccer team defeated Nebraska Sunday afternoon in Lawrence to win its second straight Big Eight championship.

Nebraska, a team that wasn't expected to pose a real threat, played tough, K-State Coach Viktor Atughonu said.

"There was a lot of pressure to defend the championship," he said. "It was definitely more difficult this year," he said.

"With our experience, we thought it would be an easy tournament."

"But Nebraska gave us a little bit of a problem."

But the coach was still sure of his team.

"We were confident that we could win it. I give credit to all the players," said Atughonu, who was voted the conference's coach of the year last season.

Wildcat stopper Brent Carpani said K-State may have been hindered by injuries.

"We had a lot of people who were playing with injuries," he said. "We had a lot of people who were beat up from a week before, but we still played well."

At the end of regulation in the championship game, the score was tied 1-1. After two scoreless 10-minute overtimes, the game was decided by a shoot-out.

Both teams took turns shooting penalty shots. Taking shots they had practiced earlier, K-State took five shots, scoring four goals.

"We've taken second in two tournaments because of penalty kicks," Carpani said. "So we've been practicing them."

"We were going to make sure we didn't lose it on penalty kicks."

After the Huskers' fourth shot — and third point — ownership of the championship trophy came down to Nebraska's final shot.

Wildcat goalie Dan Watkins made a diving save.

"It went to my right," he said.

"I dove and saved it."

Watkins said he was prepared for the penalty kicks.

"I had been taking penalty kicks in practice," he said. "I'm from Nebraska, and I knew some of those guys kicked — even though a lot of them didn't shoot in the direction they were used to going."

Teammate Carpani gave praise to Watkins' performance in the net.

"Our goalie made two great saves," Carpani said. "That was the deciding factor. In that situation, it's basically up to the goalie."

"It's easy to make the kick. It usually comes down to whether they save the ball or not."

The Wildcats beat Missouri earlier in the day, which enabled the team to play for the title — despite a Saturday loss to Oklahoma State.

With the trophy in Manhattan, Wildcat sweeper Frank Weeks said he was pleased.

"It feels even better than the first time," he said. "I wanted to win one more time. We had a couple new guys who weren't with us last year. It was fun to win it for them."

K-State has no more scheduled games this season.

Runners stress food aid for poor

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Everybody must work together to end hunger.

This was the focus of a press conference held by Students Ending Hunger and the Flint Hills Breadbasket Friday at Manhattan City Auditorium.

The conference was held to welcome Tim Gannon and Steve Apatow, runners for Run Across America. The run was established to raise awareness about the need for emergency food aid in the United States.

Gannon said the run was targeted at community involvement to end the hunger problem.

"We have gone through the Appalachian areas and areas of West Virginia. There is a great deal of denial — they have not registered the fact that there is a problem," Gannon said.

"We have to start at the grassroots level."

K-State President Jon Wefald said Manhattan has already started to realize there is a hunger problem.

"The Manhattan community has a wide and deep compassion for the poor, the needy and the have-not," Wefald said.

Roger Maughmer, mayor of Manhattan, offered proof of that statement.

"We have begun to establish a hunger-free zone. Last year we collected 149,000 pounds of food," Maughmer said.

Of that number, 74,000 pounds were collected by students at K-State, Maughmer said.

Amy Sislo, freshman in anthropology, represented Students Ending Hunger at the press conference. She said despite current efforts, more needs to be done to create a hunger-free zone in Manhattan.

"A hunger-free community means a great deal of commitment to end hunger. We need people who are committed enough to keep going and going to end hunger," Sislo said.

Several organizations are fighting hunger in Manhattan and creating a hunger-free zone, said Shirley Bramhall, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

As part of that fight, more than 600 pounds of food were donated during a food drive for Run Across America, Bramhall said.

"The credit goes to so many people and so many entities in Manhattan. There is an extraordinary community network. The food is funneled into the Breadbasket and funneled out to 41 recipient agencies," Bramhall said.

The 133-day run began Feb. 28 in Washington, D.C. Both Gannon and Apatow will run 12 to 15 miles each day. They will visit 270 cities before reaching San Francisco, their final destination.

Rule causes concern for rental charges

If revenue exceeds expenses, this goes back to the Union to support activities and other services, Sills said.

"Whatever is left in the pot belongs to the students for facility services and so forth," Sills said.

He said he does not expect this minor adjustment in policy to affect the current rate structure used to charge registered student organizations for the use of the Union or the activity fee paid by students.

"We do not want to jeopardize the food services in the Union,"

Caldwell said.

It is understandable that a lot of liability is involved when groups take their own food, she said. That is why the request will only be limited to ICC for now.

"We just want an exception to the rule for ICC," she said.

If the proposal is accepted, ICC will have to work out the technicalities with the Union.

If the proposal is rejected by the board, there is no intention of threatening the Union, Caldwell said. An option SGA will consider is to reduce the fees paid by students, she said.

Investigators say cult started several fires

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Members of a doomsday cult started the fire that consumed their prairie fortress a week ago, independent arson investigators said Monday. The fire killed an estimated 86 people.

"We believe it was intentionally set by persons inside the compound," said Paul Gray, who headed the investigation team. "At least two locations were significantly distant enough from each other that they couldn't have been set by the same source at the same time."

The findings supported FBI claims that the fire was set by Branch Davidian members. Some of the nine survivors have claimed the fire began when a tank knocked over a burning lantern.

Gray said several factors contributed to the quick movement of the fire. The compound burned to the ground in less than 45 minutes.

The building contained a large amount of unusually flammable materials, including bales of hay and several types of gaseous liquids, he said. The compound also was poorly constructed, had no firewalls, and the blaze was fanned by wind gusting to 30 mph.

Gray said investigators still had not determined if followers of David Koresh had spread fuel to speed the fire.

The FBI has said its snipers saw a cult member stoop down and start a fire, and that helicopters saw the blaze begin in three separate places at about the same time.

Gray, a Houston arson investigator, led a team whose findings will be submitted to Attorney General Janet Reno and federal authorities.

Reno ordered the report to answer questions raised about the FBI's responsibility in the fire.

Also Monday, a second victim of the blaze was identified, and authorities said she had a bullet wound to the head.

Peace Justice David Pareya identified the second victim as Shari Doyle, 18.

Pareya said Doyle had a gunshot wound to the head, but also contributing to her death were smoke and carbon monoxide poisoning and extensive charring.

Her body was found atop the bunker inside the fortress, he told reporters.

The FBI has said three cult members had been shot. County medical examiners said Doyle was the second so far.

Earlier Monday, Paul Fatta, 35, one of Koresh's reputed inner-circle advisers, emerged from hiding and surrendered in Houston. He was charged with conspiracy to manufacture and possess unregistered machine guns, Texas Ranger Brantley Foster said. Koresh and his followers accumulated a huge stockpile of weapons and munitions.

Fatta said the Branch Davidians sold weapons and munitions to the public to raise money.

Fatta had been sought since the Feb. 28 raid outside Waco that left four federal agents dead and set off the 51-day siege that ended with last week's deadly inferno. Fatta was not at the compound during the standoff.

Wait until class is out of session

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem that I just can't face myself with or talk about to anyone else.

I am a male in a major that is predominantly male. I have been concerned for some time that I may be leaning toward the homosexual lifestyle. As if that weren't enough to weigh heavily on my mind, one of my instructors has given me cause for more concern. He is an older, very intelligent man who I can only compare to a god. His body is chiseled from granite and his mind is sharp and quick.

The reason I am concerned is that I am beginning to fall for this instructor, and he has made comments in class to the effect that he is tolerant of homosexual behavior. What I want to know is, should I approach him or just continue to dream about him at night when I work on the excessive amount of homework he assigns?

Dazed and Confused

DEAR DAZED,

You should just continue to dream about him at night as you work on the excessive amount of homework he has assigned you.

Instructors/student relationships are wrong while class is in session.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have recently been exploring my individuality in the areas of fashion and dress.

I have bought a pair of Birkenstocks. I have various holes in my ear, and I wear a little bear on a string around my neck.

My most recent purchase was a toe ring, the latest in "granola" fashion. Now, after I came back from Colorado for spring break with my face totally sunburnt and wearing my toe ring, my friends are calling me a "granola-wanna-be."

They tell me that Greenpeace is recruiting me, and that I should "Save the Earth."

This terrorization is driving me crazy. What should I do? Should I shun my friends, or should I wait for their immature stage to end? I love my toe ring and don't want to get rid of it. Help!

Sunburnt and Sick of Being Made Fun Of

DEAR SUNBURNT,

Dude. So, your friends are laying a heavy power trip on you just because you wear Jerusalem Cruisers and cool jewelry? Bummer. They should just mellow and let you do your own thing.

I mean, after all, it's not like your toe ring is on their toes or something. They are being totally uncool.

If everybody would just chill about things like this, the world would be a much better place. I mean, we may not have it all together, but together we have it all. Turn their negative energy into positive energy and give it back to them. Remember, in the end, the love you take is equal to the love you make.

Here is something a wise person once said that should help clear things up for you:

"I have seen where the wolf has slept by the silver stream/ I can tell by the mark he left you were in his dream/Come wash the night time clean/Come grow the scorched ground green/ Blow the horn and tap the tambourine ..."

CONGRATULATIONS TO the men of Delta Sigma Phi for winning Greek Games! We knew you were #1! Love your AXID coaches.

KD Wendy: Congratulations on becoming a Classy Cat. Love and AOT, Grandma Lora

KD WENDY Congratulations on becoming a KSU Priddy. We are all proud of you. Love and AOT Sisters.

TO OUR AZD Greek Games coaches: Beth, Heather, Amy, Andrea, Melanie, as the AZD Greek Games '93 rolled around, we all knew that fun was sure to abound, on Thursday we were all white and couldn't get down, and Saturday hangovers lingered, from a night on the town. Your bathroom was assaulted by Mr. Green's hurl, and Clay became teapot when his song was unfurled. You woke us up much to our chagrin, and that trip to the park made all our heads spin. Doughnuts, hot dogs and pop fueled our fire, and we undressed you the quick-est, with much desire. We tugged forever and spiked the ball, while only Noodle and Tanner had a great fall. What could be better than this day in the sun? Why a night in the hot tubs to cap off the fun! When it was all over, we choked back a tear, what do you say to... same time next year? Love, the Pi Kappas

Clinton pleased by Yeltsin victory

"This is a very, very good day not only for the people of Russia but for all the people of the world."

BILL CLINTON
U.S. PRESIDENT

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton hailed Boris Yeltsin's strong ballot showing Monday as an outstanding victory and said it could help him sell Congress on a new $1.8-billion aid package for Russia.

Yeltsin's win was welcomed by a relieved White House as vindication of Clinton's decision to pursue a high-profile course of support for the embattled Russian president.

Clinton called Yeltsin to congratulate him. In turn, Yeltsin offered a great Russian bear hug to everyone in America who had supported him, the president said.

White House aides said the call lasted 15 minutes.

"This is a very, very good day not only for the people of Russia but for all the people of the world," Clinton said.

Preliminary results and exit polls showed a majority of voters in Sunday's referendum gave the 62-year-old

Russian president a vote of confidence and endorsed his extensive free-market reforms.

Clinton said Yeltsin and his economic reforms triumphed even though Russians are suffering extreme hardships.

"I think the reaffirmation of his policies really is a tribute to the farsightedness of the Russian people," Clinton said. "I think in the end what happened was they decided that as difficult as it is, that that is the only path they could take."

Clinton also suggested Yeltsin's victory could make the task of winning allied support for stronger action in Bosnia easier.

Had Yeltsin failed to gain the vote of confidence, the Russian government might have become much more intransigent in its support for the Serbs, Clinton said.

"It is now, I think, clear that the United States and our allies need to move forward with a stronger policy in Bosnia," Clinton said.

The president moved swiftly to express support for Yeltsin, not even waiting until official election results were in. He announced the phone call himself, during a ceremony in the East Room honoring the University of Arkansas track team.

"I called to congratulate him on his outstanding victory in the election and to reassure him that the United States continues to support him as the elected leader of Russia and continues to look forward to our partnership and working to reduce the threat of nuclear weapons, to increase trade and commerce and to promote democracy."

Yeltsin's critics in Russia said only about 35 percent of Russia's 105.5 million eligible voters actually expressed confidence in Yeltsin, with the rest voting against him or staying away from the polls.

Americans get sexually transmitted diseases every day, he said.

"More babies were born with sexually transmitted diseases last year than all children affected by polio in the 1950s," Folsom said.

He said Christian beliefs and strong family life have weakened.

Folsom blamed the media and said it needs to send out a correct message. All we get today is the safe-sex campaign from the media, he said.

"In fact, much of what you're learning at college is inaccurate. You're being filled with lies," he said. "I now have a quote from the Bible. Without a vision, people perish. Without knowledge, people perish. If you don't handle the situation, you will perish."

He said students have the capacity to change the cycle of separated and unhappy families. If people are successful in their family lives, they will make a better contribution, he said.

This is the first in a three-part series about Student Body President Jackie McClaskey's 18 months in office. Her term ends Thursday.

He remembers how agonizing the decision was for her.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said he had long conversations with Jackie McClaskey, senior in Franklin said he remembers how heavily the time commitment and possibility of failure weighed upon her.

"People need to understand that one of the biggest things you go through psychologically is the whole issue of ego," Franklin said. "You need to have a certain degree of ego to run because you put yourself to such public scrutiny and ridicule. That's a scary process."

In the fall of 1991, McClaskey decided to face that scrutiny and became the third woman in K-State history to attain the office of student body president.

Having won the run-off election by more than 400 votes, her initial worries seem unwarranted 18 months later.

Phil Anderson, faculty senator, Faculty Senate representative to Student Senate and instructor of speech, said he was opposed to the idea of an 18-month presidency.

"It's turned out rather well," Anderson said. "I think Jackie's had a very successful presidency. I think she's got a lot accomplished."

"I have never in my five years known of any student body president that worked harder or longer hours, more dedicated hours and knew more about more issues than Jackie McClaskey," he said.

Building strong working relationships contributed to McClaskey's successes,

Franklin said.

"You can't get anything done as a leader without building relationships, and Jackie does that really, really well," Franklin said. "I think she has a mature mind for a young woman. She's very clear, very focused."

Franklin said because of this, his advice was often not needed.

"Jackie has not needed my assistance as much as other student body presidents because of her ability to develop relationships with a wide range of people," he said. "Jackie

Request to cancel election denied

Two complaints against Wingert filed; letter ruled a campaign violation

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

A request by a student to stop today's run-off election was denied by the Student Governing Association Elections Committee Tuesday night.

David Frese, junior in journalism and mass communications and co-campaign manager for Ed Skoog and Eric Henry, lodged two formal complaints regarding campaign materials allegedly used by Fred Wingert, Jeff Peterson and their supporters.

Frese asked the second election be canceled because of these violations.

His first complaint was about a letter to the editor submitted by Wingert and Peterson, which was printed in the Collegian Tuesday.

Frese said the letter violated a written agreement among the candidates that only verbal campaigning or clothing promoting the candidates be used.

The committee ruled Wingert and Peterson were in violation of the agreement, but the committee said the violation wasn't enough to impose any sanctions on him, such as disqualification from the election.

Wingert said he had consulted with Mary Farmer, SGA elections committee chairwoman, to confirm that his letter was not violating any rules before he submitted it.

"I called the only person I knew who could honestly interpret the rules," Wingert said. "If I thought I violated the rules, I wouldn't have done it."

Wingert said there were no words in the letter that spoke of the campaign, and all he wanted to do was clarify statements that had been written in a Collegian article published the day after the run-off election.

"There are more important issues in this campaign," Wingert said. "I don't think the letter will have a big effect on the campaign."

Ed Skoog, senior in English, said he could have responded to the letter but decided not to because of his staff position on the Collegian.

"Even if I had been allowed to do that, people would associate us with the Collegian, and it would look biased," Skoog said.

Eric Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said Wingert's name was published 14,000 times and circulated across campus. He said this was no different than if Wingert would have used flyers, cards or posters.

Skoog and Henry said they wouldn't have responded to Wingert's letter anyway because of the agreement they had signed.

"We've all become public figures, and when any of us have the opportunity to get something in print with our name on it, and our opponent is not allowed to, it's not fair," Henry said.

Frese's other complaint regarded an anti-beef editorial in which the Collegian masthead with Black Student Union elects new officers

Finally, an election is finalized.

A small crowd gathered last night in the K-State Union Little Theater to elect new officers for the Black Student Union. These officers will serve for 1993-94 school year.

John Kitchings, former BSU president, opened the elections by announcing to the audience that he was found guilty on two charges of unlawfully arranging sales or purchases of controlled substances using a communication facility.

► FORMER BSU PRESIDENT CONVICTED

Former Black Student Union President John Kitchings was convicted Tuesday on two counts of unlawfully arranging sales or purchases of controlled substances using a communication facility.

The charges are Class D felonies. Bill Kennedy, Riley County District Attorney, said Kitchings faces a minimum jail sentence of two to three years and a maximum of five to 10.

Sentencing is scheduled for June 21. The conviction stems from two incidents occurring on February 24, 1992, when Kitchings used a telephone to arrange drug transactions.

Kitchings served as BSU president from April of 1992 until Tuesday night, when new elections took place.

Those elections were not related to either the charges brought against Kitchings or his conviction.

Kitchings said late Tuesday night that he remains free on bond.

He also said he plans to appeal his conviction.

ON THE AGENDA

Preparation, planning all part of graduationNICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Donning a cap and gown and strutting down the aisle to receive a degree is only a small part of the commencement process.

Nearly 2,155 students will graduate May 14 and 15, but before they do, a majority of the graduates will have several details to iron out.

Like many prospective graduates, Anne Lewis-Smith, senior in accounting, is planning a celebration with her family after she receives her diploma.

"When I say family, that includes 30 people," she said.

Lewis-Smith has 10 brothers and sisters, and all but one are attending the commencement.

Organizing a dinner to celebrate graduation is old hat to Lewis-Smith.

"It wasn't completely new," she said, because she planned a similar reception for her husband who graduated last May.

Lewis-Smith is planning on a huge family-style dinner, and, in conjunction with her graduation, her daughter will celebrate her commencement from kindergarten.

Several colleges, departments and the KSU Alumni Association offer receptions and banquets for the students as well.

Aside from eating, drinking and being merry, prospective graduates need to be dressed properly for the big day.

Both the K-State Union Bookstore and Varney's Bookstore sell caps, gowns and tassels for undergraduates. The Union bookstore also rents gowns to masters and doctoral candidates, Nancy Bartell, Union bookstore clothing and gift buyer, said.

Caps, gowns and tassels run between $17 and $19.

It is best to order the gowns in advance to ensure the graduate can get the correct size, but some people wait until the day they graduate, she said.

The Union bookstore tries to encourage students to purchase their graduation paraphernalia early by sponsoring a graduation fair in March.

"The percentage of our last-minute people has gone down dramatically," Bartell said.

Announcements are another factor to consider in the graduation planning stage.

It is good etiquette to send announcements three to four weeks before a student graduates, Bartell said.

"The sooner the better with announcements," she said.

The Union Bookstore and Varney's offer both personalized and general announcements that cost from $8 to $35 a pack.

Aside from gowns and announcements, there are several other items marketed specifically for graduates.

Class rings can be purchased at the Union Bookstore and Varney's.

"The Bookstore also sells diploma plaques, souvenir tassels and thank-you cards that match the announcements," Bartell said.

McClaskey works well with Senate, colleagues say knows how to go out there and gather information. She knows how to go out there and build relationships."

McClaskey has a good working relationship with Student Senate, Anderson said.

"Working with Student Senate is a frustrating experience," he said. "Jackie knows, and unfortunately not very many student senators or students in general realize, the amount of power Student Senate has."

John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, cited the adage: "Power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

"In Jackie's case, I think power has resulted in personal growth," Fairman said. "This is not the same young woman leaving the office who came in 18 months earlier."

Franklin said he has teased McClaskey about the fact she often receives information before he does.

"I don't get irritated, but it shows you how significant people, especially administrators, place that person, that they would share in confidence or otherwise information before they would share it with the rest of their staff."

"To be an adviser, there were probably times when she could have advised me," Franklin said. "In fact, I've teased people when we've gone around the room and said I work for Jackie."

Anderson said many former presidents did not realize the responsibilities of office until they were elected.

"She's one of those that really rose to the occasion, and she really took student government leadership and presidential leadership to another level, almost to a level that is unrealistic," Anderson said.

Balancing presidential duties with course work is difficult, Anderson said.

"Jackie is driven by wanting to do her job and do it well," Anderson said. "I think you always try to do more than you can possibly accomplish. Jackie has grown tremendously as a student body president, and most of the good ones do."

McClaskey has said one of the biggest challenges for a student body president is to stay in touch with the students he or she was elected to represent.

"I see her around town. I see her on campus — when she has time to go to class. I see her in all respects. I see Jackie McClaskey dressed and rushing to a (Kansas) Board of Regents meeting," Anderson said.

"I see Jackie McClaskey in Levi's talking with students in the Union or just being a student like everybody else. I see Jackie McClaskey socializing. On weekends I might see her out at one of the local watering holes," he said.

Anderson said McClaskey has never lost sight of the fact she is a student.

"I've never heard her talk about herself as student body president," Anderson said. "She's one of the most approachable people I have ever known."

However, all the prestige and privilege that comes with being student body president will inevitably be missed.

Having served as K-State's student body president in 1975, Franklin said he knows how it feels to fade back into the crowd.

"It's a very lonesome feeling," Franklin said. "It's a very lonely walk to have to walk from being BWOC (big woman on campus) to being LWOC (little woman on campus), having nobody call you, you going into the SGA office, and there are no messages."

"It's a real struggle with your ego," Franklin said. "It's a real struggle with your security because for the past 12 months, or in Jackie's case the past 18 months, your life has been SGA."

"That's been your identity, that's been who you are, and suddenly that's taken away," Franklin said. "I don't think people understand what that feels like."

FACULTY

Faculty, personnel discuss K-State unionization

"We are only heard if we are organized."

BERKELEY MILLER, DIRECTOR OF LABOR STUDIES PROGRAM

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Concerns over the future of higher education prompted an open forum for faculty and unclassified personnel Tuesday.

The discussion in Forum Hall concerned whether or not a collective bargaining system for faculty should be established at K-State.

Brad Fenwick, associate professor of pathology and microbiology and president of Faculty Senate, began the discussion by listing the monetary problems facing higher education in Kansas.

Fenwick said although salaries have increased in the last 10 years, faculty have less earning power than they did in 1969.

"Faculty now make 93.7 percent of what they did in 1969. That reduces earning power by $600," Fenwick said.

Representatives of two professional organizations talked about the services they offer and the benefits of collective bargaining.

Jack Nightingale of the American Association of University Professors said collective bargaining is not the answer for every university.

"For some institutions it is beneficial," Nightingale said.

"For others it is not practical."

He said collective bargaining can be beneficial because it allows the faculty to negotiate their own contracts.

"It is our strong belief that the people that are living the agreement are the ones who should negotiate the agreement," Nightingale said.

Kris Anderson, member of the United Faculty of Florida, represented the National Education Association. Anderson said for collective bargaining to work, a strong commitment is needed from the faculty.

"You need local action," Anderson said.

"You need strong local chapters to do the work, to be on the bargaining team. They need to get really involved."

Some members of the audience had been part of collective bargaining at other schools. They shared their views on why collective bargaining and professional organizations are important.

Berkeley Miller, director of the Labor Studies Program in the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research, was involved with the United Faculty of Florida before coming to K-State.

Miller used the University of Florida as an example. He said before unionization, the salary increases there did not keep up with inflation. By the time he left, they had unionized and were able to keep up.

"We are only heard if we are organized," Miller said.

Miller also said the stereotype that collective bargaining is adversarial to administration was not true in Florida.

"The U.F.F. banged heads with the (Kansas) Board of Regents during negotiations," Miller said.

"When an agreement was reached, we held hands to be advocates of funding for education."

Gary Mattson, associate professor in the college of architecture, gave another reason why getting involved with a professional organization could be beneficial.

When Mattson had a dispute over his insurance coverage, he said the union helped him receive the benefits he deserved.

He said he views unions as a way to help protect these individual rights.

"Little nit-picky things that we see as important to the individual, the Board of Regents sees as just a number," Mattson said.

Fenwick said the purpose of the open forum was to give Faculty Senate guidance to determine whether they should pursue collective bargaining.

More information can be obtained from the Faculty Senate office located in 3 Leasure Hall, Fenwick said.

Pouring the oil over our eyes

THE ISSUE

After four years, Prince William Sound has yet to recover from the Exxon Valdez oil spill.

WE SUGGEST

The nation should take notice of Exxon's continued efforts to skirt the issue.

With the seemingly endless doubletalk and denying our government engages in, it is a shock to see a federal agency actually speak out against one of America's larger oil companies.

On Tuesday, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration contested the Exxon Corp.'s report that Alaska's Prince William Sound has recovered from the Exxon Valdez oil spill.

Four years and $900 million after the spill, Exxon has been accused of emphasizing on some facts that back their claims, while ignoring other data that isn't as supportive of them.

Robert Spies, chief scientist with the government group investigating the spill, said some of the biological systems may be back to near normal, but recovery for most resources is going to take 10 years or more.

It is possible Exxon is trying to protect its still-exposed buttocks because of pending lawsuits that depend on long-term damage assessments.

Exxon claims that some wildlife numbers have returned to pre-spill numbers in 1991, and also the area had record salmon and herring harvests in 1991.

They also said most of the oil found in wildlife in 1990 and 1991 wasn't from the spill, but from natural oil seeps upstream or diesel fuel from boats.

Exxon wants us to believe that 11 million gallons of oil can be quickly and permanently washed out of an environment when most people can't wash an oil stain out of their favorite shirt.

Tell that to anyone who's ever done laundry.

OTHER VIEWS

The Orange County (Calif.) Register on the Rodney King case (April 19):

Yes, probably, a measure of justice was meted out. The Simi Valley jurors ... were under such pressure to return a politically correct verdict that just about the only way they could demonstrate their ownership of the verdict was to contrive one wildly at odds with the worldwide expectation. ... The original trial was televised, all of it, and any of the accused' peers, watching at home and also listening to the judge's instructions, concluded that excessive force was sure enough used.

The second jury, summoned by a politically worried President Bush (who apparently bought into the fashionable extra-constitutional arguments that the double-jeopardy prohibition no longer applies) agreed that two of the cops violated Rodney King's civil rights. ...

It is well to hope that the verdict represents a turning point in the long history of police brutality, and that racism might finally be expunged from the minds of zealous law officers. But it is ominously inappropriate to invest ... sums of political rectitude in the outcome of a trial as they have done. Indeed, minutes after the verdict was read a prayer of gratitude went up at the First AME Church (in South Central Los Angeles) wherein someone noted that the Lord "sometimes" does "the right thing." Such language amounts to spiritual surrealism, in which a capricious God, not a continuous source of righteousness, acts as a Supreme Politician.

Such exultations of the moment may be excused, but President Clinton's more deliberate words in Pittsburgh, in which he praised the verdict, lent his support unforgivably to the politicization of the courts.

The rules dictated this special election

Editor,

It seems this election business is starting to turn slightly sour. In response to some letters to the editor concerning vet-med's involvement in the election re-run, I would like to clarify a few things.

Probably most important in this is that the actions taken by vet-med senators do not reflect any candidate bias on the part of the senators and most certainly not on the part of veterinary students.

The issue is not whether vet students deserve a "personal" polling place, but that if one is set up, it should be open at the announced time and for the duration set forth by election protocol.

I might add, however, that a large proportion of vet students are indeed in class from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., with only one hour for lunch. Take into account that it takes 15-20 minutes to walk one-way from the vet school to the K-State Union — add to that the time it takes to vote — and one can easily see the extreme difficulty veterinary students face in voting during polling hours at the Union.

While I do not think the SGA presidential race is important enough to merit a re-run, I do support equality and especially the adherence to the established rules.

If the general student body feels veterinary students are receiving undue privileges with a separate polling place, that is perfectly acceptable. But if a satellite polling place exists, it should be run with the same attention to detail as afforded the one at the Union.

John Mussman
1st year/Veterinary medicine

Here's a really good one for Fred ...

Editor,

The Elections committee and Student Tribunal should both be congratulated. The election for Student Body President held last Wednesday was not valid due to the veterinary-medicine students not being able to vote at reported times. With such a close election, the vet-med students deserve to have their votes count, and they were the ones who requested the new election.

The winner of the first election won by only 13 votes. The importance of each individual vote was as great, as students from both sides supported their candidates. Now the students get another chance to show their preference for student body president.

We are personally thankful for this opportunity and hope you will join us in supporting Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson. Their combined leadership qualities, along with a team concept, would be the best thing possible for K-Staters, now and in the future.

Damon Earnshaw
Junior/Management and 11 others

... and here's a really good one for Ed

Editor,

After reading the letter "Candidates respond to Collegian story," by Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson, I was nothing less than flabbergasted. If Wingert didn't want his "poor loser" statements published, he shouldn't have said anything close to degrading.

I feel Wingert spent too much campaign time expressing his feelings about his opponents, rather than focusing more on his own issues.

I may not be an expert on campus issues and politics, but I feel Ed Skoog has shown a much greater truth of character throughout this entire election. Even though this may not be printed, I finally wanted someone who is pro-Skoog to be heard on the opinion page.

Here's a new one — somebody likes us

Editor,

Even though you undoubtedly receive many letters daily, I would like to take some of your time to comment upon the last several weeks of the Student Governing Association elections coverage in the Collegian.

I would like to extend a sincere thanks to you and the staff of the Collegian regarding what I feel has been outstanding work.

I have never had much interest in any elections, especially non-political elections such as school-related positions. This year, however, has been different.

I have had more interest and knowledge about the recent elections for SGA than probably any other election I have been able to vote in. The articles that were presented during the last few weeks in the Collegian did a great deal in the way of keeping me informed about the normal updates that take place in election times.

My questions were answered, and my interests were cultivated through the mix of stories appearing in the Collegian. For your outstanding coverage of the elections, I commend all of those who worked hard to make the last several weeks of the Collegian as thorough as they were. You have a new regular reader. Thanks.

TRIBUTE

Chavez's memory needs to be honored

Editor,

I wish I could spit on Abraham Lincoln, George Washington, Malcom X, Martin Luther King, Perot, Bush and President Clinton.

I felt like the Collegian spit on a great Hispanic-American leader, Cesar Chavez. He deserves a little more than to be put alongside a meat article, and no bigger than a classified or a cartoon.

Why? I don't understand why this great Hispanic-American leader, who led a national boycott to protest the use of deadly pesticides, would be so belittled.

I was led to believe K-State was a diverse University — a place that values learning, cultures and outstanding leadership. I guess I have been told wrong. Did I take the wrong turn on the highway?

Cesar Chavez spoke for those who did not have a voice, not only for the farm workers, but for the consumer, and most of all, for the families who worked in the fields. Yes, children who also worked in the fields.

Here is my point: I have been forced to study America's history through grade school, high school and community college. That is a total of 15 years of my life. Now, all I'm asking of you for one day — one hour of your precious time — is to learn about a great Hispanic-American leader who affected this nation, Cesar Chavez.

There's exhaustion, and then there's exhaustion.

Physical, mental and emotional. At one point or another, one thing is going to wear us down. When all three forms congregate on our bodies, watch out.

Sometimes I find myself overwhelmed by the smallest, most minute and insignificant happenings.

Watching a child play with one of those toys where they have to put a plastic shape in its appropriate slot. Triangle through the triangle slot. The square in the square. Circle in the circle.

Their eyes get big. Their hands clasp the piece of plastic not really knowing what it is, only where it goes. They smile as the object falls through its appropriate slot.

That child is how I felt this weekend when I went to the Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Civil Rights March on Washington. I knew where I was going, but not really knowing what it meant.

Marches and rallies were things on television or in books. People walk to show support. Speak to get their message across. Watch to see what it is all about.

It seemed major demonstrations were always in protest to something else. Vietnam. Abortion. Women's rights. The march last weekend was a celebration more than a protest.

Driving through West Virginia something strange began to happen. There were, cruising to our destination. Sleep deprivation setting in. Boredom taking hold.

Then a car passed us. Not that passing a 1978 Honda with a loose muffler in the mountains is a task, but as they passed they honked and waved. From their rear window was a pink triangle with D.C. '93 written on it. Ohio. Indiana. Montana. Washington. They were all going to the same place for the same reason.

IT IS WHO I AM

KELLY KLAWONN

As we got closer to D.C. these waves and honks became more and more frequent. Total strangers showing one another signs of solidarity. Community.

On Saturday night, we went down to Dupont Circle, a normally predominantly gay area. But for this weekend it was besieged by queers. Besieged by pride. Besieged by dignity.

People were holding hands. People were dancing in the streets. People were sitting having quiet dinners. People were being themselves.

It seemed like everywhere we went, people knew who we were and why we were there. We all seemed to share the need to be seen. We all wanted to be seen.

Not to be seen like a freak in a sideshow at a circus, but to be seen as a proud, honest and caring human being. For too long, the gay community has existed within its own boundaries — confined by the hate and ignorance of others.

Being gay never seemed weird to me because it is who I am. Many people have told me to get off my soapbox — to stop shoving my sexuality in their face.

It is hard not to "shove" my sexuality in somebody's face because it is a part of me. It is a small but important characteristic. One that isn't always understood or accepted but one that is important and valid.

For these reasons, I marched as did thousands of others. For these reasons, I write. By knowing our differences we can see our similarities.

Maybe someday it won't be so amazing to see couples of the same gender holding hands and not getting strange looks.

A time when what determines the sanctity of a relationship is love and friendship, not gender. A time when cars will always honk and wave as they pass you on an interstate.

ROTC accused of discrimination

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EMPORIA — The student government at Emporia State University will consider a resolution against what some said is discrimination against homosexual students by the ROTC program on campus.

Student leaders said some believe the program violates a university policy against discrimination on the basis of sexual preference, but an ROTC spokeswoman said the program does not discriminate.

Student senators will consider the resolution May 6. It alleges violation of the school policy, prohibits on-campus ROTC recruiting and offers support for lifting the ban on homosexuals in the military.

The resolution would be sent to President Clinton and Congress, if approved.

"We want to make sure President Clinton knows there are schools in the Midwest that support lifting the ban," said student senator Shane Windmeyer, who authored the resolution.

Windmeyer said students don't want the ROTC program eliminated but want to ensure gay students are not mistreated by it.

Forty-six students are involved in the program. It was not immediately known whether any are gay.

ROTC Sgt. Deborah Neubecker said there is no discrimination against students based on sexual preference. She said after Clinton announced in February he was moving to lift the ban on gays on the military, it is not an issue now.

Finney confused by authorities

Extradition papers pose problems in Kansas

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Joan Finney was misled by Arkansas authorities when she signed extradition papers for Lisa Dunn, her attorney told the Kansas Court of Appeals.

Benjamin Wood, representing Dunn, told the three-judge panel that extradition papers are fraudulent and misleading, and Finney's office should conduct its own investigation into whether Dunn was involved in the 1985 murder of Linda Marvin near Fort Smith, Ark.

"They're asking her to become a dupe," Wood said. "The Uniformed Criminal Extradition Act gives our governor the power to investigate."

Dunn was convicted in Thomas County District Court in 1985 of two counts of murder for her role in a multi-state crime spree that started in Florida.

However, a federal judge ordered a new trial, and a Shawnee County District Court jury last fall found her innocent of all charges. In her second trial, attorneys used the battered-woman syndrome as a defense, contending she was compelled to participate in the crimes by her abusive boyfriend, Daniel Remeta.

Remeta is now on death row in Florida. He also was sentenced to die in Arkansas for Marvin's murder. She was a clerk at a convenience store at the time of her death.

Dunn has been held in Shawnee County jail awaiting extradition to Arkansas since she was acquitted in Kansas.

"They're asking our governor to return her for execution," Wood said. "The goal is execution." He wants the court to remand the extradition back to Finney.

He also contended that Dunn is not a fugitive because Remeta forced her to leave Arkansas, and she did not do so voluntarily.

Special Assistant Attorney

General Carla Stovall said Wood raised issues that were not appropriate in an extradition case.

She said Dunn fits every legal definition of fugitive, and the points Wood made should be raised in an Arkansas courtroom.

"She'll have every opportunity to raise the battered-woman defense," Stovall said.

Stovall said the extradition papers included the entire Fort Smith police investigative files. Finney had every opportunity to look through those files when she signed the extradition papers, she added.

"There's nothing to remand for," she told the judges.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Both Cat golf squads take 7th in conference

K-State men finish lower than predicted

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcats were predicted to finish fifth in the men's Big Eight golf tournament that took place Monday and Tuesday at the Prairie Dunes Country Club in Hutchinson.

K-State coach Mark Elliott said he thought his team would finish third or fourth.

Neither prediction was correct.

The Wildcats had their worst round of the tourney Tuesday afternoon, shooting a 317 and staying in seventh place of the 1993 Big Eight tournament.

"Maybe we didn't come in with the right frame of mind," Elliott said. "I hate to think it, but maybe we thought people would roll over and die for us."

"We just didn't play really well. We struggled again."

Each team had to fight 30-mph gusty winds, and only last-place Missouri didn't have its worst round Tuesday.

But the wind isn't what lost it for the Wildcats, said Richard Laing, a senior who paced K-State with a three-round total of 226.

"Everyone has to play with the wind, and that's the way you have to look at it," he said. "Sure the wind was bad all afternoon, but everyone had to face it."

Laing finished the tournament in a flurry, firing a tourney-best 34 on the back nine of the final round. He finished in 12th place.

But it wasn't enough. Not a single one of Laing's teammates finished higher than 28th place — Jim Brennaman with a 238 — out of the 40 golfers.

Chad Judd's 239 was good for 29th, Brett Waldman came in 32nd with a 241, and Will Siebert had a 245, good for 36th. Oklahoma State won the tournament with a three-round total of 888, and Kansas was just one stroke back.

"This was just one two-day tournament," Elliott said. "We're still going to the NCAA tournament for the first time in the school's history, and we're a better team than we showed in the Big Eight."

Laing said he entered the tournament with his sights set on first. He finished 12 strokes out of the top spot but just one stroke shy of making the all-tournament team.

"I was pretty much out of it by the end of the first day," Laing said. "I didn't have my game with me."

"But what's really disappointing for me is the team taking seventh. Ever since I've been here, I've wanted the team to excel."

"But it's still a building program," he said. "And it's not going to happen overnight."

Richard Laing, K-State golfer, takes a shot in the third round of the Big Eight tournament Tuesday afternoon at the Prairie Dunes Country Club in Hutchinson. Laing led all Wildcats with a three-round score of 226, good for 12th overall. K-State finished the tournament in seventh place, ahead of only Missouri.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Women return to Big 8 cellar

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Last season, the K-State women's golf team broke a 13-year stretch of last-place finishes in the Big Eight.

Tuesday afternoon, the Wildcats returned to the conference cellar, shooting a third-round score of 329 and finishing six strokes behind both Kansas and Missouri. Colorado does not have a women's golf team.

"That's definitely where we wanted to be," K-State's interim Assistant golf Coach Jack Key said. "Getting out of last place last year and falling right back in is something we definitely didn't want to do."

"It was disappointing from the standpoint that we played about as bad as we possibly could have."

A light rain and gusty winds catered to high individual scores in the last round at the Firethorn Golf Club in Lincoln, Neb.

Only Valerie Hahn finished higher than 27th place, shooting a final-round score of 76 and placing 12th overall. She was 13 strokes behind Shelley Finnestad of Iowa State.

"It's just a situation where we have a fairly young team," Key said. "We had some decent tournaments this season, but the Big Eight league is something else. This is a very competitive league."

Iowa State won the tournament for the first time in its history with a two-day total of 945, 11 strokes ahead of second-place Oklahoma State. The Wildcats shot a three-round total of 1,023 despite shooting a tourney-best 329 Tuesday.

"If we would have played the first two rounds the way we played today, we would have been right there in the thick of things," Key said. "The first and second rounds is really what got us out of it."

Hahn led the team Tuesday with her 76, the best third-round score in the tourney. That was the only round of 80 or less for K-State in any of the three rounds.

Dallas Cox shot a two-day total of 260 and finished in 27th. Jacque Wright placed 29th with a 261; Denise Pottle was 30th with a 264, and Debbie Chrystal's 270 was good for 32nd.

"I don't think there's any doubt that, in their minds, they're not a last-place team," Key said. "They were definitely disappointed, and they definitely wanted to get out of last place."

"They wanted to do well, and I think they put a lot of pressure on themselves. Probably too much."

"But they don't want to be in last," Key said. "I think that's to their credit."

Hahn is the only graduating senior on the team, and Key said that he thinks the women are primed for future success.

"We've got the nucleus of a good team," he said. "We really need someone to step up like Val has, but we're headed in the right direction."

No. 16 Jayhawks score 5 runs in 8th to top Cats

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

K-State starter Dan Driskill was working on a three-hit gem when he entered the bottom of the eighth inning with a 2-1 lead over the No. 16 Kansas Jayhawks last night at Hognlund-Maupin Stadium.

Driskill was able to get two outs before shortstop Todd Petering booted a Dan Rude ground ball, leading to five unearned runs and allowing the Hawks come from behind and beat the Wildcats, 6-3.

"We've given up a ton of two-out hits, regardless of how they get on," K-State coach Mike Clark said. "You have to give (Kansas) a lot of credit. They had a lot of great at-bats when they needed them."

One such at-bat came from Kent Mahon, who broke a one-for-19 spell with a game-tying triple in the eighth.

Mahon lined a Driskill pitch into right, scoring Rude and giving way to four consecutive hits by the Hawks.

John Wuycheck and Jeff Niemeier each followed with doubles, and Josh Igou and Rory Tarquinio added singles.

All told, Kansas had scored five times after two were out.

"Tonight's performance was a real credit to our kids," Kansas coach Dave Bingham said. "They fought hard. Dan Driskill is one of the great pitchers in the Big Eight conference."

The win improved Kansas to 33-10 and 14-6 in the conference — a new single-season high for conference wins by the Hawks.

Driskill fell to 3-6, while Kansas starter Chris Corn gave up six hits and struck out seven to go to 8-2.

K-State (13-26, 4-12) had a 1-0 lead in the third when Petering led off with a walk. He stole second, moved to third on Tim Decker's grounder and scored on Brian's Culp ground out.

Decker increased the Cats' lead in the fifth with a solo home run off the top of the wall in left-center field. Petering finished off the Cats' scoring with a solo shot with two outs in the ninth.

'McRae didn't intend to hit me with any object'

Editor's Note: This column was written by Alan Eskew, a sports writer for the Topeka Capital-Journal who was struck in the face Monday night by an object thrown by Kansas City manager Hal McRae. McRae exploded into a violent tirade of four-letter words after a 5-3 loss to the Detroit Tigers.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — I feel a little bit uncomfortable writing this column. My job is to report the news, not make it. I don't seek notoriety.

But suddenly and inadvertently, I'm in the news. A UFO, believed to be a tape recorder, was thrown across a room by enraged Kansas City Royals manager Hal McRae and struck me in the face after a 5-3 loss to the Detroit Tigers Monday.

My name made the national wires, and my phone started ringing early Tuesday. A Kansas City radio station wanted to interview me concerning "the assault." A Chicago radio station called, saying it was "a funny incident" and asked if I would go on their noonday show. I replied that it "wasn't that funny." A Toronto radio station also called.

KMBC-TV in Kansas City wanted to come out and interview me for the 6 o'clock news. I declined all requests.

The Associated Press and The Kansas City Star asked whether I was suing McRae and/or the Royals. I have no such plans.

Back to the incident that precipitated me looking like I went 10 rounds with Kansas City heavyweight boxer Tommy Morrison:

There's a 1-1/2-inch cut on my right cheek about an inch from my eye. My vision was blurry for a few hours. My face is still puffy, and I took two aspirin for a headache before writing this column. I visited the doctor Tuesday afternoon and received a tetanus shot. He said the cut would leave a scar.

McRae didn't intend to hit me with any object. We get along fine.

He was incensed at what he considered to be "a stupid question" from John Doolittle, a sports talk-show host for Kansas City radio station KMBZ.

First, Doolittle questioned whether McRae should have had Brian McRae, Hal's son and the Royals' center fielder, bunting in the ninth inning with two runners on base and nobody out. Brian lined into a double play.

Royals respond to tirade with extra-inning 4-3 victory

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals could not help but hear Manager Hal McRae's wake up call.

Chico Lind's single through a drawn-in infield in the 10th inning Tuesday completed a four-run rally in the late innings and gave the Royals a 4-3 victory over Detroit, ending the Tigers' six-game winning streak.

The victory came one day after McRae's violent outburst with reporters.

"For us to come out and win after that was really important," said starter David Cone. "Hal McRae sent a message to his team. You can't make mistakes out there. Tonight we executed very well, had good defense, got the sacrifice bunt down when we needed to."

Cone, who signed a three-year, $18-million contract this winter, is still without a win in five starts. He went eight innings, giving up three runs on nine hits while striking out seven and walking three.

"It makes me think like things are turning around," Cone said. "It's amazing how this team scores runs. The Cardiac Cards are back. Tonight, for the first time, I feel like my efforts contributed to a win."

Mark Leiter, starting in place of the injured Bill Krueger, shut out Kansas City on three singles through the first six innings. But Bob McDonald, Mike Henneman and John Kiely could not hold a 3-0 lead. It was Leiter's first start since July 23.

"I wasn't thinking fifth inning or fourth inning or sixth inning. I just wanted to take each hitter and pitch like it was the last one they were going to let me face," Leiter said.

"No one feels worse in here than Mike Henneman. That's the worst feeling you can have — to blow a game. It's dismal."

In the 10th, Wally Joyner drew a leadoff walk from Kiely (0-2);

Kevin McReynolds followed with a single, and Mike Macfarlane sacrificed the runners to second and third. Lind singled up the middle on a full count.

Rusty Meacham (1-1) gave up one hit in two innings in relief of Cone.

The Royals scored in the ninth on a leadoff single by Macfarlane, a sacrifice by Lind and a throwing error by Henneman on a grounder by Keith Miller.

Kansas City closed to 3-2 in the eighth on RBI singles by Joyner and Hubie Brooks off Henneman.

The Royals have scored only 10 runs in five starts by Cone, while Leiter had given up 10 runs on 12 hits and five walks in nine innings as a reliever this season.

Students receive honor as interns

Three engineering students go to Washington, D.C., with WISE program

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Three K-State engineering students were selected to participate in the Washington Internships for Students of Engineering program this summer.

Brian Grell, junior in nuclear engineering, Michelle Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering, and Sarah Vida, senior in mechanical engineering, were selected from a nationwide competition that took only 13 students this year.

The WISE program is prestigious, Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of engineering, said.

"This program only selects the top engineering students," he said. And he said K-State has the best record for students participating in the program.

"We are dominating the competition. K-State has had more WISE interns than any other university," he said.

He gave credit to the College of Engineering as well as the students.

"The college is well organized and works well with the students," he said.

Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering, said the students are the biggest factor.

"The bottom line is that we get good students," he said.

The WISE interns will spend 10 weeks in Washington, D.C., learning how engineers contribute to public-policy decisions on complex technological matters, Rathbone said.

Grell said he plans to get more out of the experience.

"I think it will be hard work. But, I will also get to play hard as well," he said.

Grell said the internship will give him a chance to go beyond classroom matters and to be able to look at engineering from a different angle.

Munson said she looked forward to the opportunity as well.

"It will be neat to be involved in generating public policy and also getting time to meet those dealing with public policy," Munson said.

Writer not upset at KC manager

Next, Doolittle wondered why the manager did not pinch hit George Brett for Keith Miller in the seventh inning with the bases loaded and two out. Miller's pop-up ended the inning.

The questions were not out of line, but McRae probably felt Doolittle was second-guessing him.

I've had managers, coaches and players scream and yell obscenities in my face over the years, but never have I witnessed such anger over a question or questions.

I'm sure McRae is feeling the heat of the Royals' second-straight dismal start, which is putting his job in jeopardy. But that's no excuse for his behavior. Nor should the Royals condone it.

His response was totally out of line. He could have shoed away the media verbally without throwing glass and plastic objects, food, a desk telephone and busting the television set in his office.

Blowing up like that doesn't help his image or the Royals' image. He personally apologized to me. I accepted and told him he owed me a crab dinner in Baltimore. I consider it a closed case.

I did miss the first edition deadline Monday by 18 minutes. Trainer Nick Swartz treated me after the game, stopping the bleeding and applying a bandage before I could write.

David Cone, who pitched six years for the Mets, took one look at me and said, "I thought the New York media was tough."

A fellow media member said, "Women love battle scars. You shouldn't have any trouble finding a beautiful lady to ice your face down for a couple of hours."

Third base coach Steve Boros asked if I was going on the disabled list. I said no way.

"That's the attitude — rub some dirt on it and go right back out there," Boros said.

I do plan to duck next time, but I hope there is no next time.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The number of Kansans speaking a language other than English at home grew by nearly 28 percent during the last decade, a rate which was below the national average, the government reported Tuesday.

The Census Bureau said 131,604 Kansans were non-English speakers at home in 1990. That accounted for 5.7 percent of the state's residents age 5 and older.

Of that segment of the population, however, only 15 percent said they speak English poorly or not at all.

Nationally, the number of non-English speakers increased 38.1 percent during the 1980s and represented almost 14 percent of the country's 5-and-older population at the start of this decade.

In Kansas, Spanish was the most common language for those people who do not speak English at home. It accounted for nearly one of every two non-English speakers in the state. Overall, Spanish-speaking residents represent 2.7 percent of Kansas' 5-and-older population.

Of those who speak Spanish in their homes, 18 percent speak English poorly or not at all.

The language figures in part reflect Kansas' racial and ethnic population trends during the 1980s. The number of Kansans who reported themselves of Hispanic origin increased by nearly 50 percent during the last decade. Asian-Americans were the fastest-growing racial group in Kansas' population during the 1980s.

German was the second most common language for non-English speakers in Kansas. It accounted for 17 percent of those who do not speak English at home. Overall, German-speakers represented 1 percent of the state's residents age 5 and older.

Of those who speak German in their homes, about 9 percent speak English poorly or not at all.

French and Vietnamese were the next most common languages for non-English speakers in Kansas.

French accounted for almost 6 percent of those who do not speak English at home, and Vietnamese 4.3 percent. Overall, each of those languages accounted for less than one-half of 1 percent of the state's population age 5 and older.

A march worker distributes signs for marchers near the Washington Monument before the beginning of the march.

A group of march observers yell and wave at passersby from their second-floor window in a downtown hotel.

THE MARCH

The Rev. Fred Phelps, Topeka, attended the march with some of his followers. Phelps, who was maced during the march, and his counter-demonstrators were set up along Pennsylvania Ave.

Photographs by David Mayes

Story by Kelly Klawonn

It is roughly 1,200 miles and a 21 hour drive from Manhattan to Washington, D.C. Knowing how lazy some college students can be, it would take quite an event to get them to hop in a car and cross half the country.

Last weekend, some K-Staters were motivated to such a degree and traveled to Washington, D.C., to participate in the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual March on Washington for Civil Rights.

While the march was a demonstration designed to increase visibility of gays and lesbians, its participants crossed the spectrum of sexual definitions.

Marci Corey, junior in theater, went to the march because as a heterosexual, she wanted to accentuate the commonalities of people, not the differences.

"I felt like people think of gays and lesbians as some sort of freaks," Corey said, "I just want to show people that the only difference is who they are attracted to."

"People need to understand that gay rights are not special rights, but they are human rights."

For others, the march was an opportunity to freely show who they were without the fear and hate that experience in everyday society.

"The march was a time when people could show their affections in public without fear," Matthew Cunningham, K-State graduate, said.

"It was nice to be able to hold somebody's hand and not get looked at as odd or abnormal."

Marching with the Kansas contingency was important because it helped to dispel the stereotype that gays and lesbians are predominantly from larger metropolitan areas.

"At one point I wanted to get out and walk around," Jason Lancaster, Manhattan resident, said. "I stayed with the Kansas group because I think it is important for people to see that not all queers are from California or New York."

For many participants, the march meant a new-found freedom and pride in their sexual identity. A freedom that is not always easy to express in Manhattan.

"People were there to be proud of who they were," Cunningham said. "It was a really big boost. It was a march for pride more than a march for rights."

"A lot needs to be done on the political level, but the first step is to be proud of who you are."

A group of march observers yell and wave at passersby from their second-floor window in a downtown hotel.

A couple relaxes on the mall after the march. Speakers and entertainers performed from a stage near the Capitol.

Project aims to educate students

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

A group of nine faculty members has worked for two years in trying to design better curriculum guides. Bill Pallett, senior of planning and evaluation services, and David Byrne, professor of curriculum, instruction and education policy, are part of the nine-member committee working on the General Education Project.

The project's main focus is to help improve education at K-State. A three-question survey was conducted by the group to find out what students think about their education.

"What we are doing is trying to design a program to enhance the students' learning possibilities," Pallett said. "We picked a random sample of seniors to participate in the survey. We wanted approximately 11 students from each college."

Pallett said they had 100 volunteer students. The students were interviewed April 5-12.

"The first question asked to identify some experiences that have been valuable to you at K-State," Byrne said.

The second question asked students to describe how they spent their leisure time, and the third dealt with current concerns, he said.

"These are issues that students need to talk about," Byrne said.

Pallett said students should be encouraged to make connections on different perspectives in their education.

"We encourage active learning," Pallett said. "Graduating students that we spoke to wish they would have had more problem-solving experiences in the classroom."

The project is also open to information and ideas from other universities.

"We have reviewed curriculum guides from other universities," Byrne said.

They also have read national literature regarding education.

"You must remember that each school varies, and K-State is unique enough that it needs a curriculum guide crafted for its own needs," Pallett said.

Byrne said the committee will not propose anything to Faculty Senate until it is completely satisfied with all the answers to the questions.

"What we propose will not increase student hours or elongate the time it takes to get a degree," Byrne said. "We are also prohibited in violating any intact curriculum guides or professional standards that the Dean's Council recommends."

Byrne said he wants to ensure the students know this is not something they can demand of the University.

"Faculty Senate has established procedures that all proposals must go through. It can get frustrating, but it is a necessarily cautious procedure," Pallett said.

The new guides would only affect incoming students.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

'Bay of happiness' is impossible if mistrust dams the waters

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem. It's not big, and it's not little. It's just medium.

I have a boyfriend, and we have been going out for a while now. I just don't trust him. I spend the night in his room every night. Sometimes when I go to his room to shack, he isn't there. I'm afraid he cheats on me or lies to me all the time.

I'll be having fun with him at night and all of a sudden he'll call me a mean name, and we'll start to fight. We fight constantly, but I still stay the night with him every night. I want him to baby me and love me and devote all his time to me, but we always fight, and I always come back.

I feel like I have no "Bay of Happiness" because we never get along. Is this normal — that I always come back? I even let him use my car all the time. I buy him things constantly, but he just uses me.

Please help to use you.

If you both want this relationship to work, I suggest you sit down and work things out as adults — without name calling, bickering and fighting. Agree not to blame or to point fingers, simply state how you both feel. If this doesn't work and you both still want to work things out, I'd suggest joint counseling.

This might be a good time to ask yourself if you'd be better off with him or without him. Be honest with yourself. This cycle of fighting, making up and then gradual deterioration of trust and honesty does not create an environment in which love can grow.

Good luck. Let me know how things work out.

Skoog's name was attached and highlighted. The editorial had allegedly been circulating in Weber Hall. Frese also alleged it was discussed by professors in classes.

"No one from our campaign put those signs up, and if no one from our campaign put up the signs, I assume that someone from Fred's campaign did it," Frese said.

The committee voted there was no violation because there was no evidence that Wingert's campaign promoted the flyers.

Frese said two senators informed him about the flyers. He attempted to get one of the people who knew more information about the flyers' distribution, but the person declined to share that information in the meeting.

Wingert said he knew nothing about the flyers, and as far as he knew none of his staff members or supporters were associated with promoting the flyers.

Other students who frequent Weber Hall told the committee the flyer had been circulating since last semester and none of them had received the flyers.

Wingert said as far as he knew, the circulation of the flyer was not related to the campaign.

"We did not promote it at all," Wingert said. "We have promoted a positive campaign from day one."

Danielson said he wanted to address several issues such as a tutoring program and the memorandum, which was drawn up last year in addressing diversity at K-State.

Gant said she is currently president of her sorority, and she was BSU's only student of the month. She said by being student of the month she had demonstrated several leadership skills. Danielson won the election.

Danielson said the first thing he wanted to do as president was to make BSU a strong voice at K-State. He also said he wanted black faculty members and students to discuss the concerns and problems as a group.

Syvette Davis, sophomore in English, Michelle Haskin, freshman in business administration, and Gant were nominated for the office of vice president. Each spoke on what they could do to help BSU.

Davis won over the other two.

Davis, who is the president-elect for Delta Sigma Theta sorority, said she wants to unify the black community and not just K-State.

The following offices were filled: treasurer, Janet Williams, sophomore in human development and family services; secretary, Haskin; publicist Tiffany Berry, freshman in business administration; parliamentarian, Raszell Carpenter, freshmen in agriculture and historian, Gant.
